

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

WIDENER LIBRARY

HX JTRV R

ra 112.388 I comdab,

Harvard College Library

FROM THE LIBRARY OF HERBERT WEIR SMYTH

Class of 1878

Eliot Professor of Greek Literature

GIVEN IN HIS MEMORY
BY HIS FAMILY

1937

Aristotle's
TREATISE ON POETRY, Translated.

VOL. I.

A

ARISTOTLE'S
TREATISE ON POETRY,

TRANSLATED:

WITH

N O T E S

ON THE TRANSLATION, AND ON THE ORIGINAL;

AND

TWO DISSERTATIONS,
ON POETICAL, AND MUSICAL, IMITATION.

BY THOMAS TWINING, M.A.

THE SECOND EDITION,
IN TWO VOLUMES,
BY DANIEL TWINING, M.A.

VOL. I.

London,

Printed by Luke Hansard & Sons, near Lincoln's-Inn Fields:

AND SOLD BY

T. CADELL AND W. DAVIES, IN THE STRAND; PAYNE, PALL-MALL;
WHITE, COCHRANE, AND CO. FLEET-STREET;
LONGMAN, HURST, REES, ORME, AND BROWN, PATERNOSTER-ROW;
DEIGHTON, CAMBRIDGE; and PARKER, OXFORD.

1812.

Ga 112.560.25

(Ga 112.560)

HARVARD UNIVERSITY CLASS LIBRARY
FROM THE LIBRARY OF HERBERT EVERETT
APRIL 15, 1941

ADVERTISEMENT

TO THIS EDITION.

HAD a new Edition of this Translation been called for at an earlier period, and at a time when its Author possessed the opportunities of health and leisure, it is impossible to say what alterations or additions he might have made. That in the progress of preparing it he would have made some is most probable. But his removal to a situation in which his time was more occupied by professional duties, together with the declining state of his health, seems to have prevented him from turning much of his attention towards the accomplishment of this design. It is certain, however, that the publication of another Edition had sometimes been in his contemplation; and that in consequence he had even written down a few short Memoranda;—but it does not appear that a necessity of making many alterations or additions had ever occurred to him.

The only new materials, then, which he has left for this Edition consist in a small collection of such REMARKS as were suggested to him by reading the Notes in Mr. Tyrwhitt's Edition of the Treatise on Poetry,—intended, as appears in his own hand-writing, merely “for his own use, in case he should ever publish a second Edition of his book ;”—and, likewise, a few marginal notes in his own copy of the first Edition. For the possession of these, as well as for assistance and advice in the use of them, I am unwilling to conceal, that I am indebted to my Father.*

ADVERTISEMENT

That these REMARKS are not drawn up with all that care which the Author would have bestowed upon them before he presented them to the publick eye, will be apparent to the Reader on the slightest comparison of them with the old, and more finished Notes. But as nothing which proceeds from a mind habituated to reflection, upon a subject to which it has been particularly directed, can properly be deemed hasty, I have ventured to select some of these REMARKS for publication.

In making the Selection, I have rejected those which he had evidently reserved for future consideration. Those in which he has spoken with a stronger tone of decision,—whether admitting his own errors, or confirming his former opinions, or expressing his concurrence with the observations of Mr. Tyrwhitt,—I have thought it due to himself, to Mr. Tyrwhitt, and to the publick, to make known.

*It is manifest that there are three † passages
of*

* Richard Twining, Esq. of Isleworth ;—brother of the Translator.

† See REMARKS 7. 32. 33.

TO THIS EDITION.

of the former Edition which would have engaged the particular attention of the Translator. But as he has not fully shewn, and perhaps in his own mind had not fully determined upon, the exact manner, and the very words, in which he would have altered either the passages in his Translation, or the Notes which relate to them, I have been compelled, however reluctantly, to retain both the Translation and the original Notes as I found them:—leaving it to every Reader to make his own application of the additional REMARKS.

With respect, indeed, to Note 241. I may be permitted to say, that I retain it with little or no reluctance: because, though it be probable that the words— $\alpha\mu\alpha\ \delta\epsilon\ \phi\eta\sigma\iota\nu$,—received by Mr. Tyrwhitt into his Text, will in future be universally preferred, and in consequence the criticism here combated by the Translator be universally abandoned, yet, the Note will, I think, remain a fair as well as an honourable testimony, that the taste, learning, and unbiassed judgment of the Author, had at least guarded him from assenting to that erroneous interpretation,—sanctioned as it was by very eminent men,—which would have lowered, and in a great degree explained away, one of the most beautiful passages of the Iliad.

THE EDITOR.

Stilton, Octr 1, 1812.

ERRATA:

VOL. I.

- p. 117. last line but one - - for si - - - read is.
 127. margin - - - - - for Historain - read Historian.
 145. note 6, last l. but 4, for philosopher, read philosophy.
 236. line 16 and note ^m, for λογο - - - read λογ -
 280. line 5 - - - - - for γινισθαι - - read γινισθαι.

VOL. II.

- p. 104. line 9 - - - - - for verteux - - read vertueux.
 155. note ^b - - - - - for v. 1638 - - read v. 1368.
 181. - - - - - for Tietzes - - read Tzetzes.
 219. line 9, word παραφυλαττισθαι, word should be in italics.
 307. note ^b, last line - for κασαν - - - read πασαν.

P R E F A C E

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

WHOEVER recollects, that, in writing a preface, he presumes, in some degree or other, to call the attention of the public more particularly to himself, will hardly be disposed to say more than he thinks necessary, and will say even that with some reluctance. To be allowed, however, to explain his own design, in his own defence, is a privilege which every writer may justly claim; and I am too sensible of the imperfection of the following work to deliver it up in silent confidence to the public judgment.

It may be said, I think, universally, of all translation, that it should give the thoughts of the original with all the accuracy possible, and the language as closely as is consistent with the purpose, which every man who writes must necessarily have in view—that of being read, with satisfaction. No work can be read with satisfaction if it is ill written; and every translation is undoubtedly ill written, that does not, as far, at least, least, as language is concerned, read like an original; that, on the contrary, to every reader, at once discovers itself to be translation, by that constrained uncouthness of expression, harshness of phrase, and embarrassment of meaning, which necessarily result from the transfusion of idiom out of one language into another. A work so translated may be said to be translated into broken English. For the effect is much the same, whether we are imperfectly acquainted with the language in which, or adhere too servilely to the language from which, we speak: whether we write English in Greek, or Greek in English. In both cases we write one language in the idiom of another.

But in steering from this rock, the translator, if he takes too wide a compass, will be in danger of running upon another. It is singular, that Pope, in one of his early letters, should have pointed out, by a sensible and true observation, the very defect, and perhaps the only general defect, of his own Homer. In a letter to Mr. Cromwell^a he says, "Let the sense be ever so " exactly rendered, unless an author LOOKS " LIKE HIMSELF, in his HABIT and MANNER,
" 'tis a disguise, and not a translation." Now, let every other merit possible be allowed to Pope's translation, it surely cannot be denied, that that we have there a manner, a look, a habit, very widely different from that of Homer himself.—But poetical translation is attended with peculiar difficulty, and demands peculiar indulgence. The translator of prose into prose has far less excuse, when he departs so widely from the words of his author, as to retain no resemblance to his manner; and least of all, perhaps, would such liberty be excusable in a version of Aristotle, in whose writings, however perplexing on many other accounts, a translator is seldom embarrassed by any of those delicate “blossoms of elocution,” which “drop off so easily” at his touch.

^a Letter 24.

An English translator, it has been said, “is to exhibit his author’s thoughts in such a dress of diction as the author would have given them, had his language been English^b.” An idea of translation, to which nothing can be objected, but the difficulty, I might perhaps have said, the impossibility, of its practical application. The rule, therefore, is not rule enough. It leaves too much to the fancy and the prejudices of the translator; who will naturally imagine, that his own, or his favourite, style, whatever it be, is precisely that, which the author, had he written English, would have preferred. Perhaps the end of this rule cannot any way be more securely answered in practice, than by the observance of the

^b Dr. Johnson’s Life of Dryden, p. 125.

the rule I first mentioned—to depart no farther from the expression of the original, than is fairly required by the different genius of the two languages.

In saying what I think ought to be done by every translator, I have of course said, not, I fear, what I have done, but certainly what I have endeavoured to do, myself. My object, in few words, was, to produce a version sufficiently close and accurate to satisfy those readers who are acquainted with the original, and, at the same time, sufficiently English to be read without disgust by those who are not.—Such a version, at the time when I was induced to undertake the task, was certainly among the desiderata of our literature. We had then no English translation that could be read with patience by any one competently acquainted either with the Greek language, or with his own. I know indeed of but two attempts*. The one, published in 1705, a mere translation of Dacier's translation, notes, and

* Fabricius gives the following account of a translation by Rymer: "Anglice, Rimero interprete, cum Renati Rapini Observationibus Poeticis, à Gallico in idem idioma translatis, Lond. 1674."—Bib. Græc. vol. ii. p. 124.—The best inquiries I have been able to make justify me in concluding this account to be a mistake, occasioned by Rymer's translation of Rapin's Reflections on Aristotle's Treatise of Poesie, &c. published in 1694, and to which he prefixed his famous critical Preface.

and preface; though professing, in the title-page, to be translated from the original Greek, and accompanied, indeed, by some marginal improvements from the Greek text, most of which, if admitted into the version, would make it still worse than it is.—The other is a translation from the Greek, I know not by whom, published in 1775. It may speak sufficiently for itself by a few specimens, which, from among many others of the same sort, I have given in the margin^d.

It would be doing injustice to the translation lately given to the public by Mr. Pye, to place it, in any view, however favourable, by the side of these. A particular and critical examination of its merits would come with little propriety from me. So much, however, I may be allowed to say, for it is an indisputable fact, that Mr. Pye's translation and mine are frequently very different; and that, in many passages, if he is right, I must confess myself to be wrong.

It is natural for me to wish, that I could secure the indulgence of the reader, by giving him some

^d P. 3, and throughout, ἥθη is rendered "morals."—p. 11, and 16, αὐτοσχεδιασματα, "self-formed images."—p. 31. προς μεν τας ἀγῶνας και την αἰσθησιν—"with regard to the Controversies and the Conception."—p. 57. ἀτεχνότεραι—"a degree nearer art."—p. 89. Ἐχει δὲ προς το ἐπεκτείνεσθαι το μεγαλῶ πολὺ τι ἢ ἐποποιία ἰδίῳ—"Epic has much peculiar for lengthening the greatness."—p. 92. ἀδύνατα και εἰκότα—"Impossibilities and Suitable."

some idea of the uncommon difficulties, with which a translator of this work of Aristotle has to struggle. But they are such as can hardly be conceived, but by those who are well acquainted with the original; and even among them, I may venture to say, can be adequately conceived by those only, who have tried their strength against them by actual experiment. These difficulties arise from various sources: from the elliptic conciseness, and other peculiarities, of Aristotle's style, and from the nature of the work itself, which, in many parts of it at least, seems to have been intended for little more than a collection of hints, or short memorial notes, and has sometimes almost the appearance of a syllabus for lectures, or a table of contents*; so that we might apply to it, in some degree, what Aristotle himself is said to have written to Alexander the Great, who had reprimanded him for having published some private lectures which that Prince had received from him: "They are published," answered

* —" He has a dry conciseness, that makes one " imagine one is perusing a table of contents, rather " than a book."—Gray's Letters, Sect. 4. Let. 3. The account Mr. Gray there gives of Aristotle's writings, though it is written with the sportive pleasantry of a familiar letter, is extremely just; except, perhaps, in one observation:—it seems hardly fair to conclude that Aristotle "lost himself," wherever his readers are now at a loss to find his meaning.

answered the philosopher, “and not published; “for they are intelligible only to those who have “been my pupils^f.” An answer, which does indeed give some countenance to the assertion of Ammonius, that the obscurity of Aristotle’s style was voluntary^g. Yet I hope the assertion is not true. I cannot persuade myself to give full credit to an account so degrading to a great philosopher. And surely it is but a perverse kind of apology, to assign, of all the causes of obscurity that can be assigned, the only one which leaves it totally without excuse. If, however, this was really the case, it must be confessed, that Aristotle succeeded well, and stood in little need of the admonition of the school-master mentioned by Quintilian, “qui discipulos ob-
“scurare quæ dicerent juberet, Græco verbo “utens, Σκοτισον^h.” — Another considerable source of difficulty is, that so many of the Tragedies and other poems, alluded to, and quoted,

^f Ἰσθὶ ἐν αὐτῇς ΚΑΙ ΕΚΔΕΔΟΜΕΝΟΤΣ ΚΑΙ ΜΗ ΕΚΔΕΔΟΜΕΝΟΤΣ· ξυνετοὶ γὰρ εἰσι μόνους τοῖς ἡμῶν ἀκασασιν.—See Aul. Gell. XX. 5. where the two letters, of Alexander and Aristotle, are preserved.

^g Πολλαχῇ τε συνεσφγμενον, [sc. το εἶδθ των Αριστοτελῆς συγγραμμάτων,] καὶ ἀσαφῶς πεφρασμενον, ἔ δια την φυσιν τε γραφανθ, ἀλλ’ ἘΚΟΥΣΙΩΣ ΤΕΤΟ ΠΕΠΟΙΗΜΕΝ. Αμμοσι. ad Categ. Aristot. See also Fabric. Bib. Græc. vol. iv. p. 166.
—ἀσαφειαν ἐπιτηδεων.

^h Quintil. VIII. 2.

quoted, throughout the treatise, are lost.—But the chief of these sources, undoubtedly, is the mutilated and corrupt condition of the text. The work is but a fragment:—Πιδακῶς ἐξ ἱερῆς ὀλίγη λιβας!—I wish I could add, Ἀλλ' ἥτις καθαρή τε καὶ ἀχραιναντὶ ἀνέριαι: but even of this fragment it may be doubted, whether it has been most injured by mutilation, or by repair. The history given by Strabo, of the fate of Aristotle's works after his death, is so curious, and so effectually removes all wonder at the mangled state in which we find them, that I shall here, for the sake of the English reader, insert a translation of it.

“ The Socratic philosophers, Erastus and “ Coriscus, were natives of Scepsis¹; as was “ also Neleus, (the son of Coriscus,) who was “ a scholar of Aristotle and Theophrastus, and “ to whom the latter bequeathed his library, in “ which was included that of Aristotle. For “ Aristotle, who, as far as we know, was the “ first collector of books, and the first who “ taught the kings of Egypt to form and arrange “ a library, left his own collection of books,
 “ (as he also did his school,) to Theophrastus;
 “ and from Theophrastus it came to Neleus.
 “ Neleus removed it to Scepsis, and left it to “ his descendants; who, being illiterate persons, “ threw the books together as lumber, and “ locked

¹ A city of Mysia.

“ locked them up: but afterwards, when they “ heard, that the Attalic monarchs, their sove“ reigns, were taking great pains to collect books
 “ for the Pergamenian library, they concealed “ them in a cave under ground; whence, after “ having been long damaged by damp and worms^k,
 “ the books both of Aristotle and Theophrastus “ were, at length, sold by some of the family, at “ a great price, to Apellicon the Teian. This “ man was rather a lover of books, than a lover “ of wisdom, or a Philosopher^l; and being “ therefore anxious to restore, at any rate, those “ parts of the manuscripts that had been des“ troyed or damaged, he had them fairly copied;
 “ and, the vacuities in the writing being unskil- “ fully supplied, they were thus published, full “ of blunders. The old Peripatetics, who suc“ ceeded Theophrastus, possessing none of these “ writings, except a very few, and those chiefly “ of the exoteric kind, were not qualified to “ philosophize accurately, but contented them“ selves with treating, in a shewy and superficial “ manner, such particular questions as were pro“ posed. The later Peripatetics, however, who “ lived after the publication of those books, were “ enabled to teach the Aristotelic doctrines with “ more exactness; yet even they, from the mul“ titude

^k Ὅτι πο νοτίας καὶ σήτων κακωθέντα—.

^l Φιλοβιβλῶν πολλὸν ἢ φιλοσοφῶν.—A very modern sort of character.

“titude of errors in their copies, were frequently “obliged to have recourse to explanations merely “conjectural. And these errors were much “increased at Rome. For immediately on the “death of Apellicon, Sylla, when he took “Athens, possessed himself of his library, and “carried it to Rome; where the books fell into “the hands of Tyrannio the Grammarian, a “great admirer of Aristotle, who procured them “from the librarian; and afterwards into those “of certain booksellers, who employed careless “and ignorant transcribers, and neglected to “collate the copies with the originals; which is “also the case with many other books trans“cribed for sale, both at Rome and Alexan“dria^m.”

In the division of the translation into Parts and Sections, there was no authority to restrain me from following my own ideas, and preferring that method which appeared most conducive to clearness.—By the marginal titles the convenience of the reader is consulted: he has the work, and its index, under his eye at the same time.—The order of the chapters I have not attempted to disturb. But if, on the one hand, I cannot admit the unnecessary and licentious transpositions of Heinsius, neither can I, on the other, other, assent to those commentators, who, like Dacier, defend, on all occasions, the common arrangement as authentic. If they are right; we must suppose one of the most strict and methodical of philosophers to have been sometimes almost as careless as old Montagne; who, as he tells us pleasantly, "n'avoit point d'autre sergent de bande à ranger ses pieces que la fortune."

^m Strabo, lib. xiii. p. 608, D. ed. Casaub.—See also Plutarch's life of Sylla, p. 856. ed. H. St. and Bayle, art. TYRANNION.

Every translation should be accompanied with such explanations as are necessary to render it intelligible to those readers who are supposed, chiefly, to have recourse to translation; those, who are totally unacquainted with the language of the original. This is the object of the short notes under the version; in which, however, I have sometimes referred to the larger notes, when they were such as would answer the same purpose.

These last-mentioned Notes, which follow the Translation, and the two Dissertations prefixed to it, (which indeed are but longer notes thrown into that form,) I wish to be considered as the principal part of my design. They form a full, and nearly a continued, commentary. My purpose was, to discuss all the difficulties of the original, of whatever kind: to remove, or at least, to diminish them, where I could; where I could not, to state them fairly, and to confess them—the easiest part, certainly, of a commentator's duty, though not, perhaps, that, which is most commonly discharged.

As a great part of these difficulties arise from the obscurity or corruption of the Greek text, a great part of my comment is, of course, taken up by philological and verbal criticism. But though my plan obliged me to submit to an employment which wit has disgraced by the name of "word-catching," I hope it will not be found that I altogether "live on syllables." It is, indeed, rather hard upon a commentator, that he should be expected to "catch" the meaning of his author, and, at the same time, reproached for endeavouring to catch the words in which that meaning is contained. But, in executing this part of my task, I must confess myself to have, indeed, an insatiable appetite for obscurity, if I have discovered any desire of finding the text more corrupt and mutilated than it is. Where I have indulged conjecture, I hope I have always remembered that it is conjecture, and have neither insulted the reader, nor disgraced myself, by the disgusting, though privileged, language of emendatory criticism on antient authors. A Latin commentator, indeed, may lay any wager, that his author wrote this, or that; may assert his emendation to be clearer than light itself, and say to his reader, if you are not a blockhead, you will

^a "Each word-catcher, that lives on syllables."— Pope's Ep. to Arbuthnot.

will be of my opinion°, &c.—“Nobis non licet esse tam disertis.”

They, who think any interpretation better than none, may perhaps wish, that I had not employed so considerable a portion of my notes in merely stating difficulties which had not been fully seen or fairly acknowledged, without attempting to remove them; in combating interpretations hitherto acquiesced in as satisfactory, and shewing, that many passages, supposed to be sufficiently understood, are yet to be explained. This is certainly not that part of a commentator's duty, which is most pleasant, either to his readers, or himself; but it is surely a necessary and indispensable part of it, and I have endeavoured to discharge it faithfully. I hope I have no where either made a difficulty to shew my sagacity, or dissembled one to conceal the want of it.

We live in a delicate and fastidious age, in which learning, even in books, is hardly released from the necessity of observing, in some degree, what Fontenelle calls “the exterior decencies of ignorance”°. But, if pedantry be an unnecessary, unseasonable, and therefore ostentatious, display of learning, I should hope, that the nature of my work would sufficiently secure me against that

° “Quovis pignore contenderim.”—“Luce meridianâ clarius.”—“Tu, si sapis, mecum reponc.”—&c. &c.

° “Les bienséances extérieures de l'ignorance.”

that charge. It will scarce be thought strange, that notes, intended to explain a Greek author, and supposed, of course, to be addressed to Greek scholars, should abound with Greek quotations. One of my chief objects was, to illustrate Aristotle, wherever I could, from himself, and from Plato, to whose opinions and writings he continually alludes. Another was, to relieve the dryness of so much philological discussion by passages, which, at the same time that they throw light upon the author, might also be expected to afford some pleasure to the reader, either as beautiful, or as curious. With the same view, I have now and then ventured to quit, for a moment, my direct path; to transgress Seneca's rule, "Quò ducit materia sequendum est, non quò invitât," and to avail myself of some of those many openings, which Aristotle affords, into collateral, though not irrelative inquiries.

The time is come, when we no longer read the antients with our judgments shackled by determined admiration; when even from the editor and the commentator, it is no longer required as an indispensable duty, that he should see nothing in his author but perfection. No apology therefore, I trust, will be required from me, for speaking freely of the defects of this work of Aristotle, even where those defects appear to be his own.

It is necessary to mention, that many of my notes were written, and of more the materials were prepared, before I consulted, or indeed had it in my power to consult; some of the earliest and best commentators, whose works are too scarce to be procured at the moment they are wanted. In perusing them I might often have adopted the exclamation of the old Grammarian¹, "Pereant, qui ante nos nostra dixerunt!" But "every thing," says Epictetus, "has two handles;" and it required but little philosophy in this case, to be more pleased with the support which my opinions received from such coincidence, than mortified by the mere circumstance of prior occupation: a circumstance, which, after all, could not deprive me of the property of my own thoughts, though, as Dr. Johnson has observed on a similar occasion², I certainly can prove that property only to myself. — This coincidence, wherever I found it, I have scrupulously pointed out.

How much subsequent commentators, and Dacier in particular, have been obliged to the labours of those learned, acute, and indefatigable Italians, will perhaps sufficiently appear from the use I have made of them, and the frequent extracts, which the scarceness of their books has induced me to give from them in my notes.

This

¹ Donatus.

² Pref. to Shakspeare.

This I must be allowed to say, that, in my opinion, great injustice is done to their merits by those editors, who not only neglect to avail themselves of their assistance, but affect also to speak of them with contempt. The truth is, that to consult them is a work of considerable labour, and requires no small degree of patience and resolution. The trouble we are unwilling to take, we easily persuade ourselves to think not worth taking; and plausible reasons are readily given, and as readily admitted, for neglecting, what those, to whom we make our apology, are, in general, as little disposed to take the pains of examining as ourselves. And thus, “Difficultas laborque discendi DISERTAM NEGLIGENTIAM REDDIT.”

In what I have here said, I allude, more particularly, to the commentaries of Castelvetro and Beni¹. Their prolixity, their scholastic and trifling

¹ Cic. de Divin. I. 47.

² Poetica d' Aristotele vulgarizzata e sposta per Lodovico Castelvetro, &c. Basil. 1576.

Pauli Benii, Eugubini, &c. in Aristotelis Poeticam Commentarii, &c. Venet. 1624.

Castelvetro's criticism is well characterized, and its effect upon his reader well described, by Gravina:
 “E perchè il Castelvetro, quanto è acuto e diligente, ed “amator del vero, tanto è difficile ed affannoso per “quelle scolastiche reti, che agli altri ed a se stessi, “allora,

trifling subtilty, their useless tediousness of logical analysis, their microscopic detection of difficulties invisible to the naked eye of common sense, and their waste of confutation upon objections made only by themselves, and made on purpose to be confuted—all this, it must be owned, is disgusting and repulsive. It may sufficiently release a commentator from the duty of reading their works throughout, but not from that of examining and consulting them: for in both these writers, but more especially in Beni, there are many remarks equally acute and solid; many difficulties well seen, clearly stated, and, sometimes, successfully removed; many things usefully illustrated, and judiciously explained; and if their freedom of censure is now and then disgraced by a little disposition to cavil, this becomes almost a virtue, when compared with the servile and implicit admiration of Dacier, who, as a fine writer has observed, “avoit fait vœu d’être de l’avis “d’Aristote, soit qu’il l’entendit ou qu’il ne l’entendit pas”.

Of

“allora, i maggiori ingegni tendeano; perciò, per dispetto spesso e per rabbia vien da’ lettori abbandonato, ed è da loro condannato, prima che intendano la sua ragione; la quale si rincrescono tirar fuori da quei labirinti delle sue sottili e moleste distinzioni.” Della Tragedia, p. 75.

▪ Marmontel, Poétique Française, Pref. p. 6.

Of the translations and commentaries written in the Italian language there is one, which deserves particular notice, though, by what hard fate I know not, it seems scarce to have been noticed at all: I mean that of Piccolomini *. His version, though sometimes rather paraphratical, is singularly exact; and, on the whole, more faithful to the sense, or at least to what I conceive to be the sense, of Aristotle, than any other that I have seen. In his commentary, he has nothing of the Quixotism of Castelvetro and Beni. He does not sally forth so eagerly to the relief of distressed readers, as to create the distress for the sake of shewing his prowess in surmounting it. Some commentators appear to be really disappointed, when they find any thing which they cannot deny to be intelligible. Piccolomini fairly endeavoured to understand his author; and, which is no small praise, seems always to have understood himself. His annotations, though often prolix and diffused, are generally sensible, and always clear. They will sometimes tire the reader, but seldom, I think, perplex him.

With

* Annotazioni di M. Alessandro Piccolomini, nel libro della Poetica d'Aristotele; con la traduzione del medesimo libro in lingua volgare. In Vinegia. 1575.—Piccolomini was archbishop of Patras. See Bayle. He also wrote Copiosissima Parafrase nel Retorica d'Aristotele. Venet. 1565. A clear, exact, and useful work, though prolix, and an unpleasant mixture of translation and comment.

With respect to the original work itself, it would be superfluous to enter, here, into any discussion of its merits and its defects. My ideas of both will sufficiently appear in the course of my notes. I must however remark one point of view, in which the criticism of Aristotle has always particularly struck me, though it seems to have been little noticed: And that is, that his philosophy, austere and cold as it appears, has not encroached upon his taste. He has not indeed expressed that taste by mixing the language of admiration with that of philosophy in his investigation of principles, but he has discovered it in those principles themselves; which, in many respects at least, are truly poetical principles, and such as afford no countenance to that sort of criticism, which requires the Poet to be “of reason all compact.” Aristotle, on the contrary, every where reminds him, that it is his business to represent, not what is, but what should be; to look beyond actual and common nature, to the ideal model of perfection in his own mind. He sees fully, what the rationalists among modern critics have not always seen, the power of popular opinion and belief upon poetical credibility*—that “a legend, a tale, a tradition, a rumour, a superstition—in short, any thing, is enough to be the “ basis

* See the translation, Part IV. Sect. 1. and the note there: Sect. 3, and 6.

“basis of the poet’s air-formed visions.” He never loses sight of the end of Poetry, which, in conformity to common sense, he held to be *pleasure*². He is ready to excuse, not only impossibilities, but even absurdities, where that end appears to be better answered with them, than it would have been without them³. In a word, he asserts the privileges of Poetry, and gives her free range to employ her whole power, and to do all she can do—that is, to impose upon the imagination, by whatever means, as far as imagination, for the sake of its own pleasure, will consent to be imposed upon. Poetry can do no more than this, and, from its very nature and end, ought not to be required to do less. If it is our interest to be cheated, it is her duty to cheat us⁴. The critic, who suffers his philosophy to reason away his pleasure, is not much wiser than the child, who cuts open his drum, to see what it is within that caused the sound.

The

¹ Letters on Chivalry and Romance, p. 300.

² This I have endeavoured to prove in NOTE 277.

³ Part IV. Sect. 2. and p. 184—6.

⁴ I allude to the ingenious saying of Gorgias, who called Tragedy, “an imposition, where they who cheat us are honestest than they who do not cheat us, and they who are cheated, wiser than they who are not cheated.”—Τὴν τραγωδίαν εἶπεν ἀπατην, ἣν ὁ ἀπατησας δικαιότερον τε μὴ ἀπατησάτω, καὶ ὁ ἀπατηθεὶς σοφώτερον τε μὴ ἀπατηθεὶς. Plut. de aud. Poet. p. 26. ed. H. S.

The English reader of Aristotle will, I hope, do him (and, I may add, his translator,) so much justice, as to recollect, when the improvements of modern criticism occur to him, that he is reading a book, which was written above two thousand years ago, and which, for the reasons already given, can be considered as little more than the fragment of a fragment. What would have been the present state of poetical criticism, had Aristotle never written, it is impossible to say: two facts, however, are certain; that he was the first who carried philosophical investigation into these regions of imagination and fiction, and that the ablest of his successors have not disdained to pursue the path which he had opened to them, and even, in many instances, to tread in his very footsteps. It may therefore, possibly, be true, that modern critics are, in some measure, indebted to Aristotle himself for their very pretensions to despise him. At least, the more we admire the skill of those, who have raised and finished the structure, the more reason we have to respect the Architect, who not only gave the plan, but, with it, many specimens of masterly execution.

With respect to my own work, I have already said all that I thought it necessary to say, by way of explaining its design, and of apologizing for such particulars in the execution of it, as might appear most liable to exception. To suppose it free from imperfection and error, would be not only

only to forget the nature of the work, but to forget myself. I commit it with the less anxiety to the candour of the public, as I am confident, (and it is the only confidence I allow myself to feel,) that the time and the labour I have bestowed upon it will, at least, acquit me of that disrespectful indifference to the public judgment, which haste and negligence imply. It is now six years since the translation was finished ; and both that, and the dissertations and notes, have received every advantage of revision and correction, which either my own care, or friendly criticism, could give them. And, upon this occasion, I cannot refuse myself the gratification of publicly acknowledging how much I owe to the accurate judgment and just taste of one person^c, in particular, in whom I found precisely that friendly censor, so happily and so comprehensively characterized by the Poet as

“ Eager to praise, yet resolute to blame,

“ Kind to his verse, but kinder to his fame^d :”

—and of whom, indeed, I may say, without any fear of indulging too far the partiality of friendship, that he never shrinks from any task, whether of private kindness, or more general benevolence, that calls for his assistance, and stands in need of his abilities.

^c The Rev. Dr. Forster, of Colchester.

^d Hayley's Epistle on the death of Mr. Thornton:

I TAKE the only opportunity now left me to mention a book, which was very lately sent to me by a friend, and which I have read with great pleasure;—Dramaturgie, ou Observations critiques sur plusieurs pieces de Théâtre, tant anciennes que modernes: [Paris 1785]—a translation from the German of the late Mr. Lessing. The notice taken of the original work in Mr. Winstanley's edition of Aristotle had, indeed, long ago excited my curiosity; but I am unacquainted with the German language, and my inquiries afforded me no reason to conclude that the work had been translated. It contains many excellent and uncommon things. Mr. Lessing appears to me to have possessed, in no ordinary degree, that combination of taste and philosophy—of strength of feeling and strength of thought—upon which good and original criticism depends. He had, it seems, particularly applied himself to the study of Aristotle's treatise on Poetry; as indeed sufficiently appears from several masterly discussions of difficult and contested passages in that work. I cannot but regret, that he did not write a regular commentary on the whole. From the specimens he has given, I have no doubt, that it would have been, in many respects, far superior to to any other work of the kind ; though, at the same time, those specimens afford us reason to conclude, that we should have found in it some instances of refinement, upon Aristotle, at least, if not upon the truth ; and that, like many other ingenious men, he would, now and then, have transferred his own ingenuity to his author. Something of this refinement, I think, there is in his explanation of Aristotle's definition of Tragedy, and of the purgation of the passions, tome 2. p. 6—35. After considering, very attentively, that, and some other explanations, in which he differs from me, I have not yet found reason to alter my opinion. But, had I seen this ingenious work in time, I should certainly have paid every attention due to the opinions of such a writer, by availing myself of his support, where we agree, and by giving my reasons, where we differ.

TWO DISSERTATIONS.

I.

ON POETRY CONSIDERED AS AN IMITATIVE ART.

II.

ON THE DIFFERENT SENSES OF THE
WORD, IMITATIVE,
AS APPLIED TO MUSIC BY THE ANTIENTS, AND BY THE MODERNS.

DISSERTATION I.

ON POETRY CONSIDERED AS AN IMITATIVE ART.

THE word Imitation, like many others, is used, sometimes in a strict and proper sense, and sometimes in a sense more or less extended and improper. Its application to poetry is chiefly of the latter kind. Its precise meaning, therefore, when applied to poetry in general, is by no means obvious. No one who has seen a picture is at any loss to understand how painting is imitation. But no man, I believe, ever heard or read, for the first time, that poetry is imitation, without being conscious in some degree, of that "confusion of thought" which an ingenious writer complains of having felt whenever he has attempted to explain the imitative nature of Music^a. It is easy to see whence this confusion arises, if we consider the process of the mind when words thus extended from their proper significations are presented to it. We are told that "Poetry is an imitative art."

In

^a Dr. Beattie, Essay on Poetry, &c. ch. vi. § 1.

In order to conceive how it is so, we naturally compare it with painting, sculpture, and such arts as are strictly and clearly imitative. But, in this comparison, the difference is so much more obvious and striking than the resemblance—we see so much more readily in what respects poetry is not properly imitation, than in what respects it is;—that the mind, at last, is left in that sort of perplexity which must always arise from words thus loosely and analogically applied, when the analogy is not sufficiently clear and obvious; that is, when, of that mixture of circumstances, like and unlike, which constitutes analogy, the latter are the most apparent.

In order to understand the following Treatise on Poetry, in which imitation is considered as the very essence of the art^b, it seems necessary to satisfy ourselves, if possible, with respect to two points; I. In what senses the word Imitation is, or may be, applied to Poetry. II. In what senses it was so applied by ARISTOTLE.

I.

THE only circumstance, I think, common to everything we denominate imitation, whether properly or improperly, is resemblance, of some sort or other.

In every imitation, strictly and properly so called, two conditions seem essential:—the resemblance

^b See the Second part of this Dissertation.

blance must be immediate; i. e. between the imitation, or imitative work, itself, and the object imitated;—and, it must also be obvious. Thus, in sculpture, figure is represented by similar figure; in painting, colour and figure, by similar colour and figure; in personal imitation, or mimicry, voice and gesture, by similar voice and gesture. In all these instances, the resemblance is obvious; we recognize the object imitated: and it is, also, immediate; it lies in the imitative work, or energy, itself; or, in other words, in the very materials, or sensible media^c, by which the imitation is conveyed. All these copies, therefore, are called, strictly and intelligibly, imitations.

1. The materials of poetic imitation are words. These may be considered in two views; as sounds merely, and as sounds significant, or arbitrary and conventional signs of ideas. It is evidently, in the first view only, that words can bear any real resemblance to the things expressed; and, accordingly, that kind of imitation which consists in the resemblance of words considered as mere SOUND, to the sounds and motions of the objects imitated^d, has usually been assigned as the only instance in which the term imitative is, in its strict and proper sense, applicable to Poetry*.

But

^c See Mr. Harris's Treatise on Music, &c. ch. i.

^d Mr. Harris's Treatise, &c. ch. iii.

* Mr. Harris.—Lord Kaimes, Elements of Criticism, vol. ii. p. 1.

But setting aside all that is the effect of fancy and of accommodated pronunciation in the reader, to which, I fear, many passages, repeatedly quoted and admired as the happiest coincidences of sound and sense, may be reduced^f; setting this aside, even in such words, and such arrangements of words, as are actually, in some degree, analogous in sound or motion to the thing signified or described, the resemblance is so faint and distant, and of so general and vague a nature, that it would never, of itself, lead us to recognize the object imitated. We discover not the likeness till we know the meaning. The natural relation of the word to the thing signified, is pointed out only by its arbitrary or conventional relation^g.—I do not

^f The reader may see this sufficiently proved by Dr. Johnson in his Lives of the Poets, vol. iv. p. 183. 8vo, and in the Rambler, N^o 92. "In such resemblances," as he well observes, "the mind often governs the ear, and the sounds are estimated by their meaning." See also Lord Kaimes, El. of Crit. vol. ii. p. 84, 85.

^g See Harris on Music, &c. ch. iii. § 1, 2. This verse of Virgil, Stridenti miserum stipulâ disperdere carmen—is commonly cited as an example of this sort of imitation. I question, however, whether this line would have been remarked by any one as particularly harsh, if a harsh sound had not been described in it. At least, many verses full as harshly constructed might, I believe, be 4 produced,

not here mean to deny that such resemblances, however slight and delicate where they really are, and however liable to be discovered by fancy where they are not, are yet a source of real beauties, produced, in which no such imitation can be supposed. But, even admitting that such imitation was here intended, it seems to me almost ridiculous to talk of the "natural relation between the sound of this verse, and that of a vile hautboy." [Harris, in the chapter above referred to.] All that can be said is, that the sounds are, both of them, harsh sounds; but, certainly no one species of harsh sound can well be more unlike another, than the sound of a rough verse is to the tone of a bad hautboy, or, indeed, of any other musical instrument.—That, in the clearest and most acknowledged instances of such imitative vocal sound, the resemblance is, or can possibly be, so exact as to lead a person unacquainted with the language, by the sound alone, to the signification, no man in his senses would assert. Yet Dr. Beattie, in a note, p. 304, of his Essay on Poetry, &c. by a mistake for which I am at a loss to account, has ascribed so extravagant a notion to Rousseau. "There is in Tasso's Gierusalemme Liberata, "a famous stanza, of which Rousseau says, that a good "ear and sincere heart are alone able to judge of it;" meaning, as appears from what follows, of its sense; for he adds, "The imitative harmony and the poetry are "indeed admirable; but I doubt whether a person who "understands neither Italian nor Latin, could even guess at "the meaning from the sound." There can be no room for doubt in this matter;—he certainly could not: nor does Rousseau appear to have even hinted the possibility of such a thing. The passage is in his admirable Letter beauties, of beauties actually felt by the reader, when they arise, or appear to arise, spontaneously from the poet's feeling, and their effect is not counteracted by the obviousness of cool intention, and deliberate artifice^b. Nor do I mean to object

to

Sur la Musique Française; where, in order to obviate the prejudices of those who regard the Italian language as wholly soft and effeminate, he produces two stanzas of Tasso, the one as an example of a sweet and tender, the other of a forcible and nervous, combination of sounds: and he adds, that to judge of this, i. e. of the sound only, not the sense, of the stanzas, and also of the impossibility of rendering adequately the sweetness of the one, or the force of the other, in the French language, "it is not necessary to understand Italian—it is sufficient that we have an ear, and are impartial."—"Que ceux qui pensent que l'Italian n'est que le langage de la douceur et de la tendresse, prennent la peine de comparer entre elles ces deux strophes du Tasse:—et s'ils desespèrent de rendre en François la douce harmonie de l'une, qu'ils essayent d'exprimer la rauque dureté de l'autre: il n'est pas besoin pour juger de ceci d'entendre la langue, il ne faut qu' avoir des oreilles & de la bonne foi."

^b I am persuaded that many very beautiful and striking passages of this kind in the best poets were solely φυσικῆς αὐτοματιζούσης ἔργα, not τεχνης μιμησασθαι τα γινόμενα περὶ μιν, as it is well expressed by Dion. Hal. Περὶ συνθεσεως, § 20. — But the Critic is always too ready to transfer his own reflection to the Poet; and to consider as the effects of art, all those spontaneous strokes of genius which become the causes of art by his calm observation and discussion.

to this application of the word imitative. My purpose is merely to shew, that when we call this kind of resemblance, imitation, we do not use the word in its strict sense—that, in which it is applied discussion. Scarce any poet has, I think, so many beauties of this kind, faithfully produced by strength of imagination, and delicacy of ear, as Virgil. Yet there are some verses frequently cited as fine examples in this way, which appear to me too visibly artificial to be pleasing: such as —

Quadrupedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum.

I am tempted to add to this note a passage from the first dissertation prefixed to the Æneid by that excellent editor, C. G. Heyne;—a man who has honourably distinguished himself from the herd of commentators, by such a degree of taste and philosophy as we do not often find united with laborious and accurate erudition. Speaking of the charms of Virgil's versification, he says, “Illud unum “monebimus, in errorem inducere juvenilem animum “videri eos qui nimii in eo sunt, ut ad rerum sonos et “naturas accommodatos et formatos velint esse versus.
“Equidem non diffiteor sensum animi me refragantem “habere, quotiescunque persuadere mihi volo, magnum “aliquem poetam æstu tantarum rerum abreptum et “magnorum phantasmatum vi inflammatum, in sono “cursus equestris vel tubæ vel aliarum rerum reddendo “laborare: attenuat ea res et deprimit ingenium poetæ “et artis dignitatem. Sunt tamen, ais, tales versus in “optimo quoque poetâ. Recte; sunt utique multi;
“etsi plures alios ad hoc lusus genus accommodare solet “eorum ingenium qui talibus rebus indulgent. Sed mihi “ad

applied to a picture, or a statue. Of the two conditions above mentioned, it wants that which must be regarded as most essential. The resemblance is, indeed, real, as far as it goes, and immediate; but, necessarily, from its generality, so imperfect, that even when pointed out by the sense, it is by no means always obvious, and without that, cannot possibly lead to any thing like a clear and certain recognition of the particular object imitated¹. I must observe farther, that this kind of imitation,

“ ad poetices indolem propius esse videtur statuere, ipsam “ orationis naturam ita esse comparatam, ut multarum “ rerum sonos exprimat; inflammatum autem phantas-“ matum specie objectâ animum, cum rerum species sibi “ obversantes ut oratione vivide exprimat laborat, necessario “ in ista vocabula incidere, vel orationis proprietate ducente.
 “ Ita graves et celeres, lenes ac duros sonos, vel non id “ agens et curans, ad rerum naturam accommodabit “ et orator quisque bonus, et multo magis poeta.”
 [Heyne’s Virgil, vol. ii. p. 39.]

¹ The causes of this imperfection are accurately pointed out by Mr. Harris; 1. The “natural sounds and motions which Poetry thus imitates, are themselves but loose and indefinite accidents of those subjects to which they belong, and consequently do but loosely and indefinitely characterise them. 2. Poetic sounds and motions do but faintly resemble those of nature, which are themselves confessed to be so imperfect and vague.” [Treatise on Music, &c. ch. iii. § 2. See also imitation, even supposing it much more perfect, is, by no means, that which would be likely first to occur to any one, in an enquiry concerning the nature of the imitation attributed to Poetry, were it not, that the circumstance of its real and immediate resemblance, has occasioned its being considered, I think not justly, as the strictest sense of the term so applied.

For the most usual, and the most important senses, and even, as will perhaps appear, for the strictest sense, in which Poetry has been, or may be,

also ch. ii. § 3.] The following is a famous imitative line of Boileau :

S'en va frapper le mur, & revient en roulant.

If this line were read to any one ignorant of the language, he would be so far from guessing what was imitated, that it would not, I believe, occur to him that anything was imitated at all; unless, indeed, the idea were forced upon his mind by the pronuntiation of the reader. Now, suppose him to understand French :—as the circumstance of rolling is mentioned in the line, he might possibly notice the effect of the letter R, and think the poet intended to express the noise of something that rolled. And this is all the real resemblance that can be discovered in this verse: a resemblance, and that too, but distant and imperfect, in the sound of a letter to the sound of rolling in general. For anything beyond this, we must trust to our imagination, assisted by the commentator, who assures us, that the poet “a cherché à imiter par le son des mots, le bruit que fait UNE ASSIETTE en roulant.” Sat. iii. v. 216.

be, understood to imitate, we must have recourse to language, considered in its most important point of view, as composed, not of sounds merely, but of sounds significant.

2. The most general and extensive of these senses, is that in which it is applied to DESCRIPTION, comprehending, not only that poetic landscape-painting which is peculiarly called descriptive Poetry, but all such circumstantial and distinct representation as conveys to the mind a strong and clear idea of its object, whether sensible or mental^k. Poetry, in this view, is naturally

^k Nothing is more common than this application of the word to description; though the writers who so apply it have not always explained the ground of the application, or pointed out those precise properties of description which entitle it to be considered as imitation. Mr. Addison makes use of description as a general term, comprehending all poetic imitation, or imitation by language, as opposed to that of painting, &c. See Spectator N° 416. I. C. Scaliger, though he extended imitation to speech in general, [see Part II. Note¹.] did not overlook the circumstances which render description peculiarly imitative. He says, with his usual spirit, speaking of poetic or verbal imitation,—“ At imitatio non uno modo; quando ne res quidem. Alia namque est simplex designatio, ut, Æneas pugnât: alia modos addit et circumstantias; verbi gratiâ—armatus, in equo, iratus. Jam hîc est pugnantis etiam facies, non solum actio. Ita *adjunctæ circumstantiæ, loci, affectus, occasio*nis, naturally considered as more or less imitative, in proportion as it is capable of raising an ideal image or picture, more or less resembling the reality of things. The more distinct and vivid the ideas are of which this picture is composed, and the more closely they correspond to the actual impressions received from nature, the stronger will be the resemblance, and the more perfect the imitation.

Hence it is evident that, of all description, that of visible objects will be the most imitative, the ideas of such objects being of all others, the most distinct and vivid. That such description, therefore, should have been called imitation, can be no wonder; and, indeed, of all the extended or analogical applications of the word, this is, perhaps, the most obvious and natural¹. There needs no other proof of this than the very language in which we are naturally led to express our admiration of this kind of poetry, and which

we

“ occasionis, &c. pleniorē adhuc atque torosiorē efficiunt IMITATIONEM.” [Poet. lib. vii. cap. 2.] We must not, however, confound imitative description with such description as is merely an enumeration of parts. See note^m, Second part of this Dissertation.

1 Τα δὲ ΟΥΕΙ γνωριμα, δια ποιητικῆς ἐρμηνείας ἐμφαίνεται ΜΙΜΗΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΟΝ· ὁ.ον, κυμάτων ὄψεις, καὶ τοποθεσίαι, καὶ μάχαι, καὶ περιγαστρίαι παλῶν ὥστε συνδιατιθεσθαι τὰς ψυχὰς τῶν εἰδεσι τῶν ἀπαγγελλομένων, ΩΣ ΩΡΩΜΕΝΟΙΣ. Pict. Harmon. 3. 3.

we perpetually borrow from the arts of strict imitation. We say the poet has painted his object; we talk of his imagery, of the lively colours of his description, and the masterly touches of his pencil^m.

The

^m It cannot be necessary to produce examples of this. They are to be found in almost every page of every writer on the subject of poetry. The reader may see Dr. Hurd's Discourse on Poetical Imitation, p. 10, &c. —Dr. Beattie's Essay on Poetry and Music, p. 97, (Ed. 8vo.) and the note.—Dr. Warton on Pope, vol. i. p. 44, 45; vol. ii. 223, 227.—Lord Kaimes, Elem. of Criticism, vol. ii. p. 326.

Nor is this manner of speaking peculiar to modern writers. φερε ἔν, says Ælian, introducing his description of the Vale of Tempe: καὶ τὰ καλεῖμενα Τεμπή, τὰ Θετταλικά, ΔΙΑΓΡΑΨΩΜΕΝ τῷ λόγῳ, καὶ ΔΙΑΠΛΑΣΩΜΕΝ. And he adds, as in justification of these expressions, ὡμολογῆται γὰρ καὶ ὁ λόγος, ἔαν ἔχη δύναμιν φραστικὴν, μὴδὲν ἁσθενέστερον ὅσα βελεται ΔΕΙΚΝΥΝΑΙ τῶν ἀνδρῶν τῶν κατὰ χειρουργίαν δεινῶν. Hist. Var. lib. iii. cap. i. Hence, also, the saying of Simonides, so often repeated, that “a picture is a silent poem, and a poem a speaking picture.” Lucian, in that agreeable delineation of a beautiful and accomplished woman, his ΕΙΚΟΝΕΣ, ranks the descriptive poet with the painter and the sculptor: ταῦτα μὲν ἔν ΠΛΑΣΤΩΝ καὶ ΓΡΑΦΕΩΝ καὶ ΠΟΙΗΤΩΝ παιδὲς ἐργάζονται. Homer, he denominates, τὸν ἀρίστον ΤΩΝ ΓΡΑΦΕΩΝ, “the best of PAINTERS;” and calls upon him, even in preference to Polygnotus, Apelles, and the most eminent artists, to paint the charms

The objects of our other senses fall less within the power of description, in proportion as the ideas of those objects are more simple, more fleeting, and less distinct, than those of sight. The description of such objects is, therefore, called with less propriety *imitation*ⁿ.

Next to visible objects, sounds seem the most capable of descriptive imitation. Such description is, indeed, generally aided by real, though imperfect, resemblance of verbal sound; more, or less, according to the nature of the language, and the delicacy of the poet's ear. The following lines of Virgil are, I think, an instance of this.

Lamentis gemituque et fœmineo ululatu
Tecta fremunt, resonat magnis plangoribus æther.
Æn. iv. 663.

But we are not, now, considering this immediate imitation of sound by sound, but such only as is merely descriptive, and operates, like the description of visible objects, only by the meaning of the words. Now if we are allowed to call description of visible objects, imitation, when it is

charms of his Panthea. See also the treatise Περὶ τῆς ΟΜΗΡΟΥ ποιητικῆς, towards the end. (Εἰ δὲ καὶ Ζωγράφιαν διδασκαλὸν Ὁμήρον φασὶν τις—κ. τ. ἀλλ.—) ⁿ One obvious reason of this is, the want of that natural association just remarked, with painting, (the most striking of the strictly imitative arts,) which is peculiar to the description of visible objects.

is such that we seem to see the object°, I know of no reason why we may not also consider sounds as imitated^p, when they are so described that we seem to hear them. It would not be difficult to produce from the best poets, and even from prose-writers of a strong and poetical imagination, many instances of sound so imitated. Those readers who are both poetical and musical will, I believe, excuse my dwelling a moment upon a subject which has not, as far as I know, been much considered.

Of our own poets I do not recollect any who have presented musical ideas with such feeling, force, and reality of description, as Milton, and Mr. Mason. When Milton speaks of

- - - Notes with many a winding bout
Of linked sweetness long drawn out.

L'Allegro.

And of—"a soft and solemn-breathing sound,"
that

Rose like a steam of rich distill'd perfumes,
And stole upon the air.

Comus.

Who,

° ΟΡΩΜΕΝΟΙΣ μάλλον ἢ ἀκρομενοῖς εἶναι τὰ [Ὅμηρον] ποιήματα. Treatise de Hom. Poes. loco cit°.

^p Lucian, in his Imagines, just now cited, has very happily described a fine female voice; and he calls the description, somewhat boldly, καλλιφωνίας καὶ ῥῆθς ΕΙΚΩΝ. Tom. ii. p. 13. Ed. Bened. Πας δὲ ὁ τὸν ῥῆθς φθεγματῶν.

—κ. τ. αλ.—

Who, that has a truly musical ear, will refuse to consider such description as, in ~~some~~ sort, imitative?¹

In the same spirit both of Poetry and of Music are these beautiful lines in CARACTACUS, addressed by the Chorus to the Bards:

- - - Wond'rous men!

Ye, whose skill'd fingers know how best to lead,
Through all the maze of sound, the wayward step
Of Harmony, recalling oft, and oft Permitting her unbridled course to rush
Through dissonance to concord, sweetest then Ev'n when expected harshest. - - -

It seems scarce possible to convey with greater clearness to the ear of imagination the effect of an artful and well-conducted harmony; of that free and varied range of modulation, in which the ear is ever wandering, yet never lost, and of that masterly and bold intertexture of discord, which leads the sense to pleasure, through paths that lie close upon the very verge of pain.

The general and confused effect of complex and aggregated sound may be said to be described, when the most striking and characteristic of the single sounds of which it is compounded are selected and enumerated; just as single sounds are described (and they can be described

no

¹ See also Il Penseroso, 161—166.

no otherwise) by the selection of their principal qualities, or modifications.—I cannot produce a finer example of this than the following admirable passage of Dante, in which, with a force of representation peculiar to himself in such subjects, he describes the mingled terrors of those distant sounds that struck his ear as he entered the gates of his imaginary Inferno;—" si mise dentro alle " segrete cose."—

Quivi sospiri, pianti, ed alti guai Risonavan per l'aer senza stelle ;

— — — — —
Diverse lingue, orribili favelle,
Parole di dolore, accenti d'ira,
Voci alte fioche, e suon di man con elle.

Inferno, Canto iii.

The reader may be glad to relieve his imagination from the terrible ENAPTEIA of this description, by turning his ear to a far different combination of sounds;—to the charming description of "the melodies of morn," in the Minstrel, or of the melodies of evening in the Deserted Village:

Sweet was the sound, when oft at evening's close,
Up yonder hill the village murmur rose.
There as I past with careless steps and slow,
The mingling notes came soften'd from below;
The

Book I. Stanzas 40, 41.

The swain responsive as the milk-maid sung,
The sober herd that low'd to meet their young;
The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool,
The playful children just let loose from school;
The watch-dog's voice that bay'd the whisp'ring wind, [mind.
And the loud laugh that spoke the vacant
These all in soft confusion sought the shade,
And fill'd each pause the nightingale had made'.
But

* The following Stanza of Spenser has been much admired:

The joyous birdes, shrouded in cheareful shade,
Their notes unto the voice attempted sweet,
Th' angelical soft trembling voices made
To th' instruments divine, response meet;
The silver-sounding instruments did meet
With the base murmur of the water's fall;
The water's fall with difference discreet
Now soft, now loud, unto the wind did call;
The gentle warbling wind low answered to all.

Fairy Queen, Book ii. Canto 12, Stanza 71.

Dr. Warton says of these lines, that they "are of themselves a complete concert of the most delicious music." It is unwillingly that I differ from a person of so much taste. I cannot consider as Music, much less as "delicious music," a mixture of incompatible sounds, if I may so call them—of sounds musical with sounds unmusical. The singing of birds cannot possibly be "attempted" to the notes of a human voice. The

But single sounds may also be so described or characterized as to produce a secondary perception, of sufficient clearness to deserve the name of imitation. It is thus that we hear the "far-off Curfeu" of Milton;

Over some wide-water'd shore
Swinging slow with sullen roar'.

And

mixture is, and must be, disagreeable. To a person listening to a concert of voices and instruments, the interruption of singing-birds, wind, and waterfalls, would be little better than the torment of Hogarth's enraged musician.—Farther—the description itself is, like too many of Spenser's, coldly elaborate, and indiscriminately minute. Of the expressions, some are feeble and without effect—as, "joyous birds;" some evidently improper—as, "trembling voices," and "cheareful shade;" for there cannot be a greater fault in a voice than to be tremulous; and cheareful is surely an unhappy epithet applied to shade; some cold and laboured, and such as betray too plainly the necessities of rhyme; such is,

"The water's fall with difference discreet."

The reader who conceives the word "swinging," to be merely descriptive of motion, will be far, I think, from feeling the whole force of this passage. They who are accustomed to attend to sounds, will, I believe, agree with me, that the sound, in this case, is affected by the motion, and that the swing of a bell is actually heard in its tone, which is different from what it would be if the same bell were struck with the same force, but at rest. The experiment may be easily made with a small hand-bell.

And Mr. Mason's "Bell of Death," that

- - - pauses now; and now with rising knell
Flings to the hollow gale its sullen sound.

Elegy iii.

I do not know a happier descriptive line in Homer than the following, in his simile of the nightingale:

Ἦτε θαμα τρωπωσα χεει πολυηχεια φωνην*.

That which is peculiar in the singing of this bird, the variety, richness, flexibility, and liquid volubility of its notes, cannot well be more strongly characterized, more audibly presented to the mind, than by the πολυηχεια, the χεει, and, above all, the θαμα τρωπωσα, of this short description*. But, to return—

I men-

* Odyssey, T. 521. I am surprised at Ernestus's interpretation of τρωπωσα; i. e. "de lusciniâ inter canendum se versante;" [Index to his Homer] by which the greatest beauty of the description would be lost; and lost without necessity: for the natural construction is that which Hesychius gives: τρωπωσα—τρεπωσα ΤΗΝ ΦΩΝΗΝ.

* Not a single beauty of this line is preserved in Mr. Pope's translation. The χεει, "pours her voice," is entirely dropt; and the strong and rich expression, in θαμα τρωπωσα, and πολυηχεια, is diluted into "varied strains." [Book xix. 607.] For the particular ideas of a variety of quick turns and inflexions [θαμα τρωπωσα] and a variety of tones, [πολυηχεια] the translator has substituted

I mentioned also, description of mental objects; of the emotions, passions, and other internal movements and operations of the mind. Such objects may be described, either immediately, as they affect the mind, or through their external and sensible effects. Let us take the passion of Dido for an instance :

At regina gravi jamdudum saucia curâ
Vulnus alit venis, et cœco carpitur igni, &c.

Æneid iv. 1.

This is immediate description.—But when Dido

Incipit effari, mediâque in voce resistit;
Nunc eadem, labente die, convivia quærit,
Iliacosque iterum, demens, audire labores
Exposcit, pendetque iterum narrantis ab ore.
Post, ubi digressi, lumenque obscura vicissim
Luna premit, suadentque cadentia sidera somnos, Sola domo mœret vacuâ, stratisque relictis Incubat. - - -

—here, the passion is described, and most exquisitely, by its sensible effects. This, indeed, may be considered as falling under the former kind of descriptive the general, and therefore weak idea, of variety in the abstract—of a song or “strains” simply varied. The reader may see this subject—the importance of particular and determinate ideas to the force and beauty of description—admirably illustrated in the Discourse on Poetical Imitation. [Hurd’s Horace, vol. iii. p. 15—19.]

descriptive imitation—that of sensible objects. There is this difference, however, between the description of a sensible object, and the description of a mental—of any passion for example—through that of a sensible object, that, in the former, the description is considered as terminating in the clear and distinct representation of the sensible object, the landscape, the attitude, the sound, &c.: whereas in the other, the sensible exhibition is only, or chiefly, the means of effecting that which is the principal end of such description—the emotion, of whatever kind, that arises from a strong conception of the passion itself. The image carries us on forcibly to the feeling of its internal cause. When this first effect is once produced, we may, indeed, return from it to the calmer pleasure, of contemplating the imagery itself with a painter's eye.

It is undoubtedly, this description of passions and emotions, by their sensible effects, that principally deserves the name of imitative; and it is a great and fertile source of some of the highest and most touching beauties of poetry⁷. With respect to immediate descriptions of this kind, they are from their very nature, far more weak and indistinct, and do not, perhaps, often possess that degree of forcible representation that amounts to

⁷ See the Discourse on Poetical Imitation, of Dr. Hurd, p. 39, &c.

to what we call imitative description.—But here some distinctions seem necessary. In a strict and philosophical view, a single passion or emotion does not admit of description at all. Considered in itself, it is a simple internal feeling, and, as such, can no more be described, than a simple idea can be defined. It can be described no otherwise than in its effects, of some kind or other. But the effects of a passion are of two kinds, internal and external. Now, popularly speaking, by the passion of love, for example, we mean the whole operation of that passion upon the mind—we include all its internal workings; and when it is described in these internal and invisible effects only, we consider it as immediately described; these internal effects being included in our general idea of the passion. Mental objects, then, admit of immediate description, only when they are, more or less, complex; and such description may be considered as more or less imitative, in proportion as its impression on the mind approaches more or less closely to the real impression of the passion or emotion itself.—Thus, in the passage above referred to as an instance of such immediate description, the mental object described is a complex object—the passion of love, including some of its internal effects; that is, some other passions or feelings which it excites, or with which it is accompanied:

At

At regina gravi jamdudum saucia curâ
 Vulnus alit venis, et cœco carpitur igni.
 Multa viri virtus animo, multusque recursat
 Gentis honos : hærent infixi pectore vultus, Verbaque : nec placidam membris dat cura quietem. Æn. iv. initio.

Reduce this passage to the mere mention of the passion itself—the simple feeling or emotion of love, in the precise and strict acceptation of the word, abstractedly from its concomitant effects, it will not even be description, much less imitative description. It will be mere attribution, or predication. It will say only—"Dido was in love."

Thus, again, a complication of different passions admits of forcible and imitative description :

- - - æstuat ingens
 Imo in corde pudor, mixtoque insania luctu,
 Et furiis agitatus amor, et conscia virtus.
Æn. xii. 666.

Here, the mental object described is not any single passion, but the complex passion, if I may call it so, that results from the mixture and fermentation of all the passions attributed to Turnus.

To give one example more:—The mind of a reader can hardly, I think, be flung into an imaginary situation more closely resembling the real situation situation of a mind distressed by the complicated movements of irresolute, fluctuating and anxious deliberation, than it is by these lines of Virgil :

- - - magno curatum fluctuat æstu ;
Atque animum nunc huc celerem, nunc dividit illuc,
In partesque rapit varias, perque omnia versat.

Æn. viii. 19.

It may be necessary, also, for clearness, to observe, that description, as applied to mental objects, is sometimes used in a more loose and improper sense, and the Poet is said to describe, in general, all the passions or manners which he, in any way, exhibits ; whether, in the proper sense of the word, described, or merely expressed ; as, for example, in the lines quoted from the opening of the fourth book of the Æneid, the passion of Dido is described by the Poet. In these——

Quis novus hic nostris successit sedibus hospes ?
Quem sese ore ferens !—quam forti pectore et armis !——

—it is expressed by herself. But is not this, it may be asked, still imitation ? It is ; but not descriptive imitation. As expressive of passion, it is no farther imitative, than as the passion expressed is imaginary, and makes a part of the Poet's fiction : otherwise, we must apply the word imitative, as nobody ever thought of applying it, to all cases in which we are made, by sympathy, to feel strongly the passion of another expressed by words. The passage is, indeed, also imitative in another view—as dramatic. But for an explanation of both these heads of imitation, I must refer to what follows.—I shall only add, for fear of mistake, that there is also, in the second of those lines, descriptive imitation; but descriptive of Æneas only; not of Dido's passion, though it strongly indicates that passion.—All I mean to assert is, that those lines are not descriptive imitation of a mental object.

So much, then, for the subject of descriptive imitation, which has, perhaps, detained us too long upon a single point of our general inquiry.

3. The word imitation is also, in a more particular, but well-known, sense, applied to Poetry when considered as FICTION—to stories, actions, incidents, and characters, as far as they are feigned or invented by the Poet in imitation, as we find it commonly, and obviously enough, expressed, of nature, of real life, of truth, in general, as opposed to that individual reality of things which is the province of the historian*. Of this imitation the epic and dramatic poems are the principal examples.

That this sense of the term, as applied to fiction, is entirely distinct from that in which it is applied to description, will evidently appear from the

* Μυθεῖν—λογεῖν ψευδὴς EIKONIZΩΝ THN AΛΗΘΕΙΑΝ.—Suidas, & Hesychius, voce Μυθεῖν.

the following considerations.—In descriptive imitation, the resemblance is between the ideas raised, and the actual impressions, whether external or internal, received from the things themselves. In fictive imitation, the resemblance is, strictly speaking, between the ideas raised, and other ideas; the ideas raised—the ideas of the Poem—being no other than copies, resemblances, or, more philosophically, new, though similar, combinations of that general stock of ideas, collected from experience, observation, and reading, and repositied in the Poet's mind.—In description, imitation is opposed to actual impression, external or internal: in fiction, it is opposed to fact.—In their effects, some degree of illusion is implied; but the illusion is not of the same kind in both. Descriptive imitation may be said to produce illusive perception,—fictive, illusive belief.

Farther—descriptive imitation may subsist without fictive, and fictive, without descriptive. The first of these assertions is too obvious to stand in need of proof. The other may require some explanation. It seems evident that fiction may even subsist in mere narration, without any degree of description, properly so called; much more, without such description as I have called imitative; that is, without any greater degree of resemblance to the things expressed, than that which is implied in all ideas, and produced by all language, considered merely as intelligible.

Let

Let a story be invented, and related in the plainest manner possible ; in short and general expressions, amounting, in the incidents, to mere assertion, and in the account of passions and characters, as far as possible, to mere attribution: this, as fiction, is still imitation,—an invented resemblance of real life, or, if you please, of history*,—though without a single imitative description, a single picture, a single instance of strong and visible colouring, throughout the whole*. I mean, by this, only to shew the distinct and independent senses in which imitation is applied to description and to fiction, by shewing how each species of imitation may subsist without the other: but, that fictive imitation, though it does not, in any degree, depend on descriptive for its existence, does, in a very great degree, depend on it for its beauty, is too obvious to be called in question^b.

The

* “Historiæ imitatio ad placitum.” Bacon, De augm. Scient. lib. ii. c. 13.

* The Æneid, in this view, is equally imitation in every part where it is not, or is not supposed to be, historically true; even in the simplest and barest narration. In point of fiction, “tres littore cervos prospicit errantes,” is as much imitation, though not as poetical, as the fine description of the storm in the same book, or of Dido’s conflicting passions, in the fourth.

^b Yet even here a distinction obviously suggests itself. A work of fiction may be considered in two views;

The two senses last mentioned of the word imitative, as applied to description, and to fiction, are manifestly extended, or improper senses, as well as that first mentioned, in which it is applied to language considered as mere sound. In all these imitations, one of the essential conditions of whatever is strictly so denominated is wanting;—
in

views; in the whole, or in its parts: in the general story, the Murder, fable, series of events, &c. or, in the detail and circumstances of the story, the account of such places, persons, and things, as the fable necessarily involves. Now, in the first view, nothing farther seems requisite to make the fictive imitation good, than that the events be, in themselves, important, interesting, and affecting, and so connected as to appear credible, probable, and natural to the reader, and, by that means, to produce the illusion, and give the pleasure, that is expected:—and this purpose may be answered by mere narration. But in the detail this is not the case. When the Poet proceeds to fill up and distend the outline of his general plan by the exhibition of places, characters, or passions, these also, as well as the events, must appear probable and natural: but, being more complex objects, they can no otherwise be made to appear so than by some degree of description, and that description will not be good description, that is, will not give the pleasure expected from a work of imagination, unless it be imitative—such as makes us see the place, feel the passion, enter thoroughly into the character described. Here, the fictive imitation itself, cannot produce its proper effect, and therefore cannot be considered as good, without the assistance of descriptive.

in sonorous imitation, the resemblance is immediate, but not obvious; in the others, it is obvious, but not immediate; that is, it lies, not in the words themselves, but in the ideas which they raise as signs^c: yet as the circumstance of obvious resemblance, which may be regarded as the most striking and distinctive property of Imitation, is here found, this extension of the word seems to have more propriety than that in which it is applied to those faint and evanescent resemblances which have, not without reason, been called the echo of sound to sense^d.

4. There seems to be but one view in which Poetry can be considered as Imitation, in the strict and proper sense of the word. If we look for both immediate and obvious resemblance, we shall find it only in DRAMATIC—or to use a more general term—PERSONATIVE Poetry; that is, all Poetry in which, whether essentially or occasionally, the Poet personates; for here, speech is imitated by speech^e. The difference between
this,

^c See above, p. 5.

^d Pope's Essay on Crit. 365.—Indeed, what Ovid says of the nymph Echo [Met. iii. 358.] may be applied to this echo of imitative words and construction:—Nec prior ipsa loqui didicit. The sense of the words must speak first.

^e The drama, indeed, is said also to imitate action by action; but this is only in actual representation, where the players are the immediate imitators. In the poem itself

this, and mere narration or description, is obvious. When, in common discourse, we relate, or describe, in our own persons, we imitate in no other sense than as we raise ideas which resemble the things related or described. But when we speak as another person, we become mimics, and not only the ideas we convey, but the words, the discourse itself, in which we convey them, are imitations; they resemble, or are supposed to resemble, those of the person we represent. Now this is the case not only with the Tragic and Comic Poet, but also with the Epic Poet, and even the Historian, when either of these quits his own character, and writes a speech in the character of another person. He is then an imitator, in as strict a sense as the personal mimic.—In dramatic, and all personative Poetry, then, both the conditions of what is properly denominated Imitation, are fulfilled.

And now, the question—“ in what senses the word Imitation is, or may be applied to Poetry,”—seems to have received its answer. It appears, I think, that the term ought not to be extended beyond the four different applications which have been mentioned; and that Poetry can be justly considered as imitative, only by sound, by description, by fiction, or by personation. Whenever the itself nothing but words can be immediately copied. Gravina says well, Non è imitazione poetica quella, che non è fatta dalle parole.—[Della Trag. sect. 13.]

the Poet speaks in his own person, and, at the same time, does not either feign, or make “the sound an echo to the sense,” or stay to impress his ideas upon the fancy with some degree of that force and distinctness which we call description, he cannot, in any sense that I am aware of, be said to imitate; unless we extend imitation to all speech—to every mode of expressing our thoughts by words—merely because all words are signs of ideas, and those ideas images of things^f.

It is scarce necessary to observe, that these different species of imitation often run into, and are mixed with, each other. They are, indeed, more properly speaking, only so many distinct, abstracted views, in which Poetry may be considered as imitating. It is seldom that any of them are to be found separately; and in some of them, others are necessarily implied. Thus, dramatic imitation implies fiction, and sonorous imitation, description; though conversely, it is plainly otherwise. Descriptive imitation is, manifestly, that which is most independent on all the others. The passages in which they are all united are frequent; and those in which all are excluded, are, in the best Poetry, very rare: for the Poet of genius rarely forgets his proper language; guage; and that can scarcely be retained, at least while he relates, without more or less of colouring, of imagery, of that descriptive force which makes us see and hear. A total suspension of all his functions as an imitator is hardly to be found, but in the simple proposal of his subject^a, in his invocation^b, the expression of his own sentiments^c, or, in those calm beginnings of narration where, now and then, the Poet stoops to fact, and becomes, for a moment, little more than a metrical historian^d.

^f See Hermes, Book iii. ch. 3, p. 329, &c. And Part II. of this Diss. note ¹.

The full illustration of all this by examples, would draw out to greater length a discussion, which the reader, I fear, has already thought too long. If he will open the Æneid, or any other epic poem, and apply these remarks, he may, perhaps, find it amusing to trace the different kinds of imitation as they successively occur, in their various combinations and degrees; and to observe the Poet varying, from page to page, and sometimes

^a Arma virumque cano, Trojæ qui primus ab oris
Italian, fato profugus, Lavinaque venit Litora.

Æneid, i.

^b Musa, mihi causas memora, &c.

Ibid.

^c Tantæne animis cælestibus iræ?

— — — — —
Tantæ molis erat Romanam condere gentem. Ibid.

^d Urbs antiqua fuit, (Tyrii tenuère coloni,) Carthago, Italian contra, Tiberinaque longe Ostia, &c.

Ibid.

sometimes even from line to line, the quantity, if I may so speak, of his imitation; sometimes shifting, and sometimes, though rarely and for a moment, throwing off altogether, his imitative form.

It has been often said that ALL *Poetry is Imitation*¹. But from the preceding inquiry it appears, that, if we take Poetry in its common acceptation, for all metrical composition, the assertion is not true; not, at least, in any sense of the term Imitation but such as will make it equally true of all Speech^m. If, on the other hand, we depart from that common acceptation of the word Poetry, the assertion that "all Poetry is Imitation," seems only an improper and confused way of saying, that no composition that is not imitative ought to be called Poetry. To examine the truth of this, would be to engage in a fresh discussion totally distinct from the object of this dissertation. We have not, now, been considering what Poetry is, or how it should be defined;

¹ This expression is nowhere, that I know of, used by Aristotle. In the beginning of his treatise he asserts only that the Epic, Tragic, Comic, and Dithyrambic Poems are imitations. Le Bossu, not content with saying that "every sort of Poem in general is an Imitation," goes so far as even to alter the text of Aristotle in his marginal quotation. He makes him say, ΠΟΙΗΣΕΙΣ πασῶν τῶν γὰρ ποιημάτων ἔσται μίμησις τοῦ συνόλου.

^m See p. 33, note ^f.

defined; but only, in what sense it is an Imitative Art: or, rather, we have been examining the nature and extent of VERBAL IMITATION in general^a.

II.

THE preceding general inquiry, “in what senses the word Imitation is, or may be, applied to Poetry,” brings us with some advantage to the other question proposed, of more immediate concern to the reader of this treatise of Aristotle,—“in what senses it was so applied by HIM.”

1. It is clearly so applied by him in the sense which, from him, has, I think, most generally been adopted by modern writers—that of FICTION, as above explained^a, whether conveyed in the dramatic or personative form, or by mere narration in the person of the Poet himself^b. This appears from the whole sixth section of Part II. [of the original, ch. ix.] but especially from the last

^a Imitation, in every sense of the word that has been mentioned, is manifestly independent on metre, though being more eminently adapted to the nature and end of metrical composition, it has thence been peculiarly denominated Poetic imitation, and attributed to the Poetic Art.

^a P. 27.

^b μιμνεσθαι ἐν τῷ—ὡς ΤΟΝ ΑΤΤΟΝ καὶ ΜΗ ΜΕΤΑΒΑΛΛΟΝΤΑ. cap. 3. “The Poet may imitate, &c.—or, in his own person throughout, without change.” Part I. Sect. 4.

last paragraph, where he expressly says, that what constitutes the Poet an imitator, is the invention of a Fable: ποιητην μαλλον ΤΩΝ ΜΥΘΩΝ εἶναι δὲ ΠΟΙΗΤΗΝ ——— ὅσῳ ποιητῆς ΚΑΤΑ ΜΙΜΗΣΙΝ ἐστὶ μιμῆται δὲ ΤΑΣ ΠΡΑΞΕΙΣ^c. He repeatedly calls the fable, or Μυθός, “an imitation of an action;” but this it can be in no other sense than as it is feigned, either entirely, or in part. A history, as far, at least, as it is strictly history, is not an imitation of an action.

2. It seems equally clear, that he considered DRAMATIC Poetry as peculiarly imitative, above every other species. Hence his first rule concerning the epic or narrative imitation, that its fable “should be dramatically constructed, like that of tragedy”^d: — τὰς μυθὸς, καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς τραγωδίαις, ΔΡΑΜΑΤΙΚΟΤΕΣ:—his praise of Homer for “the dramatic spirit of his imitations:”—ὅτι καὶ ΜΙΜΗΣΕΙΣ ΔΡΑΜΑΤΙΚΑΣ ἐποίησε^e: and above all, the remarkable expression he uses, where, having laid it down as a precept that the epic Poet “should speak as little as possible in his own person,” (ΑΥΤΟΝ δὲ τοῦ ποιητῆν ἐλαχίστα λειπεῖν) he gives this reason—ΟΥ ΓΑΡ Εἰς ΚΑΤΑ ΤΑΥΤΑ ΜΙΜΗΤΗΣ: “for he is not then the IMITATOR!”

But,

^c See Mr. Harris, Philol. Inq. p. 139.

^d Part III. Sect. 1. Of the orig. ch. xxiii.

^e Part I. Sect. 6. Orig. cap. iv.

^f Part III. Sect. 3. Orig. cap. xxiv.

But, he had before expressly allowed the Poet to be an imitator even while he retains his own person^a. I see no other way of removing this apparent inconsistency, than by supposing him to speak comparatively, and to mean no more, than that the Poet is not then truly and strictly an imitator^b; or, in other words, that imitation is applicable in its strict and proper sense, only to personative poetry, as above explained; to that Poetry in which speech is represented by speech, and the resemblance, as in painting and sculpture, is immediate. I am not conscious that I am here forcing upon Aristotle a meaning that may
not

^a See above, note^b.

^b So Victorius: "amittit pené eo tempore nomen Poetæ." Castelvetro's solution of this difficulty is the same; and I find his ideas of this matter so coincident with my own, that I am induced to transcribe his words: In his comment upon the passage, he says, speaking of the dramatic part of epic poetry, "Si domanda qui " solo rassomigliativo, (i. e. imitative) non perché ancora
" quando il Poeta narra senza introducimento di persone
" à favellare, non rassomigli, ma perché le parole diritte
" poste in luogo di parole diritte, figurano, rappresentano,
" e rassomigliano MEGLIO le parole, che le parole poste in
" luogo di cose non figurano, non rappresentano, non
" rassomigliano le cose; in guisa che, in certo modo si può
" dire che il rappresentare parole con parole sia rasso-
" migliare; e il rappresentare cose con parole non sia
" rassomigliare, paragonando l'un rassomigliare con l'altro,
" &c non semplicemente." p. 554.

not be his. I seem to be only drawing a clear inference from a clear fact. It cannot be denied, that, in the passages alleged, he plainly speaks of personative Poetry as that, which peculiarly deserves the name of imitation. The inference seems obvious—that he speaks of it as peculiarly imitative, in the only sense in which it is so, as being the only species of Poetry that is strictly imitative.

I do not find in Aristotle any express application of the term, except these two. Of the other two senses in which Poetry may be, and by modern writers has been, considered as imitation—resemblance of sound, and description—he says nothing.

With respect, indeed, to the former of these, sonorous imitation, it cannot appear in any degree surprising that he should pass it over in total silence. I have already observed, that even in a general inquiry concerning the nature of the imitation attributed to Poetry, it is by no means that sense of the word which would be likely first to occur; and it would, perhaps, never have occurred at all, if, in such inquiries, we were not naturally led to compare Poetry with Painting, and other arts strictly imitative¹, and as naturally led by that comparison to admit sonorous imitation as one species, from its agreement with those strictly

¹ See above, p. 4.

strictly imitative arts in the circumstance of immediate resemblance. But no such general inquiry was the object of Aristotle's work, which is not a treatise on Poetic Imitation, but on Poetry. His subject, therefore, led him to consider, not all that might without impropriety be denominated imitation in Poetry, but that imitation only which he regarded as essential to the art ; as the source of its greatest beauties, and the foundation of its most important rules. With respect, then, to that casual and subordinate kind of imitation which is produced merely by the sound of words, it was not likely even that the idea of it should occur to him. Indeed, it is to be considered as a property of language in general, rather than of Poetry ; and of specch—of actual pronunciation—rather than of language^k. Besides that the beauties arising from this source are of too delicate and fugitive a nature to be held by rule. They must be left to the ear of the reader for their effect, and ought to be left to that of the Poet for their production.

But neither does Aristotle appear to have included description in his notion of Poetic imitation ; which, as far as he has explained it, seems to have been simply that of the imitation of human actions, manners, passions, events, &c. in feigned story ; and that, principally, when conveyed veyed in a dramatic form. Of description, indeed, important as it is to the beauty of Poetry in general, and to that of fiction itself, more particularly in the epic form, he has not said one word throughout his treatise: so far was he from extending Poetic imitation, as some have done, to that general sense which comprehends all speech¹.

^k See above, p. 5.

But here, to avoid confusion, the sense in which I have used the term description must be kept in view. When it is said that Aristotle "did not include description in his notion of "imitation," it is not meant, that he did not consider the descriptive parts of narrative Poetry as in any respect imitative. The subject of a description may be either real, or feigned. Almost all the descriptions of the higher Poetry, the Poetry

¹ Thus I. C. Scaliger, Poet. lib. vii. cap. 2. "Denique imitationem esse in OMNI SERMONE, quia verba sunt imagines rerum." He is followed by Is. Casaubon; De Rom. Satirá, cap. v. p. 340. Both these acute critics dispute warmly against Aristotle's principle, that the essence of Poetry is imitation. And they are, undoubtedly, so far in the right, that if, as they contend, the only proper sense of Poetry is that in which it is opposed to prose ("omnem metro astrictam orationem et posse et debere Poema dici." Cas. ubi sup.) then, there can be no other imitation common to all Poetry, than that which is common to all speech. See above, p. 32, 33.

Poetry of invention, are of the latter kind. These Aristotle, unquestionably, considered as imitation; but it was as fiction, not as description; —as falsehood resembling truth, or nature, in general, not as verbal expression resembling, by its force and clearness, the visible representations of painting, or the perception of the thing itself. Had he considered description in this sense as imitation, he must necessarily have admitted imitation without fiction^m. But this seems clearly contrary

^m It is obvious, that, if the imitation attributed to description consists in the clear and distinct image of the object described, every description conveying such an image to the mind must be equally considered as imitative, whether that object be real, or imaginary; that is, whether the imitation be of individual, or general nature; just as in painting, a portrait, or a landscape from nature, is as much imitation, as an historical figure, or an ideal scene of Claude Lorrain, though certainly of an inferior kind. Indeed, that which presents a real, sensible, and precise object of comparison, may even be said to be more obviously and properly imitation, than that which refers us, for its original, to a vague and general idea.— It may be objected, that this will extend imitation to all exact description; and it may be asked, whether every such description of a building, or of a machine, for instance, is to be called an imitation? I answer, that descriptions may be too exact to be imitative; too detailed and minute to present the whole strongly, as a picture. Technical descriptions are such. They may be said to describe

contrary to the whole tenor of his treatise. The beauty, indeed, of such description was well known to the ancients, and frequent examples of it are to be found in their best writers—their orators and historians, as well as Poets; and, particularly, describe every part without describing the whole. To give a complete idea of all the parts, for the mere purpose of information, and to give a strong and vivid general idea in order to please the imagination, are very different things. It is by selection, not by enumeration, that the latter purpose is to be effected. [See Dr. Beattie's Essay on Poetry and Music, Part I. ch. v. sect. 4.]—I believe it will be found, on examination, that every description, whatever be its purpose, or its subject, which does actually convey such a lively and distinct idea of the whole of any object, affords some degree of pleasure to the imagination, and is, so far, imitative; but whether it affords such a degree of that pleasure, or whether it be such in other respects, as to amount, on the whole, to what may properly be called Poetical imitation, is another question. I must again remind the reader, that the object of this Dissertation is to inquire in what senses the word imitation is applied to language in general—not to examine all the requisites of such imitation as deserves the name of POETRY. Though it has been said that all Poetry is imitation, it has never, I think, been said that all imitation is Poetry—See above, p. 28 & 29, and note^a.

What I said above, of the difference between the description of all the parts or circumstances, and the description particularly, in HOMER *. But there is one particular kind of description that may be said to be, in a great measure at least, peculiar to modern times ; I mean that which answers to landscape in painting, and of which the subject is, prospects, views, rural scenery, &c. considered merely as description of the whole by the selection of those parts or circumstances which are most striking, and characteristic of the thing described, may be illustrated by a single description of a machine, in Virgil : I mean the description of a plough, in his Georgics.

Continuo in sylvis magnâ vi flexa domatur
In burim, & CURVI formam accipit ulmus ARATRI.
Huic ab stirpe pedes temo protentus in octo,
Binæ aures, duplici aptantur dentalia dorso.
Cæditur & tilia ante jugo levis, altaque fagus,
Stivaque, quæ currus à tergo torqueat imos, &c.

I believe every reader will agree with me that the second line of this description conveys, alone, a clearer picture of a plough to the imagination, than all that follows; which indeed differs little, if we except the metre, from a mere technical description in a dictionary of arts.

* Indeed, the very existence of an appropriated term, εναγρησα, to denote the clearness and visibility of description, would alone furnish a sufficient proof of this, though every work in which it was exemplified had been lost.

as pictures—as beautiful objects to the eye†.
As the truth of this observation may not be readily

† Descriptions of rural objects in the antient writers, are almost always, what may be called sensual descriptions. They describe them not as beautiful, but as pleasant;—as pleasures, not of the imagination, but of the external senses. Of this kind is the description of a Sicilian scene in the 7th Pastoral of Theocritus, from ver. 131 to 146.—Refreshing shades, cool fountains, the singing of birds, sweet smells, boughs laden with fruit, the hum of bees, &c.—all this is charming, but it is not a landscape. [See Dr. Warton's Essay on Pope, vol. i. p. 4.] Nor does Virgil paint a landscape, though his reader may paint one for himself, when he exclaims,

- - - O qui me gelidis in vallibus Hæmi
Sistat, & ingenti ramorum protegat umbrâ.

Of the same kind is the famous description, in the Phædrus of Plato, of that spot on the banks of the Ilissus to which Socrates and Phædrus retire to read and converse together in the heat of a summer's day. The broad shade of a plane-tree, refreshing breezes, a spring, μαλα ψυχρὰ ὕδατα, to cool their feet, and, what is best of all, says Socrates,—(παντὶν κομφοτάτον) a bed of grass in which they could recline at their ease—these are the materials of the description: not a single allusion to the pleasure of the eye.—We learn from a passage that follows this description, that the country had no charms for Socrates. His apology is curious. He could “learn nothing from fields and trees.” Συγγνωσκε δὴ μοι, ὦ ἄριστε, he says to Phædrus, who had rallied him on that subject, φιλομαθῆς γὰρ εἰμι. τὰ μὲν ἐν χωρίῳ καὶ τὰ δένδρα ἔδην με θελεῖ διδάσκειν, οὐ δ' ἐν τῷ ἄγρῳ ἄνθρωποι. Phædrus, p. 230. Ed. Serrani.

readily admitted, and as the subject is curious, and has not, that I know of, been discussed, the reader will, perhaps, pardon me, if I suffer it to detain us from our direct path, in a digression of some length.

I do not mean to deny that there are some beautiful, though slight, touches of local description to be found in the antient Poets. But it must be confessed, I think, that they scattered these beauties with a sparing hand, in comparison with that rich profusion of picturesque ideas which every reader of Poetry recollects in Shakespeare, Milton, Spenser, Thomson, and almost all the modern Poets of any name. Nor can I say that I am able to point out anything of this sort in the most descriptive of the Greek Poets—in Theocritus, or even in Homer—that fairly amounts to such picturesque landscape-description (if I may call it so), as I mean, and as we find so frequently in the Poets just mentioned. In Mr. Pope's Poetical Index to his Homer, we are referred, indeed, to descriptions of "prospects," and "landscapes of a fine country;" but, if we turn to the original, we shall seldom, or never, find these landscapes. They are of Mr. Pope's painting; sometimes suggested by a single epithet, as his

- - - grassy Pteleon deck'd with chearful greens,
The bow'rs of Ceres and the sylvan scenes.

Iliad. ii. 850.

One

One word only of this description is Homer's property, "grassy," λεχεποιην". Many other instances may be found, particularly in his catalogue of the ships, which indeed he professes to have endeavoured to "make appear as much "a landscape or piece of painting as possible." [Obs. on the catalogue.] Sometimes he does more than "open the prospect a little," as he expresses it; he creates it. In his perfidious version ("Perfida—sed quamvis perfida, cara tamen!") "lofty Sesamus invades the sky;" and the river Parthenius

- - - roll'd thro' banks of flowers
Reflects her bard'ring palaces and bowers.

Ib. 1040.

In Homer, the mountain and the river are simply named; not a single epithet attends them*.

In

* Il. B. 697. The adjective, grassy, however, is by no means adequate to—λεχεποιην,—i. e. την πολλην ποσιν ἔχουσαν καὶ βαθεῖαν, ἐδαφην, ἐν ᾗ ἐστὶ καὶ ΛΕΞΑΣΘΑΙ, τρεπεῖν, ΚΟΙΜΗΘΗΝΑΙ. Hesych.—Hence, probably, Mr. Pope's bowers, &c. A single word perfectly equivalent to a single word of the original cannot always be found. In this case, a translator, unwilling to fall short of the Poet's meaning, naturally endeavours to express in more words what he has said in one; but in doing this, he will often be unavoidably reduced to the dilemma, of either misrepresenting the original, if he admits different or additional ideas, or, of weakening it by diffusion, if he does not.

* Il. B. 853, 854.

In the Index to the Odyssey, we find, among other descriptions, one, of “the landscape about Ithaca.” This has a promising appearance. Mr. Pope indeed has done his utmost to make a landscape of this description; yet, even his translation, though certainly beautiful, and even picturesque, will hardly, I believe, be thought to come up to what a modern reader would expect from —“the landscape about Ithaca.” Still less is this title applicable to the original^p. All that can be said of it without exaggeration is, that it is a very pleasing scene, though described, as many things in Homer are described, with that simplicity which leaves a great deal, and may suggest a great deal, to the fancy of the reader. Though it does not answer to the idea given of it in Pope’s index, or in the note upon the place^q, yet it must be allowed to furnish, at least, some good materials for a landscape; such as, a grove^r, water falling from a rock, and a rustic altar. If the description itself is too simple, short, and general, to be, properly speaking, picturesque description, yet it is

^p Od. P. 204—211.

^q “It is observable that Homer gives us an exact draught of the country; he sets before us, as in a picture, “the city,” &c. Od. Book xvii. note on v. 224.

^r Homer’s grove is circular; ἀλσος Παντοσε ΚΥΚΛΟΤΕΠΕΣ. ver. 209. A circumstance rather unpicturesque. Mr. Pope knew what to suppress, as well as what to add. He softens this into a “surrounding grove.”

is such as wants nothing, to become so, but a little more colouring of expression, a little more distinctness and speciality of touch. This, and more than this, Mr. Pope has given it; and that his description is, at least, highly picturesque, will scarce be disputed. Homer gives us simply—"an altar to the nymphs*." Pope covers it with moss, and embowers it deep in shades; and in his concluding line, he goes beyond the description of the place, to the description of the "religio loci"—of the effect of the place upon the minds of those who approached it.

Beneath, sequester'd to the nymphs is seen
A mossy altar, deep-embower'd in green;
Where constant vows by travellers are paid,
And holy horrors solemnize the shade.

v. 242.

—The additions of Mr. Pope's pencil are distinguished, in the above quotations, by Italics†.

But,

* — βωμῶ—νυμφῶν. v. 210.

† Many such additions and improvements the reader will also find in his translation of Homer's description of the shield, in the 18th book. To give one remarkable specimen:—The eleventh compartment of the shield, he tells us in his Observations on the Shield at the end of that book, is, "an entire landscape without human figures, an image of nature solitary and undisturbed," &c. Let us first view this landscape in the original. Il. Σ. 587.

But, to prove the inferiority of the antients in this species of description, by an accurate and comparative examination of all those passages which are commonly produced as examples of it, would be a task of considerable length, though, I think, of no great difficulty. The few instances here given from Homer are intended rather as illustrations of the difference I meant to point out,

Εν δὲ νομον ποιησε περικλυτὸς Ἀμφιγυγίης,
 Ἐν καλῇ θήσση, μέγαν οἶον ἀργενῶαν,
 Σταθμὸς τε, κλισίας τε, κατηρεφέας ἰδε σῆκας.

What I said of the simplicity and generality of the description last mentioned, in the Odyssey, is exactly applicable to this. Even in his prose-translation of these lines, [Obs. p. 123.] Mr. Pope could not perfectly command his fancy. "The divine artist then engraved a large flock of white sheep, feeding along a beautiful valley. Innumerable folds, cottages, and enclosed shelters, were SCATTERED through the PROSPECT." The expressions I have distinguished are Mr. Pope's; their effect on the visibility and distinctness of the picture, I need not point out. The last addition—"scattered through the prospect," is particularly picturesque.—Now, let us turn to his poetic version, and there, indeed, we shall find that finished landscape of which Homer furnished only the simple sketch:

Next this, the eye the art of Vulcan leads Deep through fair forests, and a length of meads;
And stalls, and folds, and scatter'd cots between,
And fleecy flocks that whiten all the scene.

out, than as proofs of the general fact, which I leave to the recollection and the judgment of the reader. To me, I confess, nothing appears more evident.

And may we not account for this defect in antient Poetry, from a similar defect in the sister art of PAINTING?—For it appears, I think, from all that has been transmitted to us of the history of that art among the antients, that landscape-painting either did not exist, or, at least, was very little cultivated or regarded among the Greeks*. In Pliny's account of Grecian artists we find no landscape-painter mentioned; nor anything like a landscape described in his catalogue
of

* The Abbé Winckelmann, eminent for the accuracy of his researches into every thing relative to the subject of antient arts, gives it as his opinion, that the paintings discovered in the ruins of Herculaneum, (four only excepted,) are not older than the times of the Emperors; and he assigns this reason, among others, that most of them are only landscapes:—"Paysages, ports, maisons de campagne, chasses, pêches, vues, &c que le premier qui travailla dans ce genre fut un certain Ludio qui vivoit du tems d'Auguste." He adds,—"Les anciens Grecs ne s'amusoient pas à peindre des objets inanimés, uniquement propres à rejouir agréablement la vue sans occuper l'esprit." [Hist. de l'Art chez les Anciens, tome ii. p. 104.] The remark seems just. Men and manners, were the only objects which the Greeks seem to have thought worth regarding, either in painting, or poetry.

of their principal works. The first, and the only landscapes he mentions, are those said to be painted in fresco by one Ludius in the time of Augustus; “qui primus instituit amœnissimam parietum picturam;—villas, & porticus, ac topiaria opera—lucos, nemora, colles,—amnes, littora—varias ibi obambulantium species, aut navigantium, terræque villas adeuntium asellis aut vehiculis,” &c.—He likewise painted seaports;—“idemque——maritimas urbes pingere instituit, blandissimo aspectu.” He seems to have been the Claude Lorrain of antient painting. But, that landscape was not, even in Pliny’s time, a common and established branch of painting, may perhaps be presumed from the single circumstance of its not having acquired a name. In the passage just quoted, Pliny calls it only, periphrastically, “an agreeable kind of painting, or subject,” “amœnissimam picturam.” He is not sparing of technical terms upon other occasions; as, rhyparographus, anthropographus, catagrapha, monocromata, &c. With ▼ Plin. Hist. Nat. xxxv. 10.

■ It is remarkable also, that the younger Pliny, where he describes the view from one of his villas, and compares it to a painted landscape, expresses himself, probably for want of an appropriated term, (such as paysage, &c.) by a periphrasis;—“formam aliquam ad eximiam pulchritudinem pictam;”—i. e. “a beautiful ideal landscape.” Plin. Ep. lib. v. ep. 6.

With respect to the Greeks, at least, this may be allowed to afford somewhat more than a presumption of the fact.

The Greek Poets, then, did not describe the scenery of nature in a picturesque manner, because they were not accustomed to see it with a painter's eye. Undoubtedly they were not blind to all the beauties of such scenes; but those beauties were not heightened to them, as they are to us, by comparison with painting—with those models of improved and selected nature, which it is the business of the landscape-painter to exhibit. They had no THOMSONS, because they had no CLAUDES. Indeed, the influence of painting, in this respect, not only on Poetry, but on the general taste for the visible beauties of rural nature, seems obvious and indisputable †. Shew the most beautiful prospect to a peasant, who never saw a landscape, or read a description: I do not say that he will absolutely feel no pleasure from it; but I will venture to say, that the pleasure

† I do not know that there is, either in the Greek or Roman language, any single term appropriated to express exactly what we mean by a prospect. Pliny, in the epistle referred to in note², and in the 17th of 2d book, has frequent occasion for such a term, but is obliged to have recourse to circumlocution—regionis forma—regionis situm—facies—facies locorum. “Tot facies locorum totidem fenestris & distinguit & miscet.” [ii. 17.] Ang.—“so many prospects.”

pleasure he will feel is very different in kind, and very inferior in degree, compared with that which is felt by a person of a cultivated imagination, accustomed to the representation of such objects, either in painting, or in picturesque Poetry. Such beauty does imitation reflect back upon the object imitated⁷.—What may serve to confirm the truth of these remarks, is, that from the time of Augustus, when, according to Pliny, landscape-painting was first cultivated, descriptions of prospects, picturesque imagery, and allusions to that kind of painting, seem to have become more common. I do not pretend, however, to have accurately examined this matter. I shall only remind the reader of the acknowledged superiority of Virgil in touches of this kind; of Pliny's description of the view from his villa, mentioned above; and of Ælian's description of the Vale of Tempe, and his allusion to painting in the introduction to it⁸.

To return to description in general;—this, as I observed above, Aristotle was so far from including

⁷ "Elegant imitation has strange powers of interesting us in certain views of nature. These we consider but transiently, till the Poet, or Painter, awake our attention, and send us back to life with a new curiosity, which we owe entirely to the copies which they lay before us." Preface to Wood's Essay on Homer, p. 13.

⁸ See above, Part I. note^m, p. 14.

cluding in his notion of imitation, that he is even totally silent concerning it; unless he may be thought slightly to allude to it in one passage, where he recommends it to the Poet to reserve his highest colouring of language for the inactive, that is, the merely narrative, or descriptive, parts of his poem*. Several obvious circumstances help to account for this silence. Intent on the higher precepts, and on what he regarded as the more essential beauties of the art—the internal construction and contrivance of the fable, the artful dependence and close connection of the incidents, the union of the wonderful and the probable, the natural delineation of character and passion, and whatever tended most effectually to arrest the attention, and secure the emotion, of the spectator or the reader—intent on these, he seems to have thought the beauties of language and expression a matter of inferior consideration, scarce worthy of his attention. The chapters on diction seem to afford some proof of this. The manner in which he has treated that subject, will be found, if I mistake not, to bear strong marks of this comparative negligence, and to be, in several respects, not such as the reader, from the former parts of the work, would naturally expect^b.

To

* 'Εν τοῖς ΑΡΧΟΙΣ μέρει, καὶ μὴτε ἡθικοῖς, μὴτε διανοητικοῖς.
Cap. xxiv. Translation, Part III. Sect. 6. See the NOTE.

^b See the NOTES on that part.

To this it should be added, that Aristotle's principal object was, evidently, Tragedy. Now in Tragedy, where the Poet himself appears not,—where all is action, emotion, imitation—where the succession of incidents is close and rapid, and rarely admits those ἀργα μέρη, those “idle or inactive parts,” of which the philosopher speaks—there is, of course, but little occasion, and little room, for description. It is in the open and extended plan, the varied and digressive narration, of the Epic form, that the descriptive powers of the Poet have full range to display themselves within their proper province.

I have attempted, in the preceding discussion, to make my way through a subject, which I have never seen treated in a manner perfectly clear and satisfactory by others, and which I am therefore far from confident that I have treated clearly myself. I can only hope that I have, at least, left it less embarrassed than I found it^c. I shall venture,

^c Some writers, by imitation understand fiction only: others explain it only by the general term description; and others, again, give it a greater extent, and seem to consider language as imitating whatever it can express. [See above, note¹, and Harris on Music, &c. ch. i.] Some speak of it as the imitation of nature, in general; others seem to confine it to the imitation of la belle nature.—By some writers, the proposition, that “ALL venture, with the same view, to terminate this inquiry by a few remarks on the origin of this doctrine of poetic imitation.

Its history may be sketched in few words.—We find it first in PLATO; alluded to in many parts of his works, but no where so clearly and particularly developed, as in the third and tenth books of his Republic. ARISTOTLE followed; applying, and pursuing to its consequences, with the enlarged view of a philosopher and a critic, the principle which his master had considered with the severity of a moral censor, and had described, as we describe an impostor or a robber, only, that being known, it might be avoided^d.

From these sources, but principally from the treatise of Aristotle, this doctrine was derived, through the later antient, to the latest modern writers. In general, however, it must be confessed, that the way in which the subject has been explained is not such as is calculated to give perfect

POETRY is imitation," is considered as too plain a point to need any explanation; while others are unable to see why any Poetry, except the dramatic only, should be so denominated. [See Wood's Essay on Homer, p. 240, octavo, and the note.]

^d The chief objections of Plato to imitative Poetry, particularly Tragedy, may be seen in the 10th book of his Republic; from πραττοντας, φασιν, ανθρωπος—p. 603, C. to εμψυχη, p. 608, B. Ed. Serrani.

perfect satisfaction to those fastidious understandings that are not to be contented with anything less than distinct ideas; that, like the sundial in the fable, allow of no medium between knowing clearly, and knowing nothing.

Si je ne vois bien clair, je dis—Je n'en sçais rien*.

It is one question, in what senses, and from what original ideas, Poetry was first called imitation by Plato and Aristotle; and another, what senses may have suggested themselves to modern writers, who finding Poetry denominated an imitative art, instead of carefully investigating the original meaning of the expression, have had recourse, for its explication, to their own ideas, and have, accordingly, extended it to every sense which the widest and most distant analogy would bear.

With respect to the origin of the appellation—the very idea that Poetry is imitation, may, I think, evidently be traced to the THEATRE as to its natural source; and it may, perhaps, very reasonably be questioned, whether, if the drama had never been invented, Poetry would ever have been placed in the class of Imitative Arts.

That ARISTOTLE drew his ideas of Poetic imitation chiefly from the drama, is evident from what has been already said. His preference, indeed,

* La Montre et le Quadran, in the ingenious and philosophical fables of La Motte. Livre iii. fab. 2.

indeed, of dramatic Poetry, is not only openly declared in his concluding chapter, but strongly marked throughout, and by the very plan and texture of his work. The Epic—that “greatest work,” as Dryden extravagantly calls it, “which the soul of man is capable to perform^f,” is slightly touched and soon dismissed. Our eye is still kept on Tragedy. The form and features of the Epic Muse are rather described by comparison with those of her sister, than delineated as they are in themselves; and though that preference which is the result of the comparison seems justly given on the whole, yet it must, perhaps, be confessed, that the comparison is not completely stated, and that the advantages and privileges of the Epic are touched with some reserve^g. It is, indeed, no wonder, that he, who held imitation to be the essence of Poetry, should prefer

^f Pref. to his Æneid.

^g For example:—in Part III. sect. 2. [Orig. ch. xxiv.] he had allowed the greater extent of the Epic Poem to give it an advantage over Tragedy in point of variety and magnificence. But, in the comparison between them in his last chapter, this important advantage is entirely passed over, and only the disadvantages of the epic extent of plan are mentioned; its variety, the want of which he had before allowed to be a great defect, and even a frequent cause of ill success, in tragedy, is here stated only as a fault—as want of unity. [See Part V. sect. 3. Orig. cap. xxvi.] prefer that species which, being more strictly imitative, was, in his view, more strictly Poetry, than any other.

With respect to PLATO the case is still plainer. In the third book of his Republic, where he treats the subject most fully, and is most clear and explicit, he is so far from considering "all Poetry" as imitation, that he expressly distinguishes imitative Poetry from "Poetry without imitation." Nor does he leave us in any uncertainty about his meaning. His imitative Poetry is no other than that which I have called personative, and which the reader will find clearly and precisely described in the passage referred to¹. Imitation, then, he confines to the drama, and the dramatic part of the epic poem; and that, which with Aristotle is the principal, with Plato is the only, sense of imitation applied to Poetry. In short, that Plato drew his idea of the ΜΙΜΗΣΙΣ of Poetry from the theatre itself, and from the personal imitations of represented tragedy, is evident from the manner in which he explains the term, and from the general cast and language of all his illustrations and allusions.—"When the Poet," he says, "quitting his narration, makes any speech in the character of another person, does he not then assimilate, as much as possible,

" sible,

¹ Rep. 3. ed. Ser. p. 393. ἀνευ μίμησεως ποίησις. and lib. x. p. 605. ὁ μίμητικὸς ποιητής.

¹ Rep. 3, from D. p. 392, to D. p. 394. ed. Ser.

“sible, his language to that of the person introduced as speaking?—Certainly.—But to assimilate one’s self to another person, either in VOICE or GESTURE—is not this to IMITATE that person^k?” And in many other passages we find the same allusion to the imitations, by voice and action, of the actor and the rhapsodist; and even to ludicrous mimicry of the lowest kind^l.

All

^k Ἀλλ’ ὅταν γε τινα λεγῇ ῥῆσιν ὡς τις ἀλλ’ ὧν, ἀρ’ οὐ τότε ὁμοίον αὐτὸν φησομεν ὀτιμαλίστα τὴν αὐτὴν λέξιν ἑκάστῳ ὃν ἂν προσέπῃ ὡς ἔρρητα;—Φησομεν τι γὰρ ἔ;—Ὅυκ ἐν το γε ὁμοίον ἑαυτὸν ἀλλῶ, ἢ κατὰ ΦΩΝΗΝ, ἢ κατὰ ΣΧΗΜΑ, μιμεισθαι εἶναι ἐπεσινον ἢ ἂν τις ὁμοίος; Rep. 3, p. 393. ed. Serran.

^l Ibid. p. 395—κατὰ ΣΩΜΑ καὶ ΦΩΝΑΣ.—p. 397, λέξεις δια μιμήσεως ΦΩΝΑΙΣ τε καὶ ΣΧΗΜΑΣΙ. The reader may also see p. 396 and 397; in both which places he alludes even to the lowest and most ridiculous kind of mimicry. The passages are so curious and amusing, that the reader will pardon me if I suffer them, in a note, to lead me into a short digression. He speaks in them of imitating, or, as we call it, taking off, “the neighing of horses, and the bellowing of bulls—the sound of thunder, the roaring of the sea and the winds—the tones of the trumpet, the flute, and all sorts of instruments—the barking of dogs, the bleating of sheep, and the singing of birds—the rattle of a shower of hail; and the rumbling of wheels.”—The sublime Plato was not always sublime.—The expressions here are too strong to be understood merely of the imitations of poetical description; they are applicable only to vocal mimicry.

All this will scarce appear strange or surprising, if we recollect the close connection which then subsisted between poetical and personal imitation. It was by no means with the antients as it is with us. Before the multiplication of copies was facilitated mimicry. Were there any doubt of this, it might be sufficiently removed by other passages of antient authors in which similar feats are recorded. Plutarch, [De aud. Post. ed. H. Steph. p. 31.] commenting upon Aristotle's distinction, Part I. § 5, between the pleasure we receive from the imitation, and that which we receive from the real object, observes, that—"though the grunting of a hog, the rattle of wheels, the whistling of the wind, and the roaring of the sea, for instance, are sounds, in themselves offensive and disagreeable, yet when we hear them well and naturally imitated, they give us pleasure." And he records the names of two eminent performers in this way, Parmeno, and Theodorus; the first of whom possessed the grunt of the hog, and the other the rattle of the wheel, in high perfection.—This Theodorus was, probably, a different person from the tragic actor of the same name, whose vocal talents of a higher kind are mentioned by Aristotle in his Rhetoric, (lib. iii. cap. 1.) and who was eminent for the power of accommodating the tone of his voice to the various characters he represented. "The voice," says the philosopher, "of Theodorus appears always to be that of the very person supposed to speak: not so the voices of other actors." In order fully to understand which praise, it is necessary to recollect, that this vocal flexibility in an actor had far greater room to display itself among facilitated by the invention of printing, reading was uncommon. It was not even till long after, that it became, in any degree, the general practice, as it is now. Yet Poetry, we know, among the Greeks, was the common food even of the vulgar.

But

the antients, than it has with us, on account of the exclusion of women from their stage. Hence one of the objections of Plato to the admission of dramatic Poetry into his Republic : ἔδη ἐπιτρέφομεν ὧν φάμεν κηδεσθαι, καὶ δεῖν αὐτοὺς ἀνδράς ἀγαθὰς γενεσθαι, ΓΥΝΑΙΚΑ ΜΙΜΕΙΣΘΑΙ, ΑΝΔΡΑΣ ΟΝΤΑΣ. κ. τ. αλ. [Rep. 3. p. 395, D.]— a passage which may also serve to confirm what has been asserted, that Plato, in speaking of Poetry as imitation, constantly kept his eye on the personal imitation of the actor or the rhapsodist.—To return to the art of vocal mimicry :—the passages above produced shew it to have been of very respectable antiquity. But there are two other passages that make it still more venerable; one in the hymn to Apollo attributed to Homer, v. 162, 3, 4,—where the musical imitations of the Delian virgins are described ; (see Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 372.) and another very curious passage in the Odyssey, Δ. 279, by which it appears, that the art was practised even in the Trojan times, and that the beautiful HELEN herself, among her other charms, possessed the talent of vocal mimicry in a degree that would, in modern times, have qualified her to make no inconsiderable figure at Bartholomew-fair. She is described as walking round the wooden horse, after its admission within the walls of Troy, calling, by name, upon each of the Grecian chiefs, and “imitating the voices of their wives.”—ΠΑΡΕΩΝ ΑΓΓΕΛΙΑΝ
ΦΩΝΗ

But they heard it only. The philosopher, the critic, and the few who collected books when they could be obtained only by the labour or expence of transcription, might, indeed, take a tragedy or an epic poem into their closets; but, to the generality, all was action, representation, and φῶτον ἰσχυρ' ἀποχαισι. And so well did she take them off, that their husbands were on the point of betraying themselves by answering, or coming out. Anticlus, in particular, would have spoken, if Ulysses had not, by main force, stopped his mouth with his hand, till Minerva came to their relief, and took Helen away.

- - - ἀλλ' Οδυσσεύς ΕΠΙ ΜΑΣΤΑΚΑ ΧΕΡΕΙ ΠΙΕΖΕ
ΝΩΛΕΜΕΩΣ ΚΡΑΤΕΡΗΣΙ, σάωσε δὲ πάντας Ἀχαιούς! — Od. Δ. 287, 8.

A line added in Pope's translation of this passage, affords a curious example of misapplied ornament:—

Firm to his lips his forceful hands apply'd,
Till on his tongue the flutt'ring murmurs dy'd.

B. iv. v. 391.

— one instance out of many that might be quoted, of the ridiculous effect produced, (especially in the Odyssey,) by continual efforts to elevate what neither should nor can be elevated. In the version of the 16th book, (a version approved at least by Mr. Pope) we have this line:

They reach'd the dome; the dome with marble shin'd.

v. 41.

— who would suspect this to be a description of the rude building which Eumæus, “αὐτῷ δειμάθ' ἕσσιν?” [Lib. xiv. 8.] All that is to be found of this marble dome in Homer is a “stone threshold.”—ὑπερβη λαυρὸν ἄδου! v. 41.

and recital. The tragic, and even the epic poet, were, in a manner, lost in the actor and the rhapsodist^m. A tragedy not intended for the stage, would have appeared to the antients as great an absurdity as an ode not written for music. With them, there could be no difficulty in conceiving Poetry to be an Imitative Art, when it was scarce known to them but through the visible medium of arts, strictly and literally, mimetic.

^m The rhapsodist was defined to be, the actor of an epic Poem. Ραψῳδοί—ὑποκριταὶ ἑπῶν. Hesych.—Ραψῳδοί—οἱ τὰ Ὅμηρον ἔπη ἐν τοῖς θεατροῖς ἀπαγγέλλοντες.—Suidas. “Homer’s Poems,” says the ingenious and entertaining author of the Enquiry into the Life and Writings of Homer, “were made to be recited, or sung to a company; and “not read in private, or perused in a book, which few “were then capable of doing: and I will venture to “affirm, that whoever reads not Homer in this view, “loses a great part of the delight he might receive from “the Poet.”—Blackwell’s Enquiry, &c. p. 122.

DISSERTATION II.

ON THE DIFFERENT SENSES OF THE
WORD, IMITATIVE,
AS APPLIED TO MUSIC BY THE ANTIENTS,
AND BY THE MODERNS.

THE whole power of Music may be reduced, I think, to three distinct effects ;—upon the ear, the passions, and the imagination: in other words, it may be considered as simply delighting the sense, as raising emotions, or, as raising ideas. The two last of these effects constitute the whole of what is called the *moral, or expressive, power of Music ; and in these only we are to look for anything that can be called imitation. Music can be said to imitate, no farther than as it expresses something. As far as its effect is merely physical, and confined to the ear, it gives a simple, original pleasure ; it expresses nothing, it refers to nothing ; it is no more imitative than the smell of a rose, or the flavour of a pine-apple.

Music

* Moral, merely as opposed to physical :—as affecting the mind ; not as Ethic, or influencing the manners.

Music can raise ideas, immediately^a, only by the actual resemblance of its sounds and motions to the sounds and motions of the thing suggested^b. Such Music we call imitative, in the same sense in which we apply the word to a similar resemblance of sound and motion in poetry^c. In both cases, the resemblance, though immediate, is so imperfect, that it cannot be seen till it is, in some sort, pointed out; and even when it is so, is not always very evident. Poetry, indeed, has here a great advantage; it carries with it, of necessity, its own explanation: for the same word that imitates by its sound, points out, or hints, at least, the imitation, by its meaning. With Music it is not

^a Music may raise ideas immediately, by mere association; but I pass over the effects of this principle, (important and powerful as it is, in Music, as in everything else,) as having nothing to do with imitation. If, to raise an idea of any object by casual association, be to imitate, any one thing may imitate any other.

I inserted the word, immediately, because Music has also a power of raising ideas, to a certain degree, through the medium of emotions, which naturally suggest correspondent ideas; that is, such ideas as usually raise such emotions. [See Harris, on Music, &c. ch. vi. and below; note^d.]

^b See Harris, ibid. ch. ii. where this subject is treated with the author's usual accuracy and clearness.

^c See Dissert. I.

not so. It must call in the assistance of language, or something equivalent to language, for its interpreter^d.

Of all the powers of Music, this of raising ideas by direct resemblance is confessed to be the weakest, and the least important. It is, indeed, so far from being essential to the pleasure of the art, that unless used with great caution, judgment, and delicacy, it will destroy that pleasure, by becoming, to every competent judge, offensive, or ridiculous. It is, however, to Music of this kind only that Mr. Harris, and most other modern writers, allow the word imitative to be applied.

^d When the idea to be raised is that of a visible object, the imitation of that object by painting, machinery, or other visible representation, may answer the same end.—A visible object strongly characterized by motion, may be suggested by such musical motion as is analogous to it. Thus, a rapid elevation of sounds, bears, or at least is conceived to bear, some analogy to the motion of flame;—but this analogy must be pointed out—“ Il faut que l’auditeur soit averti, ou par les paroles, ou par le spectacle, ou par quelque chose d’équivalent, qu’il doit substituer l’idée du feu à celle du son.” See M. Dalember’s Melanges de Literature, vol. v. p. 158,—where the philosophical reader will, perhaps, be pleased with some very ingenious and uncommon observations, on the manner in which the imitative expression even of Music without words, may be influenced by the phraseology of the language in which the hearer thinks.

applied*. The highest power of Music, and that from which "it derives its greatest efficacy," is, undoubtedly, its power of raising emotions. But this is so far from being regarded by them as imitation, that it is expressly opposed to it†.

The ideas, and the language, of the antients, on this subject, were different. When they speak of Music as imitation, they appear to have solely, or chiefly, in view, its power over the affections. By imitation, they mean, in short, what we commonly distinguish from imitation, and oppose to it, under the general term of expression‡. With respect to ARISTOTLE, in particular, this will clearly appear from a few passages which I shall produce from another of his writings; and, at the same time, the expressions made use of in these passages, will help us to account for a mode of speaking so different from that of modern writers on the subject.

What

* Dr. Beattie, On Poetry and Music, p. 138, & passim.—Lord Kaimes, El. of Crit. vol. ii. p. 1. Avison, &c.—There is but one branch of this imitation of sound by sound, that is really important; and that has been generally overlooked. I mean, the imitation of the tones of speech.—Of this, presently.

† Harris, On Music, &c. p. 69, 99, 100.

‡ "If we compare imitation with expression, the superiority of the latter will be evident."—Dr. Beattie, On Poetry and Music, p. 139, 140, &c.—Avison, on Mus. Expression, Part II. § 3.

What Aristotle, in the beginning of his treatise on Poetry*, calls ΜΙΜΗΣΙΣ—IMITATION—he elsewhere, in the same application of it, to Music, calls ὍΜΟΙΩΜΑ—RESEMBLANCE. And he, also, clears up his meaning farther, by adding the thing resembled or imitated^b:—ὁμοιωμα τοῖς ἡέσι—ὁμοιωματα τῶν ἡέων^c—“resemblance to human manners,” i. e. dispositions, or tempers; for what he means by these ἡέη, he has, likewise, clearly explained by these expressions—ὁμοιωματα ὀργῆς καὶ πρᾶοῦτος· ἐν δ’ ἀνδρίας καὶ σὺφορσῆς, &c. “resemblances of the irascible “and the gentle disposition—of fortitude and “temperance, &c.”^k This resemblance, he expressly tells us, is “in the rhythm and the melody :”

* καὶ τῆς αἰλητικῆς ἢ πλεῖστη, καὶ καθαριστικῆς — μίμησις. — See Sect. I. of the translation.

^b In the same passage he uses the word μίμημα, as synonymous with ὁμοιωμα.

^c Arist. de Repub. lib. viii. cap. 5, p. 455, Ed. Duval. Plato uses μίμηματα τροπῶν in the same sense. De leg. lib. ii. p. 655, Ed. Ser.

^k The word, ἡέη, taken in its utmost extent, includes everything that is habitual and characteristic; but it is often used in a limited sense, for the habitual temper, or disposition. That it is here used in that sense appears from Aristotle's own explanation. I therefore thought it necessary to fix the sense of the word manners, which has the same generality as ἡέη, and is its usual translation, by adding the words “dispositions or tempers.”

melody:”—ἁμεινωμένα — ἐν τοῖς ΠΡΩΜΟΙΣ καὶ τοῖς ΜΕΛΕΣΙΝ, ὀργῆς καὶ πραότητος¹. In these passages, Aristotle differs only in the mode of expression from Mr. Harris, when he affirms that “there are sounds to make us chearful or sad, martial or tender,” &c.^m:—from Dr. Beattie, when he says, “Music may inspire devotion, fortitude, compassion;—may infuse a sorrow,” &c.”

It appears then, in the first place, that Music, considered as affecting, or raising emotions, was called imitation by the antients, because they perceived in it that which is essential to all imitation, and is, indeed, often spoken of as the same thing—resemblance°. This resemblance, however,

¹ The same expressions occur in the Problems, Sect. xix. Prob. 29 and 27.

^m Chap. vi.

ⁿ On Poet. and Mus. p. 167.—In another place Dr. Beattie approaches very near indeed to the language of Aristotle; he says, “After all, it must be acknowledged, that there is some relation, at least, or analogy, if not SIMILITUDE, between certain musical sounds, and mental affections, &c.” [p. 143.]

° “Imitations, or resemblances, of something else.” [Hutcheson’s Inquiry into the Orig. of our Ideas of Beauty, &c. p. 15.] “Taking imitation in its proper sense, as importing a resemblance between two objects.” [Lord Kaimes, El. of Crit. ch. xviii. § 3.] Imitation, indeed, necessarily implies resemblance; but the converse is not true.

however, as here stated by Aristotle, cannot be immediate^p; for between sounds themselves, and mental affections, there can be no resemblance. The resemblance can only be a resemblance of effect :—the general emotions, tempers, or feelings produced in us by certain sounds, are like those that accompany actual grief, joy, anger, &c.—And this, as far, at least, as can be collected from the passage in question, appears to be all that Aristotle meant.

But, secondly;—the expressions of Music considered in itself, and without words, are, (within certain limits,) vague, general, and equivocal. What is usually called its power over the passions, is, in fact, no more than a power of raising a general emotion, temper, or disposition, common to several different, though related, passions; as pity, love—anger, courage, &c.^q The effect of words, is, to strengthen the expression of Music, by confining it—by giving it a precise direction, supplying it with ideas, circumstances, and an object, and, by this means, raising it from a calm and general disposition, or emotion, into something approaching, at least, to the stronger feeling of a particular and determinate passion. Now, among among the antients, Music, it is well known, was scarce ever heard without this assistance. Poetry and Music were then far from having reached that state of mutual independence, and separate improvement, in which they have now been long established. When an ancient writer speaks of MUSIC, he is, almost always, to be understood to mean vocal Music—Music and Poetry united. This helps greatly to account for the application of the term imitative, by Aristotle, Plato, and other Greek writers, to musical expression, which modern writers oppose to musical imitation. That emotions are raised by Music, independently of words, is certain^r; and it is as certain that these emotions resemble those of actual passion, temper, &c.—But, in the vague and indeterminate assimilations of Music purely instrumental, though the effect is felt, and the emotion raised, the idea of resemblance is far from being necessarily suggested; much less is it likely, that such resemblance, if it did occur, having no precise direction, should be considered as imitation^s. Add words to this Music, ^r This is expressly allowed by Aristotle in the Problem which will presently be produced:—καὶ γὰρ ἐὰν ᾖ ἄΝΕΤ ΛΟΓΟΤ μελῶν, ὁμῶς ἔχει ΗΘΟΣ.

^p See Dissert. I. first pages.

^q The expression of Aristotle seems therefore accurate and philosophical. It is everywhere—ὁμοιωμα ΗΘΩΝ,—not ΠΑΘΩΝ—a resemblance “to manners, or tempers,” not “to passions.”

^s I observed (*Note ) that Music is capable of raising ideas, to a certain degree, through the medium of those emotions which it raises immediately. But this is an effect so delicate and uncertain—so dependent on the fancy, the sensibility,

Music, and the case will be very different. There is now a precise object of comparison presented to sensibility, the musical experience, and even the temporary disposition, of the hearer, that to call it imitation, is surely going beyond the bounds of all reasonable analogy. Music, here, is not imitative, but if I may hazard the expression, merely suggestive. But, whatever we may call it, this I will venture to say,—that in the best instrumental Music, expressively performed, the very indecision itself of the expression, leaving the hearer to the free operation of his emotion upon his fancy, and, as it were, to the free choice of such ideas as are, to him, most adapted to react upon and heighten the emotion which occasioned them, produces a pleasure, which nobody, I believe, who is able to feel it, will deny to be one of the most delicious that Music is capable of affording. But far the greater part even of those who have an ear for Music, have only an ear; and to them this pleasure is unknown.—The complaint, so common, of the separation of Poetry and Music, and of the total want of meaning and expression in instrumental Music, was never, I believe, the complaint of a man of true musical feeling: and it might, perhaps, be not unfairly concluded, that Aristotle, who expressly allows that “Music, even without words, has expression,” [See the Problem below] was more of a musician than his master Plato, who is fond of railing at instrumental Music, and asks with Fontenelle,—“Sonate, que me veux tu?—παχαλαπτον, ἀπεν λογις γιγνομενον ρυθμον τε και ἁρμονιαν γιγνωσκειν, Ὅ, ΤΙ BOTAETAL. De Leg. ii. p. 669. [The story of Fontenelle is well known.—“Je n’oublierai jamais,” says Rousseau, “la saillie du celebre Fontenelle, qui se trouvant excédé to the mind; the resemblance is pointed out; the thing imitated is before us. Farther, one principal use of Music in the time of Aristotle, was to accompany dramatic Poetry—that Poetry which is most peculiarly and strictly *imitative, and where manners and passions (ἦθος καὶ πάθος) are peculiarly the objects of imitation.

It is, then, no wonder, that the Antients, accustomed to hear the expressions of Music thus constantly specified, determined, and referred to a precise object by the ideas of Poetry, should view them in the light of imitations; and that even in speaking of Music, properly so called, as Aristotle does, they should be led by this association to speak of it in the same terms, and to attribute to it powers, which, in its separate state, do not, in strictness, belong to it. With respect, however,

“ de ces eternelles symphonies, s'écria tout haut dans un transport d'impatience: Sonate, que me veux tu?” Dict. de Mus.—SONATE.] I would by no means be understood to deny, that there is now, and has been at all times, much unmeaning trash composed for instruments, that would justly provoke such a question. I mean only to say, what has been said for me by a superior judge and master of the art:—“ There is some kind, even of instrumental music, so divinely composed, and so expressively performed, that it wants no words to explain its meaning.”—Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 85.

* Diss. I.

however, even to the instrumental Music of those times, it should be remembered, that we cannot properly judge of it by our own, nor suppose it to have been, in that simple state of the art, what it is now, in its state of separate improvement and refinement. It seems highly probable that the Music of the antients, even in performances merely instrumental, retained much of its vocal style and character, and would therefore appear more imitative than our instrumental Music: and perhaps, after all, a Greek Solo on the flute, or the cithara, was not much more than a song without the words, embellished here and there with a little embroidery, or a few sprinklings of simple arpeggio, such as the fancy, and the fingers, of the player could supply.

But there is another circumstance that deserves to be considered. Dramatic Music is, often, strictly imitative. It imitates, not only the effect of the words, by exciting correspondent emotions, but also the words themselves immediately, by tones, accents, inflexions, intervals, and rhythmical movements, similar to those of speech. That this was peculiarly the character of the dramatic Music of the antients, seems highly probable, not only from what is said of it by antient authors, but from what we know of their Music in general; of their scales, their genera, their fondness for chromatic and enharmonic intervals, which approach so nearly to those sliding and unassignable inflexions, inflexions, (if I may so speak,) that characterize the melody of speech.

I am, indeed, persuaded, that the analogy between the melody and rhythm of Music, and the melody and rhythm of *speech, is a principle of greater extent and importance than is commonly imagined. Some writers have extended it so far as to resolve into it the whole power of Music over the affections. Such appears to have been the idea of Rousseau. He divides all Music into natural and imitative; including, under the latter denomination, all Music that goes beyond the mere pleasure of the sense, and raises any kind or degree of emotion; an effect which he conceives to be wholly owing to an imitation, more or less perceptible, of the accents and inflexions of the voice in animated or passionate speech†. Professor Hutcheson was of the same opinion. In his Inquiry concerning Beauty, &c. he says—"There is also another charm in Music
" to various persons, which is distinct from the " harmony, and is occasioned by its raising
" agreeable passions. The human voice is ob" viously

* ——— λεγεται γαρ δη και ΛΟΓΩΔΕΣ ΤΙ ΜΕΛΟΣ, το συγκειμενον εκ των προσωδων των εν τοις ονομασι. [Ariston. Harm. i. p. 18. Ed. Meibom.] To this he opposes—ΜΟΥΣΙΚΟΝ ΜΕΛΟΣ.

† Dict. de Mus. Art. MUSIQUE—MELODIE, &c.

“ viously varied by all the stronger passions ” ;
 “ now when our ear discerns any resemblance “ between the air of a tune, whether sung, or “ played upon an instrument, either in its time “ or modulation, or any other circumstance, to “ the sound of the human voice in any passion, we “ shall be touched by it in a very sensible manner,
 “ and have melancholy, joy, gravity, thought- “ fulness, excited in us by a sort of sympathy or “ contagion.”

* Thus THEOPHRASTUS, in a curious passage cited by Plutarch in his Symposiacs, p. 623, Ed. Xyl.—Μουσικῆς ἀρχαὶ τρεῖς εἶναι, ΛΥΠΗΝ, ΗΔΟΝΗΝ, ΕΝΘΟΥΣΙΑΣΜΟΝ· αἷς ἕκαστὴ τῶν παρατρέποντος ἐκ τῆς συνήθους καὶ ἐγκλινομένη τῇ φωνῇ.—“ There are three principles of Music, grief, “ pleasure, and enthusiasm; for each of these passions “ turns the voice from its usual course, and gives it in“ flexions different from those of ordinary speech.”—
 “ Il n’y a que les passions qui chantent,” says Rousseau;
 “ l’entendement ne fait que parler.”—This passage of Theophrastus is introduced to resolve the question—
 In what sense love is said to teach Music?—“ No “ wonder,” says the resolver, “ if love, having in itself
 “ all these three principles of Music, grief, pleasure, and “ enthusiasm, should be more prone to vent itself in “ Music and Poetry than any other passion.”—Aris-toxenus, describing the difference between the two motions of the voice, in speaking and in singing,—(the motion by slides, and that by intervals) says—διόπερ, ἐν τῇ διαλεγεσθαι φευγόμεν το ἴσασαι τὴν φωνήν, ἀν μὴ ΔΙΑ ΠΑΘΟΣ ποτε εἰς ταύτην κίνησιν ἀναγκασθώμεν ἔλθειν.—
 p. 9. Ed. Mcibomii.

“contagion.” [Sect. 6. p. 83.] This ingenious and amiable writer seems to have adopted this opinion from PLATO, to whom, indeed, in a similar passage in his System of Moral Philosophy⁷, he refers, and who, in the third book of his Republic, speaks of a warlike melody, inspiring courage, as “imitating the sound: and “accents of the courageous man,” and, of a calm and sedate melody, as imitating the sounds of a man of such a character^{*}.

With respect to ARISTOTLE—whether this was his opinion, or not, cannot, I think, be determined from anything he has expressly said upon the subject. In the passage above produced^{*}, where so much is said of the resemblance of melody and rhythm to manners, or tempers, not a word is said from which it can be inferred, that he meant a resemblance to the tones and accents by which those manners are expressed in speech. On the contrary, the expressions there made use of are such as lead us naturally to conclude, that he meant no more than I have above supposed him to mean; i. e. that the Music produces in us, immediately, ⁷ Vol. i. p. 16.

^{*} De Rep. lib. iii. p. 399. Ed. Ser. The expressions are—ἡ [sc. ἁρμονία—i. e. melody,] ἐν τῇ πολέμικῃ πράξει ὄντων ἀνδρῶν—πρεπόντως ἀν ΜΙΜΗΣΑΙΤΟ ΦΘΟΓΓΟΥΣ ΤΕ ΚΑΙ ΠΡΟΣΩΙΔΙΑΣ.—And again—σωφρονῶν, ἀνδρῶν, ΦΘΟΓΓΟΥΣ ΜΙΜΗΣΟΝΤΑΙ.

^{*} P. 70.

immediately, feelings resembling those of real passion, &c.—For, after having asserted, that there is “a resemblance in rhythms and melodies to “the irascible and the gentle disposition,” he adds,—“This is evident from the manner in “which we find ourselves affected by the performance of such Music; for we perceive a “change produced in the soul while we listen to “it.” And again—“In melody itself there are “imitations of human manners: this is manifest, “from the MELODIES OR MODES, which have, “evidently, their distinct nature and character; “so that, when we hear them, we feel ourselves “affected by each of them in a different manner, &c.”^b—But the passage furnishes, I think, a more

^a Δηλον δὲ ἐκ τῶν ἔργων· ΜΕΤΑΒΑΛΛΟΜΕΝ ΓΑΡ ΤΗΝ ΨΥΧΗΝ ἀκρωόμετοι τοιούτων.

^b Ἐν δὲ τοῖς μελεσὶν αὐτοῖς ἐστὶ μιμηματα τῶν ἡθῶν· καὶ ταῦτ' ἐστὶ φανερόν· εὐθὺς γὰρ ἡ τῶν Ἀρμονικῶν διεγρηκε φύσις· ὥστε ἀκροντας ΑΛΛΩΣ ΔΙΑΤΙΘΕΣΘΑΙ, καὶ μὴ τὸν αὐτὸν τροπὸν ἔχειν πρὸς ἑκάστην αὐτῶν.—κ. τ. αλ.—The Ἀρμοναί, i. e. melodies, (or, more properly perhaps, enharmonic melodies) here spoken of, must not be confounded with what are usually called the modes, and described by the writers on antient music, under the denomination of ῥαυαί, i. e. itches, or keys:—these were mere transpositions of the same scale, or system; the Αρμοναί appear to have been, as the name implies, different melodies—scales, in which the arrangement of intervals, and the divisions of the tetrachord (or genera) were different. Aristides Quintilianus is the only Greek writer who has given any account

a more decisive proof that the resemblance here meant, was not a resemblance to speech. Aristotle asserts here, as in the problem of which I shall presently speak, that, of all that affects the senses, Music alone possesses this property of resemblance to human manners. In comparing it with painting, he observes, that this art can imitate, immediately, only figures and colours; which are not resemblances (ὁμοιωματα) of manners and passions, but only signs and indications of them (σημεια) in the human body: whereas, in Music, the resemblance to manners "is in the melody itself." Now, whatever may be the meaning account of these ἀρμονιαί. (p. 21. Ed. Meib.) He asserts, that it is of these, not of the τονοί, that Plato speaks in the famous passage of his Republic, lib. iii. where he rejects some of them, and retains others. This, at least, is clear, that whatever the ἀρμονιαί of Plato were, Aristotle here speaks of the same. See his Rep. viii. p. 459.—Their distinctive names, Lydian, Dorian, &c. were the same with those of the τονοί, that of syntonolydian excepted, which, I think, is peculiar to the ἀρμονιαί. This coincidence of names seems to have been the chief cause of the confusion we find in the modern writers on this subject. The distinction has been pointed out in Dr. Burney's Hist. of Mus. vol. i. p. 32.—See also Rousseau's Dict. art. SYNTONO-LYDIEN, & GENRE.

ἢ ἐκ ἐστὶ ταῦτα ὁμοιωματα των ἡθων, ἀλλὰ ΣΗΜΕΙΑ
 πολλων, τα γινομενα σχηματα και χρωματα, των ἡθων και
 VOL. I. G ταῦτα

meaning of this last assertion—for it seems not quite philosophical to talk of such a resemblance as being in the sounds themselves—whatever may be its meaning, it cannot well be, that the melody resembles manners as expressed by speech; because this would destroy the distinction between Music and Painting: for words are exactly in the same case with colours and figures; they are not resemblances of manners, or passions, but indications only. We must then, I fear, be contented to take what Aristotle says as a popular and unphilosophical way of expressing a mere resemblance of effect.

In one of his Musical Problems, indeed, he advances a step farther, and inquires into the cause of this effect of Music upon the mind. The text of these problems is, in general, very incorrect, and often absolutely unintelligible; this problem, however, seems not beyond the reach of secure emendation, though it may, possibly, be beyond that of secure explanation. As it has not, that I know of, been noticed by any writer on the subject, and may be regarded at least as a curiosity not uninteresting to the musical and philosophical reader, I shall venture to give the entire

ΤΑΥΤΑ ΕΣΤΙΝ ΕΠΙ ΤΩ ΣΩΜΑΤΙ ΕΝ ΤΟΙΣ ΠΑΘΕΣΙΝ. — ΕΝ ΔΕ ΤΟΙΣ
ΜΕΛΕΣΙΝ ΑΥΤΟΙΣ ΕΣΤΙ ΜΙΜΗΜΑΤΑ ΤΩΝ ΉΘΩΝ. — κ. τ. αλ. —
p. 455. Ed. Duval.

entire problem, as I think it should be read, and to subjoin a translation.

ΔΙΑ ΤΙ ΤΟ ἀκῆσον μονον ἡθεῖ ἔχει των αἰσθητων, (και γαρ εἰαν ἡ ἀνευ λογε μελῶ, ὁμως ἔχει ἡθεῖ·) ἀλλ' ἔ το χρωμα, εἰδε ἡ ὁσμη, εἰδε ὁ χυμῶ, ἔχει;—ἡ, ὅτι κινήσιν ἔχει μονον; ἔχ' ἦν^d ὁ ψοφῶ ἡμας κινει· τοιαυτη μεν γαρ και τοις ἄλλοις ὑπαρχει· κινει γαρ και το χρωμα την ὄψιν· ἄλλα της ἐπομενης τῷ τοιᾷτῷ ψοφῷ αἰσθανομεθα κινήσεως· αὐτη δε ἔχει ὁμοιοτητα [τοις ἡθεσιν]^e· ἐν τε τοις ῥυθμοις και ἐν τῇ των φθογγων ταξεί των ὀξεων και βαρεων. (ἔκ ἐν τῇ μιζει· ἀλλ' ἡ συμφωνια ἐκ ἔχει ἡθεῖ·) Ἐν δε τοις ἄλλοις αἰσθητοις τετο ἐκ ἐσιν. αἱ δε κινήσεις αὐται πρακτ και εισιν· αἱ δε πραξίεις ἡθες σημασια ἐσι. [Probl. xxvii. of Sec. 19.]

PROBLEM.

“ WHY, of all that affects the senses, the “ AUDIBLE only has any expression of the “ manners; (for melody, even without words, “ has this effect—) but colours, smells, and “ tastes,

^d The text here, in the Ed. of Duval, stands thus:—κινήσιν ἔχει μονοναχι ἦν ὁ ψοφῶ—of which no sense can be made. The emendation appeared to me obvious and certain.

^e I insert—τας ἡθεσιν—as plainly required by the sense of the passage, and fully warranted by Aristotle's repeated expressions of the same kind.—See above, p. 70.—I found no other corrections necessary.

“ tastes, have no such property?—Is it be“ cause the audible alone affects us by motion?—
 “ I do not mean that motion by which as mere “ sound it acts upon the ear; for such motion “ belongs equally to the objects of our other “ senses;—thus, colour acts by motion upon the “ organs of sight, &c.—But I mean another “ motion which we perceive subsequent to that;
 “ and this motion bears a resemblance to human “ manners, both in the rhythm, and in the “ arrangement of sounds acute and grave:—not “ in their mixture; for HARMONY has no ex- “ *pression*¹. With the objects of our other “ senses

¹ This passage is remarkable. It is exactly the language of Rousseau—“il n’y a AUCUN RAPPORT “ entre des accords, & les objets qu’on veut peindre, ou “ les passions qu’on veut exprimer.” [Dict. de Mus. art.
 IMITATION: see also the last paragraph of art. HAR-MONIE.] Thus, too, Lord Kaims:—“Harmony, pro“ perly so called, though delightful when in perfection, “ hath NO RELATION to sentiment.” [El. of Crit. i. 128.]
 But how is this? The same intervals are the materials both of melody and of harmony. These intervals have, each of them, their peculiar effect and character, and it is by the proper choice of them in succession, and by that only, that melody, considered abstractedly from rhythm or measure, becomes expressive, or has any “relation to sentiment.” Do these intervals, then, lose at once, as by magic, all their variety and striking difference of character, as soon as they are heard in the simultaneous combinations

“ senses this is not the case.—Now these “ motions are analogous to the motion of human “ actions; and those actions are the index of the “ manners.”

In this problem, the philosopher plainly attributes the expressive power of musical sounds to their succession—to their motion in measured melody.

combinations of harmony? If this be the case, the vocal composer is at once relieved from all care of adapting the harmonies of his accompaniment to the expression of the sentiments conveyed in the words; and it must be matter of perfect indifference whether, for example, he uses the major or minor third—the perfect, or the false, fifth—the common chord, or the chord of the diminished seventh, &c.—With respect to Rousseau, it is not easy to see how this assertion of his can be reconciled with what he has elsewhere said. In his letter Sur la Musique Française, he expressly allows that every interval, consonant or dissonant, “ a son caractere particulier, c’est à dire, une maniere d’ affecter l’ame qui lui est propre.”—And upon this depend entirely all the admirable observations he has there made, concerning the ill effects which a crowded harmony, and the “ remplissage” of chords, have upon musical expression.—In another article [ACCORD] of his dictionary, this inconsistency is still more striking. One would not think it possible for the same writer, who in one place talks of intervals, “ propres, par leur dureté, à exprimer l’emportement, la colere, et LES PASSIONS aigues”—and, of—“ une harmonie plaintive qui ATTENDRIT LE CŒUR”—to assert in another part of the same melody. He also distinguishes the rhythmical, from the melodious, succession; for he says expressly, that this motion is “both in the “rhythm (or measure,) and in the order or “arrangement of sounds acute and grave.”—But whence the effect of these motions? He answers, from their analogy to the motions of human actions, work, that “il n’y a AUCUN RAPPORT entre des “accords, et LES PASSIONS qu’on veut exprimer.”

Had these writers contented themselves with saying, that harmony has much less relation to sentiment than melody, they would not have gone beyond the truth. And the reason of this difference in the effect of the same intervals, in melody, and in harmony, seems, plainly, this—that in melody, these intervals being formed by successive sounds, have, of course, a much closer, and more obvious relation to the tones and inflexions by which sentiments are expressed in speech, than they can have in harmony, where they are formed by sounds heard together.

As to the assertion of Aristotle, it seems only to furnish an additional proof that the ancients did not practise anything like our counterpoint, or continued harmony in different parts. Where the utmost use of harmony seems to have been confined to unisons, octaves, fourths, and fifths—where at least no discords, (the most expressive materials of modern harmony,) were allowed—we cannot wonder that the “mixture” of sounds in consonance should be thought to have no relation to sentiment, and that all the power of Music over the passions, should be confined to melodious and rhythmical succession.

actions[‡], by which the manners and tempers of men are expressed in common life. With respect to the analogy of rhythmic movement to the various motions of men in action, this, indeed, is sufficiently obvious. But Aristotle goes farther, and supposes that there is also such analogy in the motion of melody considered merely as a succession of different tones, without any regard to time;—ἐν τῇ τῶν φθογγῶν ταξεί, τῶν ὀξεῶν καὶ βαρεῶν. He plainly asserts, that this succession of tones, also, is analogous to the motion of human actions. Now it seems impossible to assign any human action to which a succession of sounds and intervals, merely as such, has, or can have, any relation or similitude, except the action (if the expression is allowable,) of speaking, which is such a succession. If this be Aristotle's meaning—and I confess myself unable to discover any other—I do not see how we can avoid concluding, that he agreed so far with Plato, as to attribute part, at least, of the effect of Music upon the affections to the analogy between melody and speech.

This

‡ The original is short, and rather obscure. It says, literally, “these motions are practical motions :” πρακτικαὶ εἰσιν. But that I have given Aristotle's true meaning in my translation, is evident from a clearer expression in Prob. xxix. which is a shorter solution of the same question. His expression there is—κινήσεις εἰσιν [sc. οἱ ῥυθμοὶ καὶ τὰ μελῆ] ὥσπερ καὶ αἱ πράξεις.—“Rhythm and melody are motions, as actions also are.”

This analogy is, indeed, a curious subject, and deserves, perhaps, a more thorough examination and development than it has yet received^h. But I shall not trust myself farther with a speculation so likely to draw me wide from the proper business of this dissertation, than just to observe, that the writers above-mentioned, who resolve all the pathetic expression of Music into this principle, though they assert more than it seems possible to prove, are yet much nearer to the truth than those, who altogether overlook, or reject, that principleⁱ; a principle, of which, instances

^h Much light has been flung upon this subject, as far as relates to speech, by Mr. Steele, in his curious and ingenious essay On the Melody and Measure of Speech. But the object of his enquiry was Speech, not Music. His purpose in tracing the resemblance between them, was only to shew that speech is capable of notation; not to examine how far the effect of Music on the passions depends on that resemblance.—His notation is extremely ingenious; but with respect to his project of accompanying the declamation of Tragedy by a drone bass, I must confess that, for my own part, I cannot reflect without some comfort upon the improbability that it will ever be attempted.

ⁱ After allowing that “different passions and sentiments do indeed give different tones and accents to the human voice,” Dr. Beattie asks—“but can the tones of the most pathetic melody be said to bear a resemblance to the voice of a man or woman speaking from
“ the

stances so frequent and so palpable are to be traced in the works of the best masters of vocal composition—in those of PURCELL, for example, of HANDEL, and above all, of PERGOLESI—that I have often wondered it should have been neglected

“ the impulse of passion ? ” I can only answer, that to my ear, such a resemblance, in the “ most pathetic melody,” is, often, even striking : and I have no doubt that in many passages we are affected from a more delicate and latent degree of that resemblance, sufficient to be felt, in its effect, though not to be perceived.—Dr. Beattie also asks —“ if there are not melancholy airs in the sharp key, “ and chearful ones in the flat ? ”—Undoubtedly, the peculiar and opposite characters of these keys, may be variously modified and tempered by the movement, the accent, and the manner of performance, in general : but they can never be destroyed ; much less can they be changed, as Dr. Beattie supposes, to their very opposites. A chearful air in a flat key, I confess, I never heard. If Dr. Beattie thinks the jig in the fifth solo of Corelli chearful, because the movement is allegro, I would beg of him to try an experiment : let him only play the first bar of that jig. (with the bass,) upon a harpsichord, &c. in G major : and when he has attended to the effect of that, let him return to the minor key, and hear the difference.—As to “ melancholy airs in a sharp key,” the word melancholy is, I think, used with considerable latitude, and comprehends different shades. In the lightest of these shades, it may perhaps be applied to some airs in a major key : that key may, by slowness of movement, softness and smoothness of tone, &c. become solemn, tender, touching, neglected by so exact a writer as Mr. Harris, though it lay directly in his way, and, in one place, he actually touched it as he passed*. He seems, here, to have deserted those antients whom, in general, he most delighted to follow.

But

touching, &c.—but I cannot say I recollect any air in that key which makes an impression that can properly be called melancholy. But we must be careful in this matter to allow for the magic of association, which no one better understands, or has described with more feeling and fancy, than Dr. Beattie himself. [See p. 173, &c.]—With respect to “a transition from the one key to the other” [from major to minor, &c.] “in the same air, without any “sensible change in the expression,” I must also confess that it is, to me, totally unknown.—One word more:—Dr. Beattie is “at a loss to conceive how it should “happen, that a musician overwhelmed with sorrow, for “example, should put together a series of notes, whose “expression is contrary to that of another series which “he had put together when elevated with joy.” [p. 180.]—But is not Dr. Beattie equally at a loss to conceive how it should happen that any man overwhelmed with sorrow, should put together, in speaking, (as he certainly does) a series of tones, whose expression is contrary to that of another series which he had put together when elevated with joy?—The two facts are equally certain, and, even at the first view, so nearly allied, that whoever can account for the one, need not, I am persuaded, be at the trouble of trying to account separately for the other.

* Ch. ii. § 2.—particularly note ¹.

But to return to Aristotle, and his treatise on Poetry :—the reader will observe that he does not there assert in general terms, that “Music is an Imitative Art,” but only, that the Music “of the flute and the lyre” is imitative ; and even that, not always, but “for the most part”¹. I just mention this, because I have observed in many of the commentators, as well as in other writers, a disposition to extend and generalize his assertions, by which they have sometimes involved the subject and themselves in unnecessary difficulties.

With respect to modern writers, at least, there seems to be a manifest impropriety in denominating Music an Imitative Art, while they confine the application of the term Imitative to what they confess to be the slightest and least important of all its powers. In this view, consistence and propriety are, certainly, on the side of Dr. Beattie, when he would “strike Music off the list of Imitative Arts”^m. But perhaps even a farther reform may justly be considered as wanting, in our language upon this subject. With whatever propriety, and however naturally and obviously, the arts both of Music, and of POETRY, may be, separately, and occasionally, regarded and spoken of as imitative, yet, when we arrange
and

¹ — της αὐλητικῆς ἡ ΠΛΕΙΣΤΗ καὶ καθαριότης.

^m Page 129.

and class the arts, it seems desirable that a clearer language were adopted. The notion, that Painting, Poetry and Music" are all Arts of Imitation, certainly tends to produce, and has produced, much confusion. That they all, in some sense of the word, or other, imitate, cannot be denied; but the senses of the word when applied to Poetry, or Music, are so different both from each other, and from that in which it is applied to Painting, Sculpture, and the arts of design in general—the only arts that are obviously and essentially imitative—that when
we

* What shall we say to those who add ARCHITECTURE to the list of Imitative Arts?—One would not expect to find so absurd a notion adopted by so clear and philosophical a writer as M. d'Alembert. Yet in his Discours Prel. de l'Encyclop. he not only makes Architecture an imitative art, but even classes it with painting and sculpture. He allows, indeed, that the imitation "de la belle nature, y est moins frappante & plus resserrée que dans les deux autres arts."—but how is it any imitation at all?—only because it imitates "par l'assemblage et l'union des differens corps qu'elle emploie"—what?—"l'arrangement symétrique que la nature observe plus ou moins sensiblement dans chaque individu, &c." [Mel. de lit. i. 63.] I can only say, that, upon this principle, the joiner, the smith, and the mechanic of almost every kind, have a fair claim to be elevated to the rank of Imitative Artists: for if a regular building be an imitation of "la belle nature," so is a chair, a table, or a pair of fire-tongs.

we include them all, without distinction, under the same general denomination of Imitative Arts, we seem to defeat the only useful purpose of all classing and arrangement; and, instead of producing order and method in our ideas, produce only embarrassment and confusion. [See DISS. I. p. 3, 4.]

A R I S T O T L E

O N

P O E T R Y.

CONTENTS.

PART I.

GENERAL AND COMPARATIVE VIEW OF POETRY AND ITS PRINCIPAL SPECIES.

SECT. I.	INTRODUCTION - - - -	p. 101
I.	Poetry a species of Imitation - -	ib.
II.	Different means of Imitation - -	102
III.	Different objects of Imitation - -	104
IV.	Different manner of Imitation - -	106
V.	Origin of Poetry - - - -	107
VI.	Its division into serious and ludicrous ,	109
VII.	Progress of Tragedy - - - -	111
VIII.	Object and progress of Comedy -	113
IX.	Epic and Tragic species compared -	114

PART II.

OF TRAGEDY.

I.	Definition of Tragedy - - - -	116
II.	Deduction of its constituent parts -	ib.
III.	Comparative importance of those parts,	118
IV.	Of the FABLE [to Sect. 15.]—it should be a perfect whole , and of a certain magnitude - - - -	122
VOL. I.	H	V. Unity

SECT.
V.	Unity of the Fable - - - -	p. 124
VI.	Different provinces of the Poet and the Historian - - - -	127
VII.	Episodic Fables - - - -	129
VIII.	Fables, simple , or complicated - -	130
IX.	Parts of the Fable . 1. Revolutions . 2. Discoveries . 3. Disasters -	131
X.	Parts into which Tragedy is divided -	133
XI.	What catastrophe , and what character , best adapted to the purpose of Tra- gedy - - - -	135
XII.	Catastrophe should be single , and that unhappy - - - -	136
XIII.	Terror and Pity to be excited by the action , not by the decoration , or spectacle -	138
XIV.	Of disastrous incidents and the proper management of them - - - -	139
XV.	Of the MANNERS - - - -	143
XVI.	Of the different kinds of Discovery , -	147
XVII.	Practical directions for the Tragic Poet - - - -	151
XVIII.	Complication and Development of the plot - - - -	154
XIX.	Different kinds of Tragedy - -	155
XX.	Too great extent of plan to be avoided -	157
XXI.	Of the Chorus - - - -	158
XXII.	Of the SENTIMENTS - - - -	159
XXIII.	Of the DICTION, [to the end of this part] - - - -	160
	XXIV. Analysis

CONTENTS.

99

SECT. XXIV. Analysis of Diction, or Language, in general - - - - -	p. 161
XXV. Different kinds of words - - -	165
XXVI. Of Poetic Diction - - - - -	170

PART III.

OF THE EPIC POEM.

I. In what Epic and Tragic Poetry agree	176
II. In what they differ - - - - -	180
III. Epic Narration should be dramatic and imitative - - - - -	182
IV. Epic admits the wonderful more easily, and in a greater degree, than Tragedy -	ib.
V. Fiction , how made to pass as truth -	183
VI. Of the improbable and absurd - -	184

PART IV.

OF CRITICAL OBJECTIONS, AND THE PRINCIPLES ON WHICH THEY ARE TO BE ANSWERED.

I. Principles on which Poetry is to be de- fended - - - - -	188
II. Application of the last principle -	190
III. ——— of the first - - - - -	191
IV. Censure of immoral speech, or action— how to be examined - - - - -	192

H 2

V. Application

SECT.

V.	Application of the second principle	p. 193
VI.	Censure of impossibility —farther considered	200
VII.	— Inconsistence	201
VIII.	— Improbability and vicious character	ib.

PART V.

OF THE SUPERIORITY OF TRAGIC TO EPIC POETRY.

I.	Objection to Tragedy	203
II.	That objection answered	204
III.	Advantages of Tragedy	205
IV.	Preference of Tragedy	207
	CONCLUSION	ib.

P A R T I.

GENERAL AND COMPARATIVE VIEW OF POETRY AND ITS PRINCIPAL SPECIES.

I N T R O D U C T I O N.

MY design is to treat of POETRY in general, DESIGN.
and of its several species—to inquire, what is the proper effect of each—what construction of a fable, or plan, is essential to a good Poem—of what, and how many, parts, each species consists; with whatever else belongs to the same subject: which I shall consider in the order that most naturally presents itself.

I.

Epic Poetry, Tragedy, Comedy, Dithyrambics, as also, for the most part, the Music of the flute, and of the lyre—all these are, in the most general view of them, IMITATIONS¹; differing, however, from each other in three respects, according to the different means, the different objects, or the different manner, of their imitation. Poetry a species of IMITATION.

¹ The application of this term to Poetry, in general, is considered in Dissertation I.—to Music, in Diss. II.—
to Dithyrambic Poetry, in NOTE I.

II.

Different MEANS
of Imitation,

For, as men, some through art, and some through habit, imitate various objects, by means of colour and figure, and others, again, by *voice; so, with respect to the arts above-mentioned, rhythm, words, and melody, are the different means by which, either single, or variously combined, they all produce their imitation.

For example: in the imitations of the flute, and the lyre, and of any other instruments capable of producing a similar effect—as the syrinx, or pipe—melody and rhythm only are employed. In those of Dance, rhythm alone, without melody; for there are dancers who, by rhythm applied to gesture³, express manners, passions, and actions.

The ΕΡΟΠΟΕΙΑ imitates by words alone, or by *verse*⁴; and that verse may either be composed of various metres, or confined, according to the practice

* Vocal mimicry; imitation by tone of voice merely: See Diss. I. towards the end, *Note*¹.—And NOTE 2, on this passage.

³ The expression seems inaccurate; for it is by their gestures that they express, or imitate;—not by the rhythm, or measured motion, of those gestures.—See NOTE 4, where I have endeavoured to account for Aristotle's expressing himself thus, practice hitherto established, to a single species. For we should, otherwise, have no general name which would comprehend the Mimes of SOPHRON and XENARCHUS, and the Socratic dialogues; or Poems in Iambic, Elegiac, or other metres, in which the Epic species of imitation may be conveyed. Custom, indeed, connecting the poetry or making with the metre, has denominated some Elegiac Poets, i. e. *makers*⁵ of elegiac verse; others, Epic Poets; i. e. makers of hexameter verse; thus distinguishing Poets, not according to the nature of their imitation, but according to that of their metre only. For even they, who compose treatises of medicine, or natural philosophy, in verse, are denominated Poets: yet HOMER and EMPEDOCLES have nothing in common, except their metre; the former, therefore, justly

⁴ i. e. by words only, without melody and rhythm; or, at most, with no other rhythm than is implied in the idea of metre:—without rhythm in its musical acceptance of time. See NOTE 5.

⁵ It may be necessary to observe, that the Greek word, (ποιητής—poiétes) whence poeta, and poet, is, literally, maker; and maker, it is well known, was once the current term for poet in our language; and to write verses, was, to make. Sir Philip Sidney, speaking of the Greek word, says—"wherein, I know not whether by luck or wisdom, we Englishmen have met with the Greeks, in calling him Maker." Defense of Poesy.

So Spenser;

The god of shepherds, Tityrus, is dead,

Who taught me, homely, as I can, to MAKE.

Shep. Cal. JUNE.

justly merits the name of Poet; while the other should rather be called a Physiologist than a Poet.

So, also, though any one should chuse to convey his imitation in every kind of metre, promiscuously, as CHÆREMON has done in his Centaur, which is a medley of all sorts of verse, it would not immediately follow, that, on that account merely, he was entitled to the name of Poet.—But of this, enough.—

There are, again, other species of Poetry which make use of all the means of imitation, rhythm, melody, and verse. Such are, the Dithyrambic, that of Nomes, Tragedy, and Comedy: with this difference, however, that in some of these⁶, they are employed all together, in others, separately. And such are the differences of these arts with respect to the means by which they imitate.

III.

Different OBJECTS
of Imitation.

But, as the objects of imitation are the actions of men, and these men must of necessity be either good good or bad, (for on this does character principally depend; the manners being, in all men, most strongly marked by virtue and vice,) it follows, that we can only represent men, either as better than they actually are, or worse, or exactly as they are: just as, in Painting, the pictures of Polygnotus were above the common level of nature; those of Pauson, below it; those of Dionysius, faithful likenesses.

⁶ In Dithyrambic, or Bacchic hymns, and in the Nomes, which were also a species of hymns, to Apollo, and other deities, all the means of imitation were employed together, and throughout: in Tragedy and Comedy, separately; some of them in one part of the drama, and some in another. (See Part II. Sect. I.) In the choral part, however, at least, if no where else, all, melody, rhythm and words, must probably have been used at once, as in the hymns.

Now it is evident that each of the imitations above-mentioned will admit of these differences, and become a different kind of imitation, as it imitates objects that differ in this respect. This may be the case with Dancing; with the Music of the flute, and of the lyre; and, also, with the Poetry which employs words, or verse only, without melody, or rhythm: thus, Homer has drawn men superior to what they are⁷; Cleophon, as they are; Hegemon the Thasian, the inventor of parodies,

⁷ Superior, that is, in courage, strength, wisdom, prudence, &c.—in any laudable, useful, or admirable quality, whether such as we denominate moral, or not. If superiority of moral character only were meant, the assertion would be false.—It is necessary to remember here, the wide sense in which the antients used the terms virtue, vice—good, bad, &c. See NOTE 19.—The difference between moral, and poetical, perfection of character, is well explained by Dr. Beattie, Essay on Poetry, &c. Part I. ch. 4.—The heroes of Homer, as he well observes, are “finer animals” than we are; (p. 69.) not better men.

parodies, and Nicochares, the author of, the Deiadi, worse than they are.

So, again, with respect to Dithyrambics, and Nomes: in these, too, the imitation may be as different as that of the Persians, by Timotheus, and the Cyclops, by Philoxenus.

Tragedy, also, and Comedy, are distinguished in the same manner; the aim of Comedy being, to exhibit men worse than we find them, that of Tragedy, better.

IV.

Different MANNER
of Imitation.

There remains the third difference—that of the manner in which each of these objects may be imitated. For the Poet, imitating the same object, and by the same means, may do it either in NARRATION—and that, again, either personating other characters, as HOMER does, or, in his own person throughout, without change:—or, he may imitate by representing all his characters as real, and employed in the very ACTION itself.

These, then, are the three differences by which, as I said in the beginning, all imitation is distinguished; those of the means, the object, and the manner: so that Sophocles is, in one respect, an imitator of the same kind with Homer, as elevated characters are the objects of both; in another respect, of the same kind with Aristophanes, as both imitate in the way of action; whence, according to some, the application of the term
Drama

Drama [i. e. action] to such Poems. Upon this it is that the Dorians ground their claim to the invention both of Tragedy and Comedy. For Comedy is claimed by the Megarians²; both by those of Greece, who contend that it took its rise in their popular government; and by those of Sicily, among whom the poet Epicharmus flourished long before Chionides and Magnes; and Tragedy, also, is claimed by some of the Dorians of Peloponnesus.—In support of these claims they argue from the words themselves. They allege, that the Doric word for a village is COME, the Attic, DEMOS; and that Comedians were so called, not from COMAZEIN—to revel—but from their strolling about the COMAI, or *villages*¹, before they were tolerated in the city. They say, farther, that, to do, or act, they express by the word DRAN; the Athenians by PRATTEIN.

DRAMA.
Digression concerning the different national claims to its invention.

And thus much as to the differences of imitation—how many, and what, they are.

V.

POETRY, in general, seems to have derived its origin from two causes, each of them natural.

ORIGIN
of Poetry.

1. To IMITATE is instinctive in man from his infancy. By this he is distinguished from other animals, that he is, of all, the most imitative, and through

¹ Who were all of Doric origin.

² A derivation very honourable to itinerant players.

through this instinct receives his earliest education*. All men, likewise, naturally receive pleasure from imitation. This is evident from what we experience in viewing the works of imitative art; for in them, we contemplate with pleasure, and with the more pleasure, the more exactly they are imitated, such objects as, if real, we could not see without pain; as, the figures of the meanest and most disgusting animals, dead bodies, and the like. And the reason of this is, that to learn, is a natural pleasure, not confined to philosophers, but common to all men; with this difference only, that the multitude partake of it in a more transient and compendious manner. Hence the pleasure they receive from a picture: in viewing it they learn†, they infer, they discover, what every object is: that this, for instance, is such a particular man, &c. For if we suppose the object represented to be something which the spectator had never seen, his pleasure, in that case, will not arise from the imitation, but from the workmanship, the colours, or some such cause.

Imitation, then, being thus natural to us, and, 2ndly, MELODY and RHYTHM† being also natural,
(for

* See Dr. Beattie's Essay on Poetry, &c. Part I. ch. 6.

† This is explained in NOTE 22.

† " RHYTHM differs from METRE, in as much as " RHYTHM is proportion, applied to any motion whatever ;

(for as to metre, it is plainly a species of rhythm,) those persons, in whom, originally, these propensities were the strongest, were naturally led to rude and extemporaneous attempts, which, gradually improved, gave birth to POETRY.

VI.

But this Poetry, following the different characters of its authors, naturally divided itself into two different kinds. They who were of a grave and lofty spirit, chose, for their imitation, the actions and the adventures of elevated characters: while Poets of a lighter turn, represented those of the vitious and contemptible. And these composed, originally, Satires; as the former did Hymns and Encomia.

Its division into TWO KINDS—
the SERIOUS and the LUDICROUS.

Of the lighter kind, we have no Poem anterior to the time of HOMER, though many such, in all probability, there were; but, from his time, we have;

“ METRE is proportion, applied to the motion of WORDS “ SPOKEN. Thus, in the drumming of a march, or “ the dancing of a hornpipe, there is rhythm, though no “ metre; in Dryden's celebrated Ode there is METRE as “ well as RHYTHM, because the Poet with the rhythm has “ associated certain words. And hence it follows, that,
“ though ALL METRE is RHYTHM, yet ALL RHYTHM “ is NOT METRE.” Harris's Philol. Inquiries, p. 67.— where it is also observed, very truly, that “ no English “ word expresses rhythmus better than the word, time.”
P. 69. note.

have ; as, his Margites, and others of the same species, in which the Iambic was introduced as the most proper measure ; and hence, indeed, the name of Iambic, because it was the measure in which they used to IAMBIZE, [i. e. to satirize,] each other.

And thus these old Poets were divided into two classes—those who used the *heroic*³, and those who used the iambic, verse.

And as, in the serious kind, HOMER alone may be said to deserve the name of Poet, not only on account of his other excellences, but also of the *dramatic*⁴ spirit of his imitations ; so was he likewise the first who suggested the idea of Comedy, by substituting ridicule for invective, and giving that ridicule a dramatic cast : for his MARGITES bears the same analogy to Comedy, as his ILIAD and ODYSSEY to Tragedy.—But when Tragedy and Comedy, had once made their appearance, succeeding Poets, according to the turn of their genius, attached themselves to the one, or the other, of these new species : the lighter sort, instead of Iambic, became Comic Poets ; the graver, Tragic, instead of Heroic : and that, on account of the superior dignity and higher estimation of these latter forms of Poetry.

Whether

³ i. e. hexameters, composed of dactyls and spondees, which were called heroic feet.

⁴ See Part III. Sect. 3.

Whether Tragedy has now, with respect to its constituent parts⁵, received the utmost improvement of which it is capable, considered both in itself, and relatively to the theatre, is a question that belongs not to this place.

VII.

Both Tragedy, then, and Comedy, having originated in a rude and unpremeditated manner—the first from the Dithyrambic hymns, the other from those Phallic songs⁶, which, in many cities, remain still in use—each advanced gradually towards perfection, by such successive improvements as were most obvious.

PROGRESS
of
TRAGEDY.

TRAGEDY, after various changes, reposed at length in the completion of its proper form. ÆSCHYLUS first added a second actor⁷; he also abridged

⁵ i. e. the fable, the manners, the sentiments, &c.—
See Part II. Sect. 2.

⁶ Of the licentious and obscene RELIGIOUS CEREMONY here alluded to, the reader, who has any curiosity about it, may find some account in Potter's Antiquities of Greece, vol. i. p. 383.

⁷ The first who introduced a single actor, or speaker, between those choral songs which originally, we are told, formed the whole of Tragedy, i. e. according to the most usual derivation of the word, the goat-singing, was THESPIUS, whom Aristotle passes over in silence. The story so often told, of him and his theatrical waggon, it cannot

abridged the CHORUS, and made the dialogue the principal part of Tragedy. SOPHOCLES increased the number of actors to three, and added the decoration of painted scenery. It was also late before Tragedy threw aside the short and simple fable, and ludicrous language, of its satyric original, and attained its proper magnitude and dignity. The Iambic measure was then first adopted: for, originally, the Trochaic tetrameter was made use of, as better suited to the satyric^s and cannot be necessary to repeat.—By introducing a second actor, Æschylus, in fact, introduced the dialogue; though it seems probable that the single speaker of Thespis told his tale, in part, at least, dramatically. See Brumoy's Disc. sur l'Orig. de la Trag. Sect. iii.—Theatre des Grecs, Tome i.

^s Satyric, from the share which those fantastic beings called Satyrs, the companions and play-fellows of Bacchus, had in the earliest Tragedy, of which they formed the chorus. Joking, and dancing, were essential attributes of these rustic semi-deities. Hence, the "ludicrous language," and the "dancing genius" of the old Tragedy, to which the TROCHAIC or running metre here spoken of was peculiarly adapted; being no other than this:

"Jolly mortals, fill your glasses, noble deeds are done by wine."

The reader will not confound satyric with satiric; nor the Greek satyric drama, with the satire of Roman origin. See Harris's Phil. Arrang. p. 460. note. Or, Dacier's Preface to Horace's Satires. The two words are of different derivations.

and saltatorial genius of the Poem at that time; but when the dialogue was formed, nature itself pointed out the proper metre. For the iambic is, of all metres, the most colloquial; as appears evidently from this fact, that our common conversation frequently falls into iambic verse; seldom into hexameter, and only when we depart from the usual melody of speech.—Episodes were, also, multiplied, and every other part of the drama successively improved and polished.

But of this enough: to enter into a minute detail would, perhaps, be a task of some length.

VIII.

COMEDY, as was said before, is an imitation of bad characters; bad, not with respect to every sort of vice, but to the RIDICULOUS only, as being a species of turpitude or deformity; since it may be defined to be—a fault or deformity of such a sort as is neither painful nor destructive. A ridiculous face, for example, is something ugly and distorted, but not so as to cause pain.

OBJECT
and PROGRESS
of COMEDY.

The successive improvements of Tragedy, and the respective authors of them, have not escaped our knowledge; but those of Comedy, from the little attention that was paid to it in its origin, remain in obscurity. For it was not till late, that

Comedy was authorized by the magistrate, and carried on at the public expence: it was, at first, a private and voluntary exhibition. From the time, indeed, when it began to acquire some degree of form, its Poets have been recorded; but who first introduced masks, or prologues, or augmented the number of actors—these, and other particulars of the same kind, are unknown.

Epicharmus and Phormis were the first who invented comic fables. This improvement, therefore, is of Sicilian origin. But, of Athenian Poets, Crates was the first who abandoned the *Iambic form of comedy, and made use of invented and general stories, or fables.

IX.

EPIC
and TRAGIC Species COMPARED.

Epic Poetry agrees so far with Tragic, as it is an imitation of great characters and actions, by means of words: but in this it differs, that it makes use of only one kind of metre throughout; and that it is narrative. It also differs in length: for Tragedy endeavours, as far as possible, to confine its action within the limits of a single revolution of the sun, or nearly so; but the time of of Epic action is indefinite. This, however, at first, was equally the case with Tragedy itself.

* Iambic, i. e. satirical, and personally so, like the old Iambi, invectives, or lampoons, of which Aristotle speaks above, Sect. 6. and from which the Iambic metre, which is ~~not~~ here alluded to, took its name.

Of their constituent parts, some are common to both, some peculiar to Tragedy. He, therefore, who is a judge of the beauties and defects of Tragedy, is, of course, equally a judge with respect to those of Epic Poetry: for all the parts of the Epic poem are to be found in Tragedy; not all those of Tragedy, in the Epic poem.

PART II.

OF TRAGEDY.

I.

DEFINITION of Tragedy.

OF the species of Poetry which imitates in hexameters, and of Comedy, we shall speak hereafter. Let us now consider TRAGEDY; collecting, first, from what has been already said, its true and essential definition.

Tragedy, then, is an imitation of some action that is important, entire, and of a proper magnitude—by language, embellished and rendered pleasurable, but by different means in different parts—in the way, not of narration, but of action—effecting through pity and terror, the correction and refinement of such passions.

By pleasurable language, I mean a language that has the embellishments of rhythm, melody, and metre. And I add, by different means in different parts, because in some parts metre alone is employed, in others, melody.

II.

Deduction of its CONSTITUENT PARTS.

Now as Tragedy imitates by acting, the DECORATION*, in the first place, must necessarily

* Decoration—literally, the decoration of the spectacle, or sight. In other places it is called the spectacle, or sarily be one of its parts: then the MELOPŒIA, (or MUSIC¹;) and the DICTION; for these last include the means of tragic imitation. By diction, I mean the metrical composition †. The meaning of Melopœia is obvious to every one.

Again—Tragedy being an imitation of an action, and the persons employed in that action being necessarily characterized by their manners and their sentiments, since it is from these that actions themselves derive their character, it follows, that there must also be, MANNERS, and SENTIMENTS, as the two causes of actions, and, consequently, of the happiness, or unhappiness, of all men. The imitation of the action is the FABLE: for by fable I now mean the contexture of incidents, or the plot. By manners, I mean, whatever

or sight only—ὄψις. It comprehends scenery, dresses—the whole visible apparatus of the theatre. I do not know any single English word, that answers fully to the Greek word.

¹ Melopœia—literally, the making, or the composition, of the Music; as we use Epopœia, or according to the French termination, which we have naturalized, Epopée, to signify epic poetry, or epic-making, in general,—I might have rendered it, at once, the MUSIC; but that it would have appeared ridiculous to observe, of a word so familiar to us, even that “its meaning is obvious.”

† Not the versification, but merely the metrical expression—the language of the verse. This is plain from the clearer definition, p. 121.

whatever marks the characters of the persons. By sentiments, whatever they say, whether proving any thing, or delivering a general sentiment, &c.*

Hence, all Tragedy must necessarily contain six parts, which, together, constitute its peculiar character, or quality: FABLE, MANNERS, DICTATION, SENTIMENTS, DECORATION, and MUSIC. Of these parts, two relate to the means, one to the manner, and three to the object, of imitation². And these are all. These *specific parts*³, if we may so call them, have been employed by most Poets, and are all to be found in [almost] every Tragedy.

III.

COMPARATIVE IMPORTANCE of the PARTS.

But of all these parts the most important is the combination of incidents, or, the FABLE. Because Tragedy is an imitation, not of men, but of *actions*⁴—of life, of happiness and unhappiness:

* For a fuller account of this part of Tragedy, see Sect. 22.

² Music, and diction, to the means, which are words, melody, and rhythm: decoration, to the manner of imitation—i. e. by representation and action: fable, manners, and sentiments, to the objects of imitation—i. e. men, and their actions, characters, &c.

³ i. e. such as are essential to Tragedy, and, together, constitute its species.

⁴ See the Diss. On the Provinces of the Drama, ch. i. [Dr. Hurd's Hor. vol. iii.]

happiness: for happiness consists in action, and the supreme good itself, the very end of life, is action of a certain kind^s—not quality. Now the manners of men constitute only their quality or characters; but it is by their actions that they are happy, or the contrary. Tragedy, therefore, does not imitate action, for the sake of imitating manners, but in the imitation of action, that of manners is of course involved. So that the action and the fable are the end of Tragedy; and in every thing the end is of principal importance.

Again—Tragedy cannot subsist without action; without manners it may: the Tragedies of most modern Poets have this defect; a defect common, indeed, among Poets in general. As among Painters also, this is the case with ZEUXIS, compared with POLYGNOTUS: the latter excels in the expression of the manners; there is no such expression in the pictures of ZEUXIS.

Farther—suppose any one to string together a number of speeches in which the manners are strongly marked, the language and the sentiments well turned; this will not be sufficient to produce the proper effect of Tragedy: that end will much rather rather be answered by a piece, defective in each of those particulars, but furnished with a proper fable and contexture of incidents. Just as in painting, the most brilliant colours, spread at random and without design, will give far less pleasure than the simplest outline of a figure.

^s i. e. virtuous action.—The doctrine of Aristotle was, that the greatest happiness, the summum bonum or end of life, consisted in virtuous energies and actions; not in virtue, considered merely as an internal habit, disposition, or quality, of mind.

Add to this, that those parts of Tragedy, by means of which it becomes most interesting and affecting, are parts of the fable; I mean, revolutions, and *discoveries*⁶.

As a farther proof, adventurers in Tragic writing are sooner able to arrive at excellence in the language, and the manners, than in the construction of a plot; as appears from almost all our earlier Poets.

The fable, then, is the principal part, the soul, as it were, of Tragedy; and the MANNERS are next in rank: Tragedy being an imitation of an action, and through that, principally, of the agents.

In the third place stand the SENTIMENTS. To this part it belongs, to say such things as are true and proper; which, in the dialogue, depends on the *Political*⁷ and Rhetorical arts: for, the antients

⁶ These are explained afterwards, Sect. 9.

⁷ The reader, here, must not think of our modern politics.—The political, or civil art, or science, was, in Aristotle's antients made their characters speak in the style of political and popular eloquence; but now, the rhetorical manner prevails.

The manners are, whatever manifests the disposition of the speaker. There are speeches, therefore, which are without manners, or character; as not containing any thing by which the propensities or aversions of the person who delivers them can be known. The sentiments comprehend whatever is said; whether proving any thing, affirmatively, or negatively, or expressing some general reflection, &c.

Fourth, in order, is the DICTION; that is, as I have already said, the expression of the sentiments by words; the power and effect of which is the same, whether in verse or prose.

Of the remaining two parts, the MUSIC stands next; of all the pleasurable accompaniments and embellishments of Tragedy, the most delightful.

The DECORATION has, also, a great effect, but, of all the parts, is most foreign to the art. For the power of Tragedy is felt without representation, and actors; and the beauty
of

Aristotle's view, of wide extent, and high importance. It comprehended ethics and eloquence, or the art of public-speaking; every thing, in short, that concerned the well-being of a state.—See NOTE 57.

of the decorations depends more on the art of the mechanic, than on that of the Poet^s.

IV.

Of the FABLE—
[to Sect. 15.]

These things being thus adjusted, let us go on to examine in what manner the FABLE should be constructed; since this is the first, and most important part of Tragedy.

Now we have defined Tragedy to be an imitation of an action that is complete and entire; and that has also a certain magnitude; for a thing may be entire, and a whole, and yet not be of any magnitude^s.

It should be a PERFECT WHOLE—

1. By entire, I mean that which has a beginning, a middle, and an end. A beginning, is that which does not, necessarily, suppose any thing before it, but which requires something to follow it. An end, on the contrary, is that which supposes something to precede it, either necessarily, or probably; but which nothing is required to follow. A middle, is that which both supposes something to precede, and requires something to follow. The Poet, therefore, who would construct

^s The reader will find a useful comment on this, and the two preceding sections, in the Philolog. Inquiries, Part II. ch. vi. viii. ix. xi.

^s i. e.—not be large.—Magnitude is here used in its proper and relative sense, of greatness; and with reference to some standard.

struct his fable properly, is not at liberty to begin, or end, where he pleases, but must conform to these definitions.

2. Again: whatever is beautiful, whether it be an animal, or any other thing composed of different parts, must not only have those parts arranged in a certain manner, but must also be of a certain magnitude; for beauty consists in magnitude and order. Hence it is that no very minute animal can be beautiful; the eye comprehends the whole too instantaneously to distinguish and compare the parts:—neither, on the contrary, can one of a prodigious size be beautiful; because, as all its parts cannot be seen at once, the whole, the *unity*¹ of object, is lost to the spectator; as it would be, for example, if he were surveying an animal of many miles in length. As, therefore, in animals, and other objects, a certain magnitude is requisite, but that magnitude must be such as to present a whole easily comprehended by the eye; so, in the fable, a certain length is requisite, but that length must be such

—and of a certain MAGNI-
TITUDE.

¹ The unity here spoken of, it must be remembered, is not absolute and simple, but relative and compound, unity; a unity consisting of different parts, the relation of which to each other, and to the whole, is easily perceived at one view. On this depends the perception of beauty in form.—In objects too extended, you may be said to have parts, but no whole: in very minute objects a whole, but no parts.

such as to present a whole easily comprehended by the memory.

With respect to the measure of this length—if referred to actual representation in the dramatic contests, it is a matter foreign to the art itself: for if a hundred Tragedies were to be exhibited in concurrence, the length of each performance must be regulated by the hour-glass; a practice of which, it is said, there have formerly been instances. But, if we determine this measure by the nature of the thing itself, the more extensive the fable, consistently with the clear and easy comprehension of the whole, the more beautiful will it be, with respect to magnitude. In general, we may say, that an action is sufficiently extended, when it is long enough to admit of a change of fortune, from happy to unhappy, or the reverse, brought about by a succession, necessary or probable, of well-connected incidents.

V.

UNITY
of
the Fable.

A fable is not one, as some conceive it to be, merely because the hero of it is one. For numberless events happen to one man, many of which are such as cannot be connected into one event: and so, likewise, there are many actions of one man which cannot be connected into any one action. Hence appears the mistake of all those Poets who have composed HERCULEIDS, THESEIDS, and

and other Poems of that kind. They conclude that because Hercules was one, so also must be the fable of which he is the subject. But HOMER, among his many other excellences, seems also to have been perfectly aware of this mistake, either from art or genius. For when he composed his ODYSSEY, he did not introduce all the events of his hero's life,—such, for instance, as the wound he received upon Parnassus²—his feigned madness³ when the Grecian army was assembling, &c.—events, not connected, either by necessary or probable consequence, with each other; but he comprehended those only which have relation to one action; for such we call that of the Odyssey.—And in the same manner he composed his *Iliad*⁴.

As,

² This incident is, however, related, and at considerable length, in the sixth book of the Odyssey, (v. 563 of Pope's translation) but digressively, and incidentally; it made no essential part of his general plan.—See Sect. 17.

³ A ridiculous story.—“To avoid going to the Trojan war, Ulysses pretended to be mad; and, to prove his insanity, went to plough with an ox and a horse; but Palamedes, in order to detect him, laid his infant son, Telemachus, in the way of the plough; upon which Ulysses immediately stopped, and thereby proved himself to be in his right senses.”—(Hyginus, &c.)

⁴ Or, according to a different, and perhaps preferable, reading, thus:—“but he planned his Odyssey, as he also did his Iliad, upon an action that is one in the sense here explained.”—See the NOTE.

As, therefore, in other mimetic arts, one imitation⁵ is an imitation of one thing, so here, the fable, being an imitation of an action, should be an imitation of an action that is one, and entire; the parts of it being so connected, that if any one of them be either transposed or taken away, the whole will be destroyed, or changed: for whatever may be either retained, or omitted, without making any sensible difference, is not, properly, a *part*⁶.

VI. It

⁵ i. e. one imitative work. Thus one picture represents, or should represent, but one thing;—a single object, or a single action, &c. So, every Poem, (the Orlando Furioso as much as the Iliad,) is one imitation—one imitative work, and should imitate one action, in Aristotle's sense of unity, like the Poems of Homer; not a number of actions unconnected with each other, or connected merely by their common relation to one person, as in the Thebais, &c. or to one time, as in the Poem of Ariosto; or, by their resemblance merely, as in the Metamorphoses of Ovid.

⁶ “ The painter will not enquire what things may be admitted without much censure. He will not think it enough to shew that they may be there, he will shew that they must be there; that their absence would render his picture maimed and defective.——“ They should make a part of that whole which would be imperfect without them.”

Sir J. Reynolds, Disc. on Painting, p. 106.

VI.

It appears, farther, from what has been said, that it is not the Poet's province to relate such things as have actually happened, but such as might have happened—such as are possible, according either to probable, or necessary, consequence.

Different Provinces
of the POET and the
HISTORIAN.

For it is not by writing in verse, or prose, that the Historian and the Poet are distinguished: the work of Herodotus might be versified; but it would still be a species of history, no less with metre, than without. They are distinguished by this, that the one relates what has been, the other what might be. On this account, Poetry is a more philosophical, and a more excellent thing, than History: for Poetry is chiefly conversant about general truth; History, about particular. In what manner, for example, any person of a certain character would speak, or act, probably, or necessarily—this is general; and this is the object of Poetry, even while it makes use of particular names. But, what Alcibiades did, or what happened to him—this is particular truth.

With respect to Comedy, this is now become obvious; for here, the Poet, when he has formed his plot of probable incidents, gives to his characters whatever names he pleases; and is not, like the Iambic Poets, particular, and personal.

Tragedy,

Tragedy, indeed, retains the use of real names ; and the reason is, that, what we are disposed to believe, we must think possible : now what has never actually happened, we are not apt to regard as possible ; but what has been is unquestionably so, or it could not have been at all⁷. There are, however, some Tragedies in which one or two of the names are historical, and the rest feigned : there are even some, in which none of the names are historical ; such is AGATHO's Tragedy called The Flower ; for in that, all is invention, both incidents, and names ; and yet it pleases. It is by no means, therefore, essential, that a Poet should confine himself to the known and established subjects of Tragedy. Such a restraint would, indeed, be ridiculous ; since even those subjects that are known, are known, comparatively, but to few, and yet are interesting to all.

From all this it is manifest ; that a Poet should be a Poet, or maker, of fables, rather than of verses ; since it is imitation that constitutes the Poet, and of this imitation actions are the object : nor is he the less a Poet, though the incidents of his fable should chance to be such as have have actually happened; for nothing hinders, but that some true events may possess that probability^{*}, the invention of which entitles him to the name of Poet.

⁷ " or it could not, &c."—The philosopher might safely have trusted to any reader to find this proof of the possibility of what has actually happened.—A modern writer would certainly have omitted this ; and I wish Aristotle had. But it is my business to say whatever he has said.

VII.

Of simple fables or actions, the episodic are the worst. I call that an episodic fable, the episodes[°] of which follow each other without any probable or necessary connection; a fault into which bad Poets are betrayed by their want of skill, and good Poets by the players: for in order to accommodate their pieces to the purposes of rival performers in the dramatic contests, they spin out the action beyond their powers, and are thus, frequently,

EPISODIC
FABLES,
the worst—
and why.

* It may appear to the reader to be a strange observation, that "some true events MAY be probable." But he will recollect what sort of events, and what sort of probability, Aristotle here speaks of: i. e. of extraordinary events, such as Poetry requires, and of that more strict and perfect probability, that closer connection and visible dependence of circumstances, which are always required from the Poet, though in such events, not often to be found in fact, and real life, and therefore not expected from the Historian.—See the quotation from Diderot, NOTE 156.

° Episodes — episodic circumstances — in the second sense explained NOTE 37: by no means in the modern and epic sense, of a digression, incidental narrative, &c.

frequently, forced to break the connection and continuity of its parts.

But Tragedy is an imitation, not only of a complete action, but also of an action exciting terror and pity. Now that purpose is best answered by such events as are not only unexpected, but unexpected consequences of each other: for, by this means, they will have more of the wonderful, than if they appeared to be the effects of chance; since we find, that, among events merely casual, those are the most wonderful and striking, which seem to imply design: as when, for instance, the statue of *Mity*s at Argos killed the very man who had murdered *Mity*s, by falling down upon him as he was surveying it; events of this kind, not having the appearance of accident. It follows then, that such fables as are formed on these principles must be the best.

VIII.

Fables
SIMPLE OR COMPLI-CATED.

Fables are of two sorts, simple and complicated; for so also are the actions themselves of which they are imitations. An action, (having the continuity and unity prescribed,) I call simple, when its catastrophe is produced without either revolution, or discovery: complicated, when with one, or both. And these should arise from the structure of the fable itself, so as to be the natural consequences, necessary or probable, of what has preceded in the action. For there is a wide difference difference between incidents that follow from, and incidents that follow only after, each other.

IX.

A REVOLUTION, is a change, (such as has already been mentioned¹;) into the reverse of what is expected from the circumstances of the action; and that, produced, as we have said, by probable, or necessary consequence.

PARTS of
the FABLE.1.
REVOLU-TIONS.

Thus, in the *Oedipus*², the messenger, meaning to make Oedipus happy, and to relieve him from the dread he was under with respect to his mother, by making known to him his real birth, produces an effect directly contrary to his intention. Thus, also, in the Tragedy of Lynceus: Lynceus is led to suffer death, Danaus follows to inflict it; but the event, resulting from the course of the incidents, is, that Danaus is killed, and Lynceus saved.

A DISCOVERY, as, indeed, the word implies, is a change from unknown to known, happening between those characters whose happiness, or unhappiness, forms the catastrophe of the drama, and terminating in friendship or enmity.

2.
DISCOVER-IES.

The

¹ Sect. 7.—“ events that are unexpected consequences of each other.”

² The Oedipus Tyrannus of Sophocles.

The best sort of Discovery is that which is accompanied by a Revolution³, as in the Oedipus.

There are, also, other Discoveries; for inanimate things, of any kind, may be recognized in the same manner⁴; and we may discover whether such a particular thing was, or was not, done by such a person:—but the Discovery most appropriated to the fable, and the action, is that above defined; because such Discoveries, and Revolutions, must excite either pity or terror; and Tragedy we have defined to be an imitation of pitiable and terrible actions: and because, also, by them the event, happy, or unhappy, is produced.

Now Discoveries, being relative things, are sometimes of one of the persons only, the other being

³ Such is the discovery of Joseph, by his brethren, Gen. xlv.—the most beautiful and affecting example that can be given.

⁴ I do not understand Aristotle to be here speaking of such discoveries of “inanimate things” (rings, bracelets, &c.) as are the means of bringing about the true discovery—that of the persons. For, in what follows, it is implied that these “other sorts of discovery” produce neither terror nor pity, neither happiness nor unhappiness; which can by no means be said of such discoveries as are instrumental to the personal discovery, and, through that, to the catastrophe of the piece. Of these, he treats afterwards, Sect. 16.—Dacier, I think, has mistaken this.

being already known; and sometimes they are reciprocal: thus, Iphigenia is discovered to Orestes by the letter which she charges him to deliver, and Orestes is obliged, by other means, to make himself known to her⁵.

These then are two parts of the fable—Revelation and Discovery. There is a third, which we denominate, DISASTERS. The two former have been explained. Disasters comprehend all painful or destructive actions; the exhibition of death, bodily anguish, wounds, and every thing of that kind.

3.
DISASTERS.

X.

The parts of Tragedy which are necessary to constitute its quality, have been already enumerated. Its parts of quantity—the distinct parts into which it is divided—are these: PROLOGUE, EPISODE, EXODE, and CHORUS; which last is also divided into the PARODE, and the STASIMON. These are common to all Tragedies. The COMMOI are found in some only.

PARTS
into which Tragedy
is DIVIDED.

The *Prologue*⁶ is all that part of a Tragedy which precedes the Parode of the Chorus.—

The

⁵ See Mr. Potter's Euripides:—Iphigenia in Tauris, v. 799, &c.

⁶ Prologue—This may be compared to our first act. See NOTE 40.

The *Episode*⁷, all that part which is included between entire Choral Odes.—The *Exode*⁸, that part which has no Choral Ode after it.

Of the Choral part, the *Parode*⁹ is the first speech of the whole Chorus: the *Stasimon*¹, includes all those Choral Odes that are without Anapæsts and Trochees.

The *Commos*², is a general lamentation of the Chorus and the Actors together.

Such are the separate parts into which Tragedy is divided. Its parts of quality were before explained.

XI. The

⁷ Episode—i. e. a part introduced, inserted; &c. as, all the dialogue was, originally, between the choral odes, See Part I. Sect. 7. *Note*⁷, p. 111.

⁸ Exode—i. e. the going out, or exit: the concluding act, as we should term it. The Greek tragedies never finished with a choral ode.

⁹ Parode—i. e. entry of the Chorus upon the stage: and hence the term was applied to what they first sung, upon their entry. See the NOTE.

¹ Stasimon—i. e. stable: because, as it is explained, these odes were sung by the choral troop when fixed on the stage, and at rest: whereas the Parode is said to have been sung, as they came on. Hence, the trochaic and anapæstic measures, being lively and full of motion, were adapted to the Parode, but not to the Stasimon.

² From a verb signifying to beat or strike; alluding to the gestures of violent grief.

XI.

The order of the subject leads us to consider, in the next place, what the Poet should aim at, and what avoid, in the construction of his fable; and by what means the purpose of Tragedy may be best effected.

What CATASTRO-PHE, and what CHA-RACTER, best adapted to the purposes
of Tragedy.

Now since it is requisite to the perfection of a Tragedy that its plot should be of the complicated, not of the simple kind, and that it should initiate such actions as excite terror and pity, (this being the peculiar property of the Tragic imitation,) it follows evidently, in the first place, that the change from prosperity to adversity should not be represented as happening to a virtuous character³; for this raises disgust, rather than terror, or compassion. Neither should the contrary change, from adversity to prosperity, be exhibited in a vitious character: this, of all plans, is the most opposite to the genius of Tragedy, having no one property that it ought to have; for it is neither gratifying in a moral view, nor affecting, nor terrible. Nor, again, should the fall of a very bad man from prosperous to adverse fortune be represented: because, though such a subject may be pleasing from its moral tendency, it will produce neither pity nor terror. For our pity is excited

³ i. e. eminently virtuous, or good: for so he expresses it at the end of this section.

excited by misfortunes undeservedly suffered, and our terror, by some resemblance between the sufferer and ourselves. Neither of these effects will, therefore, be produced by such an event.

There remains, then, for our choice, the character between these extremes; that of a person neither eminently virtuous or just, nor yet, involved in misfortune by deliberate vice, or villany; but by some error of human frailty: and this person should, also, be some one of high fame and flourishing prosperity. For example, OEDIPUS, THYESTES, or other illustrious men of such families.

XII.

CATA-STROPHE should be SINGLE, and that UNHAPPY,

Hence it appears, that, to be well constructed, a fable, contrary to the opinion of some, should be *single*⁴ rather than double; that the change of fortune should not be from adverse to prosperous, but the reverse; and that it should be the consequence, not of vice, but of some great frailty, in a character such as has been described, or better rather than worse.

These

⁴ What is here meant by a single fable, will appear presently from the account of its opposite—the double fable. It must not be confounded with the simple fable, though, in the original, both are expressed by the same word. The simple fable is only a fable without revolution, or discovery. Sect. 8.

These principles are confirmed by experience; for Poets, formerly, admitted almost any story into the number of Tragic subjects; but now, the subjects of the best Tragedies are confined to a few families—to Alcmaeon, Oedipus, Orestes, Meleager, Thyestes, Telephus, and others, the sufferers, or the authors, of some terrible calamity.

The most perfect Tragedy, then, according to the principles of the art, is of this construction. Whence appears the mistake of those critics who censure EURIPIDES for this practice in his Tragedies, many of which terminate unhappily; for this, as we have shewn, is right. And, as the strongest proof of it, we find that upon the stage, and in the dramatic contests, such Tragedies, if they succeed, have always the most Tragic effect: and EURIPIDES, though, in other respects, faulty in the conduct of his subjects, seems clearly to be the most Tragic of all Poets.

I place in the second rank, that kind of fable to which some assign the first; that which is of a double construction, like the Odyssey, and also ends in two opposite events, to the good, and to the bad, characters. That this passes for the best, is owing to the weakness^s of the spectators, to whose whose wishes the Poets accommodate their productions. This kind of pleasure, however, is not the proper pleasure of Tragedy, but belongs rather to Comedy; for there, if even the bitterest enemies, like Orestes and Ægisthus, are introduced, they quit the scene at last in perfect friendship, and no blood is shed on either side.

^s That weakness which cannot bear strong emotions, even from fictitious distress. I have known those who could not look at that admirable picture, the Ugolino of Sir

XIII.

TERROR
and PITY to be excited by the ACTION, not by the DECORATION.

Terror and pity may be raised by the decoration—the mere *spectacle*⁶; but they may also arise from the circumstances of the action itself; which is far preferable, and shews a superior Poet. For the fable should be so constructed, that, without the assistance of the sight, its incidents may excite horror and commiseration in those, who hear them only: an effect, which every one, who hears the fable of the Oedipus, must experience. But, to produce this effect by means of the decoration, discovers

Sir Jos. Reynolds.—To some minds, every thing, that is not cheerful is shocking.—But, might not the preference here attributed to weakness, be attributed to better causes—the gratification of philanthropy, the love of justice, order, &c.?—the same causes which, just before, induced Aristotle himself to condemn, as shocking, and disgusting, those fables which involve the virtuous in calamity.

⁶ See a very pleasant paper of Addison's on this subject, Spectator N° 42. We know the effect of the skull and black hangings in the Fair Penitent, the scaffold in Venice Preserved, the tomb in Romeo and Juliet, &c.

discovers want of art in the Poet; who must also be supplied, by the public, with an expensive apparatus⁷.

As to those Poets, who make use of the decoration in order to produce, not the terrible, but the marvellous only, their purpose has nothing in common with that of Tragedy. For we are not to seek for every sort of pleasure from Tragedy, but for that only which is proper to the species.

Since, therefore, it is the business of the Tragic Poet to give that pleasure, which arises from pity and terror, through imitation, it is evident, that he ought to produce that effect by the circumstances of the action itself.

XIV.

Let us, then, see, of what kind those incidents are, which appear most terrible, or piteous.

Now, such actions must, of necessity, happen between persons who are either friends, or enemies, or indifferent to each other. If an enemy kills, or purposes to kill, an enemy, in neither case is

Of DISASTROUS INCIDENTS, and their proper management.

⁷ Among other public offices, which the wealthier citizens of Athens were, by turns, called upon to discharge, was that of the Choragi, who were obliged, at their own expence, to provide a chorus, dresses, and, perhaps, scenes, and the whole decoration of theatrical exhibitions.

is any commiseration raised in us³, beyond what necessarily arises from the nature of the action itself.

The case is the same, when the persons are neither friends nor enemies. But when such disasters happen between friends²—when, for instance, the brother kills, or is going to kill, his brother, the son his father, the mother her son, or the reverse—these, and others of a similar kind, are the proper incidents for the Poet's choice. The received Tragic subjects, therefore, he is not at liberty essentially to alter; Clytæmnestra must die by the hand of Orestes, and Eriphyle by that of Alcmæon: but it is his province to invent other subjects, and to make a skilful use of those which he finds already established.—What I mean by a skilful use, I proceed to explain.

The atrocious action may be perpetrated knowingly and intentionally¹, as was usual with the earlier Poets; and as EURIPIDES, also, has represented Medea destroying her children⁴.

It

¹ i.e. any of that degree of commiseration, which is requisite to the effect of the deepest tragedy, such as is the subject of this section. See NOTE 102.

² Aristotle uses this word here, and in other parts of his works, in a wide sense, including relations, &c.

³ As in Macbeth, Richard the Third, &c.

⁴ See Mr. Potter's translation of the Tragedy here alluded to.

It may, likewise, be perpetrated by those, who are ignorant, at the time, of the connection between them and the injured person, which they afterwards discover³; like Oedipus, in SOPHOCLES. There, indeed, the action itself does not make a part of the drama⁴: the Alcmaeon of Astydamas, and Telegonus in the Ulysses Wounded, furnish instances within the Tragedy⁵.

There is yet a third way, where a person upon the point of perpetrating, through ignorance, some dreadful deed, is prevented by a sudden discovery⁶.

Beside these, there is no other proper way. For the action must of necessity be either done,
or

³ As in the Fatal Curiosity of Lillo.

⁴ The murder of Laius by Oedipus, his son, is supposed to have happened a considerable time before the beginning of the action.

⁵ Of these two dramas nothing more is known than the little that Aristotle here tells us. In the first, the Poet adhered so far to history, as to make Alcmaeon kill his mother Eriphyle, but with the improvement, (according to Aristotle's idea,) of making him do it ignorantly. The story of Telegonus is, that he was a son of Ulysses by Circe; was sent by her in quest of his father, whom he wounded, without knowing him, in a skirmish relative to some sheep, that he attempted to carry off from the island of Ithaca. It is somewhat singular, that the wound is said to have been given with a kind of Otobeite spear, headed with a sharp fish-bone. See Pope's Odyssey XI. 167. and the note.

⁶ As in Merope; Aristotle's own example.

or not done, and that, either with knowledge, or without: but of all these ways*, that of being ready to execute, knowingly, and yet not executing, is the worst; for this is, at the same time, shocking, and yet not Tragic, because it exhibits no disastrous event. It is, therefore, never, or very rarely, made use of. The attempt of Hæmon to kill Creon, in the Antigone†, is an example.

Next to this, is the actual execution of the purpose‡.

To execute, through ignorance, and afterwards to discover, is better: for thus, the shocking atrociousness is avoided, and, at the same time, the discovery is striking.

But the best of all these ways, is the last. Thus, in the Tragedy of Cresphontes, Merope, in the very act of putting her son to death, discovers him, and is prevented. In the Iphigenia§, the sister, in the same manner, discovers her brother; and in the Helle¶, the son discovers his mother, at the instant when he was going to betray her.

On this account it is, that the subjects of Tragedy, as before remarked, are confined to a small

* There is here much embarrassment and confusion in the original. See NOTE 105.

† Of Sophocles. See Franklin's, or Brumoy's, translation.

‡ The first of the three proper and admissible ways that were enumerated; that of Macbeth, &c.

§ The Iphigenia in Tauris of Euripides.

¶ Of this Tragedy nothing farther is known.

small number of families. For it was not to art, but to *fortune*², that Poets applied themselves, to find incidents of this nature. Hence the necessity of having recourse to those families, in which such calamities have happened.

Of the PLOT, or FABLE, and its requisites, enough has now been said.

XV.

With respect to the MANNERS, four things are to be attended to by the Poet. Of the MANNERS.

First, and principally, they should be good. Now manners, or character, belong, as we have said before, to any speech or action that manifests a certain disposition; and they are bad, or good, as the disposition manifested is bad, or good. This goodness of manners may be found in persons of every description³: the manners of a woman, or of a slave, may be good; though, in general, women

² i.e. to history or tradition.—See above, Sect. 6. p. 127. and Sect. 12. p. 136.

³ This is observed, to shew the consistence of this first precept with the next. The manners must be drawn as good as may be, consistently with the observance of propriety, with respect to the general character of different sexes, ages, conditions, &c. It might have been objected—“ You say, the character must be good. But suppose the Poet has to represent, for instance, a slave?—the character of slaves in general is notoriously bad.”—The answer is,—any thing may be good in its kind.

women are, perhaps, rather bad, than good, and slaves, altogether bad.

The second requisite of the manners, is propriety. There is a manly character of bravery and fierceness, which cannot, with propriety, be given to a woman.

The third requisite is resemblance; for this is a different thing from their being good, and proper, as above described⁴.

The fourth, is uniformity; for even though the model of the Poet's imitation be some person of ununiform manners, still that person must be represented as uniformly ununiform.

We have an example of manners unnecessarily bad, in the character of Menelaus in the Tragedy of *Orestes*⁵: of improper and unbecoming manners, in the lamentation of Ulysses in Scylla, and in the speech of *Menalippe*⁶: of ununiform manners, ⁴ That is, the manners may be both good, and proper or becoming; and yet not like. For example; should a Poet draw Medea, gentle, patient, &c. the manners would be both good, and becoming, but not like—not conformable to the historical or traditional character of the individual. The portrait would be defective.

⁵ The Orestes of Euripides.—Menelaus, throughout this play, as Mr. Potter has justly remarked, is “represented as an ungrateful, unfeeling, timid, designing poltron.”

⁶ The author had here, no doubt, given an instance of the violation of resemblance in the manners, though it be wanting in all the manuscripts.—Of the Scylla, nothing

ners, in the Iphigenia at Aulis; for there, the Iphigenia, who supplicates for life, has no resemblance to the Iphigenia of the conclusion.

In the manners, as in the fable, the Poet should always aim, either at what is necessary, or what is probable; so that such a character shall appear to speak or act, necessarily, or probably, in such a manner, and this event, to be the necessary or probable consequence of that.—⁷Hence it is evident, is known.—Some fragments remain of Menalippe the Wise, (for this was the title,) a Tragedy of Euripides, the subject of which is a curiosity. Menalippe was delivered of two children, the fruits of a stolen amour with Neptune. To conceal her shame, she hid them in her father's cow-house; where he found them, and, being less of a philosopher than his daughter, took them for a monstrous production of some of his cows, and ordered them to be burned. His daughter, in order to save them, without exposing herself, enters into a long physical argument, upon the principles of Anaxagoras, to cure her father of his unphilosophical prejudices about monsters, and portentous births, and to convince him, that these infants might be the natural children of his cows. Part of this very speech is preserved by Dionysius of Halicarnassus, [See the Ox. Eurip. vol. iii. p. 371.] and it is this masculine philosopher that is here understood to be censured as an impropriety of character.—How would a Tragedy on such a subject as this, be now received by an audience?

⁷ What follows, to the end of the paragraph, appears rather out of place. But see the NOTE. For development, see Sect. 18. p. 154.

[MACHINERY.]

evident, that the development also of a fable should arise out of the fable itself, and not depend upon machinery, as in the Medea^{*}, or in the incidents relative to the return of the Greeks, in the Iliad[†]. The proper application of machinery is to such circumstances, as are extraneous to the drama; such, as either happened before the time of the action, and could not, by human means, be known; or, are to happen after, and require to be foretold: for to the Gods we attribute the knowledge of all things. But nothing improbable should be admitted in the incidents of the fable[‡]; or, if it cannot be avoided, it should, at least, be confined to such as are without the Tragedy itself; as in the Oedipus of SOPHOCLES.

Since Tragedy is an imitation of what is best, we should follow the example of skilful portrait-painters; who, while they express the peculiar lineaments, and produce a likeness, at the same time

* Of Euripides. Medea is carried off, at the end of the Tragedy, in a chariot drawn by flying dragons. See Mr. Potter's Transl. v. 1443, &c.

† Pope's Iliad, II. 189, &c.—if the text here is right: but this is doubtful. See the NOTE.

‡ By incidents of the fable, Aristotle here plainly means, all those actions or events which are essential parts of the subject or story, whether previous to the action, and necessary to be known, or included in it, and actually represented in the drama. Compare Part III. Sect. 6.

time improve upon the original². And thus, too, the Poet, when he imitates the manners of passionate men, (or of indolent, or any other of a similar kind,) should draw an example approaching rather to a good, than to a hard and ferocious character: as Achilles is drawn, by AGATHO, and by HOMER. These things the Poet should keep in view; and, besides these, whatever relates to those *senses which have a necessary connection with Poetry: for here, also, he may often err.—But of this enough has been said in the treatises already published.

XVI.

¹ What is meant by a DISCOVERY, has already been explained. Its kinds are the following.

First, the most inartificial of all, and to which, from poverty of invention, the generality of Poets have

Different KINDS
of DISCO-VERY.

² This seems intended to explain his third precept, of resemblance in the manners; to reconcile it with his first, and to shew what sort of likeness the nature of Tragic imitation requires.—Compare Part I. Sect. 3.—and Part IV. Sect. 5.

* i.e. To the sight, and the hearing; in other words, to actual representation. See the NOTE.

³ The reader, who recollects the conclusion of Sect. 14, where the author took a formal leave of the "fable and its requisites," and proceeded to the second essential part of Tragedy, the manners, will hardly be of Dacier's opinion, who contends, that this section is rightly placed. His reasons are perfectly unsatisfactory.

have recourse—the discovery by visible signs. Of these signs, some are natural; as, the lance with which the family of the *earth-born Thebans*⁴ were marked, or the stars which Carcinus has made use of in his Thyestes: others are adventitious; and of these, some are corporal, as scars; some external, as necklaces, bracelets, &c. or the little boat by which the discovery is made in the Tragedy of *Tyro*⁵. Even these, however, may be employed with more, or less skill. The discovery of Ulysses, for example, to his nurse, by means of his scar, is very different from his discovery, by the same means, to the herdsmen⁶. For all those discoveries, in which the sign is produced by way of proof, are inartificial. Those, which, like that in the *Washing of Ulysses*⁷, happen suddenly and casually, are better. Secondly,

⁴ The descendants of the original Thebans, who, according to the fabulous history, sprung from the earth when Cadmus sowed the Dragon's teeth, &c.—This noble race are said to have been distinguished by the natural mark of a lance upon their bodies.

⁵ Sophocles wrote two Tragedies of this name, neither of them preserved.—The story of Tyro leads us to suppose, that Aristotle means the little boat, trough, or, as some render it, cradle, in which Tyro had exposed her children, on, or near, the river: the particular manner of the discovery, it would be in vain to guess.

⁶ See Pope's Odyssey, XIX. v. 451, &c. and the note there, on v. 461, and XXI. 226.

⁷ The antients distinguished the different parts of Homer's Poems by different titles accommodated to the different

Secondly—Discoveries invented, at pleasure, by the Poet, and, on that account, still inartificial. For example; in the Iphigenia, Orestes, after having discovered his sister, discovers himself to her. She, indeed, is discovered by the letter; but Orestes, by [verbal proofs:] and these are such, as the Poet chuses to make him produce, not such, as arise from the circumstances of the *fable. This kind of discovery, therefore, borders upon the fault of that first mentioned: for, some of the things from which those proofs are drawn, are even such, as might have been actually produced as visible signs.

Another instance, is the discovery by the sound of the shuttle in the Tereus of SOPHOCLES.

Thirdly—The Discovery occasioned by memory; as, when some recollection is excited by the view of a particular object. Thus, in the Cyprians of Dicæogenes, a discovery is produced by tears shed at the sight of a picture: and thus, in the Tale of Alcinous, Ulysses, listening to the bard, recollects, weeps, and is discovered⁹. Fourthly, different subjects, or episodes; and, in referring to him, they made use of these, not of the division into books. Thus, the part of the sixth book of the Odyssey above referred to, was called The Washing. The Tale of Alcinous was another title, which will presently be mentioned: See the NOTE on that passage.

* See Mr. Potter's translation of the Iphigenia in Tauris, v. 884 to 910..

⁹ Pope's Odyssey, VIII. 569, &c.

Fourthly—The discovery occasioned by reasoning or *inference*¹; such as that in the Choëphoræ: “The person, who is arrived, resembles me—no one resembles me but Orestes—it must be he!” And that of Polyides the Sophist, in his *Iphigenia*²; for the conclusion of Orestes was natural.—“It had been his sister’s lot to be sacrificed, and it was now his own!” That, also, in the Tydcus of Theodectes:—“He came to find his son, and he himself must perish!” And thus, the daughters of Phineus, in the Tragedy denominated from them³, viewing the place to which they were led, infer their fate:—“there they were to die, for there they were exposed!” There is also a compound sort of discovery, arising from false

¹ Occasioned by reasoning;—i. e. by reasoning, (or rather, inference, or conclusion,) in the person discovered. See the NOTE.—It should be remembered, that Aristotle is not, in this chapter, inventing discoveries, nor enumerating all the kinds possible or practicable; but only classing and examining such, as he found in use, or could recollect, in the Tragedies and Epic Poems of his time.

² The subject appears to have been the same, as that of the Iphigenia in Tauris of Euripides. We are to suppose, that Orestes was discovered to his sister by this natural exclamation, at the moment when he was led to the altar of Diana to be sacrificed.

³ Of this, and the preceding Tragedy, we know nothing, but what we learn here: i. e. that in the one, a father, and in the other, the daughters of Phineus, were discovered, and, probably, saved, by those exclamations.

false inference in the audience ; as in Ulysses the False Messenger : he asserts, that he shall know the bow, which he had not seen ; the audience falsely infer, that a discovery, by that means, will follow⁴.

But, of all Discoveries, the best is that, which arises from the action itself, and in which a striking effect is produced by probable incidents. Such is that in the Oedipus of SOPHOCLES : and that in the Iphigenia ; for nothing more natural than her desire of conveying the letter. Such discoveries are the best, because they alone are effected without the help of invented proofs, or bracelets, &c.⁵

Next to these, are the discoveries by inference.

XVII.

The Poet, both when he plans, and when he writes, his Tragedy, should put himself, as much as possible, in the place of a spectator ; for, by this means, seeing everything distinctly, as if present at the action, he will discern what is proper, and no inconsistencies will escape him. The fault objected to Carcinus is a proof of this.

Amphiaraus

PRAC-TICAL DIRECTIONS for the TRAGIC POET.

⁴ The original here is all incurable corruption, and impenetrable obscurity. See the NOTE.

⁵ All this is extremely perplexing. I must refer the reader to the NOTE ;—but, certainly, with no promise of any thing like perfect satisfaction.

Amphiaraus had left the temple⁶: this, the Poet, for want of conceiving the action to pass before his eyes, overlooked; but in the representation, the audience were disgusted, and the piece condemned.

In composing, the Poet should even, as much as possible, be an actor: for, by natural sympathy, they are most persuasive and affecting, who are under the influence of actual passion. We share the agitation of those, who appear to be truly agitated—the anger of those, who appear to be truly angry.

Hence it is, that Poetry demands, either great natural quickness of parts, or an enthusiasm allied to madness. By the first of these, we mould ourselves with facility to the imitation of every form; by the other, transported out of ourselves, we become what we imagine.

When the Poet invents a subject, he should, first, draw a general sketch of it, and afterwards give it the detail of its Episodes, and extend it. The general argument, for instance, of the *Iphigenia*⁷, should be considered in this way:

“ A virgin,

⁶ As the subject of this Tragedy is not known, it seems impossible, from what is here said, even to guess how this was.

⁷ In Tauris.—The general spirit of this precept of Aristotle is well illustrated by Diderot in the Essai sur la Poesie Dram. at the end of his Pere de Famille, p. 292, &c.

“ Surtout, s'imposer la loi de ne pas jeter sur le papier “ une seule idée de detail, que le plan ne soit arrêté,” &c.

“ A virgin, on the point of being sacrificed, is imperceptibly conveyed away from the altar, and transported to another country, where it was the custom to sacrifice all strangers to Diana. Of these rites she is appointed priestess. It happens, some time after, that her brother arrives there.” But why?—because an oracle had commanded him, for some reason exterior to the general plan. For what purpose?—This, also, is exterior to the plan.—“ He arrives, is seized, and, at the instant that he is going to be sacrificed, the discovery is made.”—And this may be, either in the way of Euripides, or like that of *Polyides*⁸, by the natural reflection of Orestes, that—“ it was his fate also, as it had been his sister’s, to be sacrificed ;” by which exclamation he is saved.

After this, the Poet, when he has given names to his characters, should proceed to the Episodes of his action ; and he must take care, that these belong properly to the subject ; like that of the madness of Orestes, which occasions his being taken, and his escape by means of the ablution⁹. In dramatic Poetry the Episodes are short ; but, in the Epic, they are the means of drawing out the poem to its proper length. The general story of the ODYSSEY, for example, lies in a small compass :

⁸ See the preceding section.

⁹ See v. 301, &c. and v. 1248, &c. of Mr. Potter’s translation.

compass: "A certain man is supposed to be "absent from his own country for many years—
 "he is persecuted by Neptune, deprived of all "his companions, and left alone. At home, his "affairs are in disorder—the suitors of his wife
 "dissipating his wealth, and plotting the de"struction of his son. Tossed by many tempests,
 "he at length arrives, and, making himself known
 "to some of his family, attacks his enemies,
 "destroys them, and remains himself in safety."
 This is the essential; the rest is Episode.

XVIII.

COMPLI-CATION AND DEVELOP-MENT
 of the Plot.

Every Tragedy consists of two parts—the complication, and the *development*¹. The complication is often formed by incidents supposed prior to the action, and by a part, also, of those that are within the action; the rest, form the development. I call complication, all that is between the beginning of the piece, and the last part, where the change of fortune commences:—development, all between the beginning of that change, and the conclusion. Thus, in the Lynceus of Theodectes, the events antecedent to the action,

and

¹ Literally, the tying, and untying. With the French, Nœud, and Dénouement, are convenient and established terms. I hope I shall be pardoned for avoiding our awkward expressions of the intrigue and unravelling of a plot, &c. I could find no terms less exceptionable than those I have used.

and the seizure of the child, constitute the complication; the development is from the accusation of murder to the end^a.

XIX.

There are four kinds of Tragedy, deducible from so many parts, which have been mentioned. One kind is the COMPLICATED; where all depends on revolution and discovery: another is the DISASTROUS^b, such as those on the subject of Ajax or Ixion: another, the MORAL^c, as the Phthiotides, and the Peleus: and, fourthly, the SIMPLE, such as the Phorcides^d, the Prometheus, and all those Tragedies, the scene of which is laid in the infernal regions.

Different KINDS
of TRAGEDY.

It

^a Of the plot of this Tragedy nothing is known. See the NOTE.

^b For these two kinds, see above, Sect. 8, and 9.

^c i. e. In which the delineation of manners or character is predominant. See the NOTE.—Our language, I think, wants a word to express this sense of the Greek ἠθικόν, and the Latin, moratum. Mannered, has, I believe, sometimes been used in this sense; but so seldom, as to sound awkwardly. We know nothing of the subjects here given as examples.

^d Æschylus wrote a Tragedy so named. It is difficult to imagine what he could make of these three curious personages, who were born old women, lived under ground, and had but one eye among them, which they used by turns; carrying it, I suppose, in a case, like a pair of spectacles.—Such is the tale! See Mr. Potter's Æschylus, P. 49, quarto.

It should be the Poet's aim to make himself master of all these manners ; of as many of them, at least, as possible, and those the best: especially, considering the captious criticism, to which, in these days, he is exposed. For, the public, having now seen different Poets excel in each of these different kinds, expect every single Poet to unite in himself, and to surpass, the peculiar excellences of them all.

⁶ One Tragedy may justly be considered as the same with another, or different, not according as the subjects, but, rather, according as the complication and development, are the same or different.—Many Poets, when they have complicated well, develop badly⁷. They should endeavour to deserve equal applause in both.

XX. We

⁶ What follows seems rather to belong to the preceding section. But perhaps Aristotle was led to this observation here, by what he had just dropped about the unfair and cavilling criticism of the times, which probably, (as Dacier has remarked,) denied the praise of invention to those who composed Tragedies upon old subjects, with old titles, which, we see, was the common practice of the Greek Poets.

⁷ No fault so common: see NOTE 59.—It was with the Greek Tragedians, probably, as with Shakspeare.—

“ In many of his plays the latter part is evidently neglected. When he found himself near the end of his work, and in view of his reward, he shortened the labour, to snatch the profit. He therefore remits his “ efforts

XX.

We must also be attentive to what has been often mentioned⁸, and not construct a Tragedy upon an Epic plan. By an Epic plan, I mean, a fable composed of *many fables*⁹; as if any one, for instance, should take the entire fable of the ILIAD for the subject of a Tragedy. In the Epic Poem, the length of the whole admits of a proper magnitude in the parts; but in the drama, the effect of such a plan is far different from what is expected. As a proof of this, those Poets, who have formed the whole of the destruction of Troy into a Tragedy, instead of confining themselves (as Euripides, but not Æschylus, has done, in the story of Niobe,) to a part, have either been condemned in the representation, or have contended without success. Even Agatho has failed on this account, and on this only; for, in revolutions, and in actions also of the simple kind, these Poets succeed wonderfully in what they aim at; and that is, the union of Tragic effect with

Too great EXTENT
of PLAN to be avoided.

moral “ efforts where he should most vigorously exert them,

“ and his catastrophe is improbably produced, or im“ perfectly represented.” Johnson’s Pref. to Shakspeare.

⁸ See Part I. Sect. 9.—II. Sect. 7.

⁹ i. e.—of many distinct parts, or Episodes, each of them capable of furnishing a Tragic fable. Compare Part III. Sect. 1. and V. Sect. 3. about the want of strict unity in the epic fable.

moral tendency: as when, for example, a character of great wisdom, but without integrity, is deceived, like Sisyphus; or, a brave, but unjust man, conquered. Such events, as Agatho says, are probable, “as it is probable, in general, that many things should happen contrary to probability.”

XXI.

Of the CHORUS.

The CHORUS should be considered as one of the persons in the drama^{*}; should be a part of the whole, and a sharer in the action: not as in *Euripides*², but, as in Sophocles. As for other Poets—

^{*} Actoris partes chorus, officiumque virile
Defendat: neu quid medios intercinat actus,
Quod non proposito conducat & hæreat aptè.

Hor. A. P. 193.

^{*} This expression does not, I think, necessarily imply any stronger censure of Euripides, than that the Choral Odes of his Tragedies were, in general, more loosely connected with the subject, than those of Sophocles; which, on examination, would, I believe, be found true. For, that this is the fault here meant, not the improper “choice of the persons who compose the Chorus,” as the ingenious translator of Euripides understands, is, I think, plain from what immediately follows; the connection being this:—“Sophocles is, in this respect, most perfect; “Euripides less so; as to the others, their choral songs “are totally foreign to the subject of their Tragedies.” See Mr. Potter’s Euripides—Postscript to the Trojan Dames. Dr. Warton’s Essay on the Genius, &c. of Pope, vol. i. p. 71.

Poets—their choral songs have no more connection with their subject, than with that of any other Tragedy : and hence, they are now become detached pieces, inserted at pleasure³ : a practice first introduced by Agatho. Yet where is the difference, between this arbitrary insertion of an Ode, and the transposition of a speech, or even of a whole Episode, from one Tragedy to another?

XXII.

Of the other parts of Tragedy enough has now been said. We are next to consider the DICTION, and the SENTIMENTS.

Of the SENTI-MENTS.

For what concerns the sentiments, we refer to the principles laid down in the books on Rhetoric; for to that subject they more properly belong. The sentiments include whatever is the object of speech ;

³ It is curious to trace the gradual extinction of the Chorus. At first, it was all ; then, relieved by the intermixture of dialogue, but still principal ; then, subordinate to the dialogue ; then digressive, and ill connected with the piece ; then borrowed from other pieces at pleasure—and so on, to the fiddles and the act-tunes, at which Dacier is so angry. (See his Note p. 335.) The performers in the orchestra of a modern theatre, are little, I believe, aware, that they occupy the place, and may consider themselves as the lineal descendants, of the antient Chorus.—Orchestra (ὄρχηστρα) was the name of that part of the antient theatre, which was appropriated to the Chorus. [JUL. POLLUX, IV. p. 423.]

*speech*⁴; as, for instance, to prove, to confute, to move the passions—pity, terror, anger, and the like; to amplify, or to diminish. But it is evident, that, with respect to the things themselves also⁵, when the Poet would make them appear pitiable, or terrible, or great, or probable, he must draw from the same sources; with this difference only, that, in the drama, these things must appear to be such, without being shewn to be such⁶; whereas, in oratory, they must be made to appear so by the speaker, and in consequence of what he says: otherwise, what need of an orator, if they already appear so, in themselves, and not through his eloquence?

XXIII.

Of the DICTION.
[To the end of Part II.]

With respect to DICTION, one part of its theory is that, which treats of the *figures*⁷ of speech; such ⁴ See Harris's Philolog. Inquiries, p. 173, &c.

⁵ Things themselves—i. e. the events, incidents, &c. of the fable, as opposed to the sentiments, or thoughts. See the NOTE.

⁶ The circumstances which form the fable of Lear, Othello, Oedipus, &c. are such, as must of themselves, always appear in the highest degree atrocious, terrible, piteous, &c. whether the Poet be a Shakspeare, or a Tate. See the NOTE.

⁷ Figures of speech—not in the usual sense of that expression; as appears, indeed, from his instances. See the NOTE; and Hermes, I. 8. about the modes: particularly, NOTE (c.)

such as, commanding, entreating, relating, menacing, interrogating, answering, and the like. But this belongs, properly, to the art of acting, and to the professed masters of that kind. The Poet's knowledge, or ignorance, of these things, cannot any way materially affect the credit of his art. For who will suppose there is any justice in the cavil of Protagoras—that, in the words, “The wrath, O goddess, sing,” the Poet, where he intended a prayer, had expressed a command: for he insists, that to say, Do this, or do it not, is to command.—This subject, therefore, we pass over, as belonging to an art distinct from that of Poetry.

XXIV.

TO ALL DICTION, belong the following parts: ANALYSIS
of DICTION, OR LANGUAGE
in general.
—the letter, the syllable, the conjunction, the noun, the verb, the article, the case, the discourse or speech.

1. A letter is an indivisible sound; yet not all such sounds are letters, but those only that are capable of forming an intelligible sound. For there are indivisible sounds of brute creatures; but no such sounds are called letters. Letters are of three kinds; vowels, semivowels, and mutes. The vowel, is that, which has a distinct sound without

^s In the opening of the Iliad.

without articulation^{*}; as A, or O.—The semi-vowel, that which has a distinct sound with articulation, as S, and R. The mute, that which, with articulation, has yet no sound by itself; but joined with one of those letters that have some sound, becomes audible; as, G, and D. These all differ from each other, as they are produced by different configurations, and in different parts, of the mouth; as they are aspirated or smooth, long or short; as their tone is acute, grave, or intermediate: the detail of all which, is the business of the metrical treatises.

2. A syllable, is a sound without signification, composed of a mute and a vowel: for G R, without A, is not a syllable; with A, as G R A, it is. But these differences, also, are the subject of the metrical art.

3. A con-

* Literally, percussion: i.e. of the tongue against the palate, or teeth, the lips against the teeth, or against each other, and all the other modes of consonant articulation. See Hermes, III. 2. p. 322. where they are called "contacts." Dacier makes sad confusion here, both in his version, and his notes, by confounding the names of the consonants, when vowels are prefixed, or put after them, to make them separately pronouncible, (Te, eF, eL, &c.) with their powers in composition—as elements of words. Thus, it is strictly true, that S and R, have a sound, without the assistance of a vowel, merely by their mode of articulation. But D, or G, have no sound at all by themselves. The semivowels are l, m, n, r, s. (Dion. Halicarn. De Struct. Orat. Sect. 14.)

3. A conjunction, is a sound without signification, * * * * * of such a nature, as, out of several sounds, each of them significant, to form one significant sound¹.

4. An article, is a sound without signification, which marks the beginning, or the end of a sentence; or *distinguishes*², as when we say, THE word φημι—THE word πει, &c.

* * * * *

5. A noun, is a sound, composed of other sounds; significant, without expression of time; and of which no part is by itself significant: for even in double words, the parts are not taken in the sense that separately belongs to them. Thus, in the word Theodorus, dorus is not significant³.

6. A verb, is a sound composed of other sounds;—significant—with expression of time—and of which, as of the noun, no part is by itself significant. Thus, in the words, man, white, indication of time is not included: in the words,
he

¹ See Hermes, p. 239, Note (a). Here are, in the original, two definitions; one intelligible, and one unintelligible. I believe I shall easily be excused for giving the reader the intelligible definition only. See the NOTE.

² Hermes, p. 216, &c.

³ The name, Theodorus, is derived from Thros, God, and Doron, a gift. Yet when the word is used, it stands for neither of these ideas, but merely for the individual so named.

he walks, he walked, &c. it is included; the one expressing the present time, the other the past.

7. Cases belong to nouns and verbs. Some cases express relation; as of, *to*⁴, and the like: others, number; as man, or men, &c. Others relate to action or *pronunciation*⁵: as those of interrogation, of command, &c. for, ἰβὰδις; [did he go?] and, βὰδις, [go,] are verbal cases of that kind.

8. Discourse, or speech, is a sound significant, composed of other sounds, some of which are significant by themselves: for all discourse is not composed of verbs and nouns;—the definition of Man⁶,
for

⁴ These only, in modern grammar, are called cases: in Aristotle, number, whether in noun or verb, and the tenses, and modes, (or moods,) of verbs, are comprehended under that term; because cases, (πᾶσις—casus) are endings, terminations, inflections, &c. and, in the learned languages, all the above mentioned differences of meaning are expressed by different terminations. The French use chute, the literal translation of casus, in the sense of termination.—"La chute d'une periode," &c. And fall is used, in our poetical language, for a close, or cadence, in music.

That strain again—it had a dying FALL.

Merch. of Venice.

And so Milton in Comus, v. 251.

⁵ These modes, are the same which he calls figures of speech, Sect. 23. See the NOTE.

⁶ The definition alluded to appears to be this, literally rendered: "A terrestrial animal with two feet." (ζῷον πεζόν, δίπουν.) See the NOTE.

for instance. Discourse, or speech, may subsist without a verb: some significant part, however, it must contain; significant, as the word Cleon is, in, "Cleon walks."

A discourse or speech is one, in two senses; either as it signifies one thing, or, several things made one by conjunction. Thus, the Iliad is one by conjunction: the definition of Man, by signifying one thing.

XXV.

Of words, some are single—by which I mean, composed of parts not significant; and some double: of which last, some have one part significant, and the other not significant; and some, both parts significant. A word may also be triple, quadruple, &c. like many of those used by the Megaliotæ; as, *Hermocæcoranthus*⁷. Every word is either common, or foreign, or metaphorical, or ornamental, or invented, or extended, or contracted, or *altered*⁸.

Different KINDS
of WORDS.

By COMMON words, I mean, such as are in general, and established use.—By FOREIGN, such

as

⁷ A strange word, and how it was applied we know not. It appears to be a consolidation of three Asiatic rivers—the Hermus, the Caïcus, and the Xanthus.

⁸ See the last paragraph of NOTE 190; an observation of importance to the right understanding of this enumeration.

as belong to a different language: so that the same word may, evidently, be both common, and foreign, though not to the same people. The word Σίγυρον, to the Cyprians is common, to us, foreign.

A METAPHORICAL⁹ word is a word transferred from its proper sense; either from genus to species, or from species to genus, or from one species to another, or in the way of analogy.

1. From genus to species: as,

Secure in yonder port my vessel STANDS¹.
For, to be at anchor, is one species of standing or being *fixed*².

2. From species to genus: as,

- - - - - to Ulysses,

A THOUSAND generous deeds we owe - - ³.
For a thousand is a certain definite many, which is here used for many, in general.

3. From

⁹ For the general sense, in which metaphorical is here used, see the beginning of NOTE 183.

¹ From Homer, Od. A. 185.—In Pope's translation, l. 237.

“Far from your capital my ship resides.”
This would not answer my purpose, because the metaphor is changed.

² How widely different is the metaphor, when we talk of a ship RIDING at anchor!

³ Il. B. 272.—In Pope, Il. 333.—but the metaphor is not retained.

3. From *one species to another*⁴: as,

Χαλκῷ ἀπὸ ψυχῆν ΑΡΤΕΑΣ.

And,

ΤΑΜ' ἀταρεῖ χαλκῷ.

For here, the Poet uses ταμῆν, to cut off, instead of ἀρῆσαι, to draw forth, and ἀρῆσαι instead of ταμῆν: each being a species of taking away.

4. In the way of analogy—when, of four terms, the second bears the same relation to the first, as the fourth to the third; in which case, the fourth may be substituted for the second, and the second for the fourth. And, sometimes, the proper term is also introduced, besides its relative term.

Thus, a cup bears the same relation to Bacchus, as a shield to Mars. A shield, therefore, may be called the cup of Mars, and a cup, the shield of Bacchus. Again—evening being to day, what old age is to life, the evening may be called the old age of the day, and old age, the evening of life; or, as Empedocles has expressed it, “Life’s setting sun⁵.” It sometimes happens, that there is no proper analogous term, answering to the term

⁴ This, and the next species, only, answer to what we call metaphor—the metaphor founded on resemblance. The two first species belong to the trope denominated, since Aristotle’s time, Synecdoche.

⁵ “Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone.”

GRAY—Ode on Spring.

“Yet hath my night of life some memory.”

Shakspeare, Com. of Errors—last scene.

term borrowed; which yet may be used in the same manner, as if there were. For instance: to sow, is the term appropriated to the action of dispersing seed upon the earth; but the dispersion of rays from the sun is expressed by no appropriated term; it is, however, with respect to the sun's light, what sowing is with respect to seed. Hence the Poet's expression, of the sun—

“ - - - SOWING abroad

“ His heaven-created flame.”

There is, also, another way of using this kind of metaphor, by adding to the borrowed word a negation of some of those qualities, which belong to it in its proper sense: as if, instead of calling a shield the cup of Mars, we should call it *the wineless cup.

AN INVENTED word, is a word never before used by any one, but coined by the Poet himself; for such, it appears, there are; as EPNTTAI⁶ for KEPATA, horns, or APHTHP† for IEPETΣ, a priest.

A word is EXTENDED, when for the proper vowel a longer is substituted, or a syllable is inserted.

* For the ornamental word, or the ornament, (κοσμητικόν) as Aristotle calls it, the definition of which should have come in here, see NOTE 190.

⁶ i. e. Branches; which we also use for the horns of a stag. But Aristotle means a new word, not a new application merely, of a word already in use.

† A supplicator: literally, a prayer, taken in the sense of one who prays; as seer is used for prophet.

serted.—A word is CONTRACTED, when some part of it is retrenched.—Thus, πολΗΘ, for πολΕΘ, and ΠηλΗιαδew for Πηλειαδe, are extended words: contracted, such as ΚΡΙ, and ΔΩ, and ΟΥ⁷: e. g.

- - - μια γινεται αμφοτερων ΟΥ⁸.

An ALTERED word, is a word, of which part remains in its usual state, and part is of the Poet's making: as in

ΔΕΞΙΤΕΡΟΝ κατα μαζον⁹, δεξιτερος is for δεξιος.

Farther; NOUNS are divided into masculine, feminine, and neuter. The masculine are those which end in ν, ρ, σ, or in some letter compounded of σ and a mute; these are two, ψ and ξ.—The feminine, are those which end in the vowels always long, as η, or ω; or, in α, of the doubtful vowels: so that the masculine and the feminine terminations are equal in number; for as to ψ and ξ, they are the same with terminations in σ. No noun ends in a mute, or a short vowel. There are but three ending in ι; μελι, κομμι, πεπερι: five ending in υ: πων, ναπυ, γονυ, δορυ, ατυ.

The neuter terminate in these two last-mentioned vowels, and in ν and σ.

XXVI. The

⁷ Κρι, occurs Il. E. 196.—Δω, Il. A. 425.

⁸ Part of a verse of Empedocles, quoted by Strabo, p. 364. Ed. Cas.

⁹ Il. B. 393.

XXVI.

OF POETIC
DICTION.

The excellence of diction consists in being perspicuous without being mean. The most perspicuous is that which is composed of common words; but, at the same time, it is mean. Such is the Poetry of Cleophon, and that of Sthenelus. That language, on the contrary, is elevated, and remote from the vulgar idiom, which employs unusual words: by unusual, I mean, foreign, metaphorical, extended—all, in short, that are not common words. Yet, should a Poet compose his diction entirely of such words, the result would be, either an ænigma, or a barbarous jargon: an ænigma, if composed of metaphors; a barbarous jargon, if composed of foreign words.—For the essence of an ænigma consists in putting together things apparently inconsistent and impossible, and, at the same time, saying nothing but what is true. Now this cannot be effected by the mere *arrangement*¹ of the words; by the metaphorical use of them, it may; as in this ænigma:

A man I once beheld, [and wondering view'd,]

Who, on another, brass with fire had GLEW'D².

With

¹ By mere arrangement or construction of words used in their proper senses, you may produce nonsense, or ambiguity; but not, an inconsistent and impossible, yet clear, meaning.

² See the NOTE. The operation of cupping is meant, which the Greeks performed with an instrument of brass.

With respect to barbarism, it arises from the use of foreign words. A judicious intermixture is, therefore, requisite.

Thus, the foreign word, the metaphorical, the ornamental, and the other species before mentioned, will raise the language above the vulgar idiom, and common words will give it perspicuity. But nothing contributes more considerably to produce clearness, without vulgarity, of diction, than extensions, contractions, and alterations, of words; for here, the variation from the proper form, being unusual, will give elevation to the expression; and, at the same time, what is retained of usual speech will give it clearness. It is without reason, therefore, that some critics have censured these modes of speech, and ridiculed the Poet³ for the use of them; as old *Euclid*⁴ did, objecting, that “versification would be an easy “business, if it were permitted to lengthen words “at pleasure:”—and then giving a burlesque example of that sort of diction: as,

* * * * * * *
* * * * * * *

Undoubtedly,

³ Homer.

⁴ Not the Geometrician.

⁵ I have omitted the examples—two lines of incurable corruption; the “confusion” of which is “worse confounded” by an endless variety of various readings, which, after all, are only so many different shades of nonsense. See the NOTE.

Undoubtedly, when these licences appear to be thus purposely used, the thing becomes ridiculous. In the employment of all the species of unusual words, moderation is necessary: for metaphors, foreign words, or any of the others, improperly used, and with a design to be ridiculous, would produce the same effect. But how great a difference is made by a proper and temperate use of such words, may be seen in heroic verse. Let any one only substitute common words in the place of the metaphorical, the foreign, and others of the same kind, and he will be convinced of the truth of what I say. For example: the same Iambic verse occurs in Æschylus and in Euripides; but, by means of a single alteration—the substitution of a foreign, for a common and usual word, one of these verses appears beautiful, the other ordinary. For Æschylus, in his *Philoctetes*⁶, says - - -

Φαγέδαινα, ἣ μὲν σαρκας ΕΣΘΙΕΙ ποδῶ.—

The cankerous wound that eats my flesh.—

But Euripides, instead of esthien [eats] uses ΘΟΙΝΑΤΑΙ.

The same difference will appear, if, in this verse,

Νῦν

⁶ We have neither of the Tragedies here alluded to.

ΝΥΝ ΔΕ Μ' ΕΩΝ ΟΛΙΓΟΣ ΤΕ ΚΑΙ ΟΥΤΙΔΑΝΟΣ
ΚΑΙ ΑΚΙΚΤΣ',

we substitute common words, and say,

ΝΥΝ ΔΕ Μ' ΕΩΝ ΜΙΚΡΟΣ ΤΕ ΚΑΙ ΑΣΘΕΝΙΚΟΣ
ΚΑΙ ΑΕΙΔΗΣ.

So, again, should we for the following,—

ΔΙΦΡΟΝ ΑΕΙΚΕΛΑΙΟΝ ΚΑΤΑΒΕΙΣ, ΘΑΙΓΗΝ ΤΡΑΠΕΙΖΑΝ—⁸

substitute this:—

ΔΙΦΡΟΝ ΜΟΧΘΗΡΟΝ ΚΑΤΑΒΕΙΣ, ΜΙΚΡΑΝ ΤΕ
ΤΡΑΠΕΙΖΑΝ.

Or, change—Ἰόνες ΒΟΟΩΣΙΝ⁹—The cliffs re- bellow—to Ἰόνες ΚΡΑΖΟΤΕΙΝ—The cliffs re- sound.

Ariphrades, also, endeavoured to throw ridicule upon the Tragic Poets, for making use of such expressions as no one would think of using in common speech; as, δωματων ἀπο, instead of ἀπο δωματων: and ΣΕΘΕΝ—and, ἰγω δε ΝΙΝ—and, Αχιλλεως περι, instead of περι Αχιλλεως; &c.

Now

⁷ Odyssey IX. v. 515. of the original. It is obvious that these differences cannot be preserved in a translation.

⁸ Od. T. 259.

⁹ Il. P. 265.—Pope's line is,

“And distant rocks rebellow to the roar.”

Now it is precisely owing to their being not in common use, that such expressions have the effect of giving elevation to the diction. But this he did not know¹.

To employ with propriety any of these modes of speech—the double words, the foreign, &c.—is a great excellence: but the greatest of all, is to be happy in the use of metaphor; for it is this alone which cannot be acquired, and which, consisting in a quick discernment of resemblances, is a certain mark of genius².

Of

¹ Aristotle's thorough contempt of the critic, and his criticism, could not have been more strongly marked than by this short and simple expression. [—αὐτοῦ δὲ τὰ τοιαῦτα !]

² Metaphors are, evidently, much more important, and more of the essence of Poetry, than the other sorts of words. It is very easy, and very commonly practised by Poets of no genius or originality, to copy the technical language, the formulae, as it were, of Poetry—compound epithets, obsolete words, &c. These occur but now and then: metaphorical expression is continually wanted; and the beauty, force, and novelty of it, depend on the writer's own imagination. Indeed, almost all the beauty of Poetry, as far as language is concerned, all that distinguishes the Poet of genius, from the versifier who trusts solely to his ear, and to his memory, arises from the uncommon and original use of metaphor; especially, taking that word in Aristotle's latitude, as comprehending all tropical expression. Here, however, he plainly has our metaphor chiefly in view;—the metaphor founded on resemblance.

Of the different kinds of words, the double are best suited to Dithyrambic Poetry; the foreign to Heroic; the metaphorical to Iambic. In Heroic Poetry, indeed, they have all their place; but to Iambic verse³, which is, as much as may be, an imitation of common speech⁴, those words which are used in common speech are best adapted; and such are, the common, the metaphorical, and the ornamental.

Concerning TRAGEDY, and the imitation by ACTION, enough has now been said.

³ The verse of Tragedy. See the NOTE.

⁴ See above—Part I. Sect. 7.

PART III.

OF THE EPIC POEM.

I.

In what Epic
and Tragic Poetry
agree.

WITH respect to that species of Poetry which imitates by NARRATION, and in hexameter verse, it is obvious, that the fable ought to be dramatically constructed¹, like that of Tragedy: and that it should have for its subject one entire and perfect action, having a beginning, a middle, and an end; so that, forming, like an animal, a complete whole, it may afford its *proper*² pleasure: widely differing, in its construction, from history, which necessarily treats, not of one action, but of one time; and of all the events that happened; to one person, or to many, during that time; events, the relation of which, to each other, is merely casual³. For, as the naval action at Salamis, and the battle with the

¹ See below, Sect. 3.

² i.e. Opposed, (as appears from what follows,) to that which history gives. Unity of interest is essential to the pleasure we expect from the Epic Poem; and this cannot exist, at least, in the degree required, without unity of action.

³ Compare, Part II. Sect. 5, 7, and 8.

the Carthaginians in Sicily, were events of the same time, unconnected by any relation to a common end, or purpose; so also, in successive events, we sometimes see one thing follow another, without being connected to it by such relation. And this is the practice of the generality of Poets. Even in this, therefore, as we have before observed⁴, the superiority of HOMER's genius is apparent, that he did not attempt to bring the whole war, though an entire action with beginning and end, into his Poem. It would have been too vast an object, and not *easily comprehended in one view*⁵: or had he forced it into a moderate compass, it would have been perplexed by its variety⁶. Instead of this, selecting one part only of the war, he has, from the rest, introduced many Episodes—such as the catalogue of the ships, and others—by which he has diversified his Poem. Other Poets take for their subject the actions of *one person*⁷, or of one period of

⁴ Part II. Sect. 5.

⁵ See Part II. Sect. 4.

⁶ Because “the length of the whole would” then “not admit of a proper magnitude in the parts;” and, thus, an Epic Poem constructed upon an historical plan, would be exactly in the same case with a Tragedy “constructed on an Epic plan.” See Part II. Sect. 20. and NOTE 153.

⁷ Part II. Sect. 5.

of *time*⁸, or an action which, though one, is composed of too many parts. Thus, the author of the Cypriacs, and of the *Little Iliad*⁹. Hence it is, that the ILIAD, and the ODYSSEY, each of them, furnish matter for one Tragedy, or two, at most; but from the Cypriacs many may be taken, and from the Little Iliad, more than eight; as, *The Contest for the Armour*¹, Philoctetes,

⁸ Of this kind seems the Poem of Ariosto, the exordium of which, not only expresses the miscellaneous variety of his matter, but, also, his principle of unity.

Le Donne, i cavalier, l'arme, gli amori,
 Le cortesie, l'audaci imprese, io canto,
Che furo al TEMPO che passaro i Mori, &c.

Ariosto's expedient was, to "intertwist the several actions together, in order to give something like the appearance of one action," to the whole, as has been observed of Spenser: [Letters on Chivalry, &c.] he has given his Poem the continuity of basket-work. Or, if I may be indulged in another comparison, his unity, is the unity produced between oil and vinegar by shaking them together; which only makes them separate by smaller portions.

⁹ So called, to distinguish it from the Iliad of Homer, of which it seems to have been a continuation. See the NOTE.

¹ i. e. Between Ajax and Ulysses. Æschylus wrote a Tragedy on this subject, of which the Ajax of Sophocles is the sequel.—Dacier.

*Philoctetes*², Neoptolemus, *Eurypylus*³, *The Vagrant*⁴, The Spartan Women, The Fall of Troy, *The Return of the Fleet*⁵, *Sinon*⁶, and *The Trojan Women*⁷.

Again—the Epic Poem must also agree with the Tragic, as to its kinds: it must be simple, or complicated, moral, or *disastrous*⁸. Its parts, also, setting aside Music and Decoration, are the same⁹; for it requires Revolutions, Discoveries, and Disasters; and it must be furnished with proper sentiments and diction: of all which HOMER gave both the first, and the most perfect, example. Thus, of his two Poems, the Iliad is of the simple and disastrous kind; the Odyssey, complicated, (for it abounds throughout with discoveries,)

² The Philoctetes of Sophocles only remains.

³ Of the subject of this, and the preceding drama, we know nothing.

⁴ See Pope's Odyssey, IV. 335. but what is there rendered slave, is, in Homer, beggar, or vagrant. The story is also touched by Euripides, in his Hecuba. See Potter's Transl. v. 210, &c.

⁵ See the latter part of NOTE 116.

⁶ The story is well known from Virgil, Æn. 2.—Sophocles wrote a Tragedy of this title.

⁷ A Tragedy of this name by Euripides is extant. See The Trojan Dames, in Mr. Potter's translation.

⁸ See Part II. Sect. 19.

⁹ Part I. Sect. 9.

coveries¹;) and moral. Add to this, that in language and sentiments he has surpassed all Poets.

II.

In what they DIFFER.

The Epic Poem differs from Tragedy, in the length of its plan, and in its metre.

With respect to length, a sufficient measure has already been assigned². It should be such, as to admit of our comprehending at one view the beginning and the end: and this would be the case, if the Epic Poem were reduced from its ancient length, so as not to exceed that of such a number of Tragedies, as are performed successively at one hearing³. But there is a circumstance in the nature of Epic Poetry which affords it peculiar latitude in the extension of its plan. It is not in the power of Tragedy to imitate several different actions performed at the same time; it can imitate only that one which occupies the stage, and in which the actors are employed.

But,

¹ See Pope's translation, XVI. 206, &c. where Ulysses discovers himself to Telemachus: XXI. 212. to the shepherds.—XXIII. 211. to Penelope.—XXIV. 375. to his father.—IX. 17. to Alcinous.—IV. 150, &c. Telemachus is discovered to Menelaus by his tears: v. 189, to Helen, by his resemblance to his father.—XIX. 545. Ulysses is discovered to the old nurse, by the scar.

² See the preceding Sect. and Part II. Sect. 4.

³ In the dramatic contests. See the NOTE.

But, the Epic imitation, being narrative, admits of many such simultaneous incidents, properly related to the subject, which swell the Poem to a considerable size.

And this gives it a great advantage, both in point of magnificence, and, also, as it enables the Poet to relieve his hearer⁴, and diversify his work, by a variety of dissimilar Episodes : for it is to the satiety naturally arising from similarity that Tragedies frequently owe their ill success.

With respect to metre, the heroic is established by experience as the most proper ; so that, should any one compose a narrative Poem in any other, or in a variety of metres, he would be thought guilty of a great impropriety. For the heroic is the gravest and most majestic of all measures ; and hence it is, that it peculiarly admits the use of foreign and metaphorical expressions ; for in this respect also, the narrative imitation⁵ is abundant and various beyond the rest. But the Iambic and Trochaic have more motion ; the latter being adapted to dance, the other to action and business. To mix these different metres, as Charemon has done, would be still more absurd. No one, therefore, has ever attempted to compose a Poem of an extended plan in any other than heroic verse ; nature itself, as we before observed⁵, pointing out the proper choice.

⁴ "Hearer."—See Dissert. I. p. 64, 65.

⁵ Part I. Sect. 7.

III.

Epic Narration should be DRAMATIC
and IMITATIVE.

Among the many just claims of HOMER to our praise, this is one—that he is the only Poet who seems to have understood what part in his Poem it was proper for him to take himself. The Poet, in his own person, should speak as little as possible; for he is not then the *imitator*⁶. But other Poets, ambitious to figure throughout, themselves⁷, imitate but little, and seldom. HOMER, after a few preparatory lines, immediately introduces a man, a woman, or some other character⁸; for all have their character—no where are the manners neglected.

IV.

Epic admits the WONDERFUL more easily
and in a greater degree than Tragedy.

The surprising is necessary in Tragedy†; but the Epic Poem goes farther, and admits even the improbable and incredible, from which the highest degree of the surprising results, because, there, the ⁶ Strictly speaking. See Dissertation I. p. 37.

⁷ This is remarkably the case with Lucan; of whom Hobbes says, that “no Heroic Poem raises such admiration of the Poet, as his hath done, though not so great admiration of the persons he introduceth.”—[Disc. concerning the Virtues of an Heroic Poem.]

⁸ As, gods, goddesses, allegorical beings, &c.

† See above, Part II, Sect. 7. p. 129, 130.

the action is not *seen. The circumstances, for example, of the pursuit of Hector by Achilles, are such, as, upon the stage, would appear ridiculous;—the Grecian army standing still, and taking no part in the pursuit, and Achilles making signs to them, by the motion of his head, not to interfere? But in the Epic Poem this escapes our notice. Now the wonderful always pleases; as is evident from the additions which men always make in relating any thing, in order to gratify the hearers.

V.

It is from HOMER principally, that other Poets have learned the art of feigning well. It consists

FICTION
how made to pass as truth.

* The best comment to which I can refer the reader upon all this part of Aristotle, is to be found in the 10th of the Letters on Chivalry and Romance, in which the Italian Poets, and the privileges of genuine Poetry, are vindicated, with as much solidity as elegance, against those, whom Dryden used to call his "Prose Critics"—against that sort of criticism "which looks like philosophy, and is not."—Dr. Hurd's Dialogues, &c. vol. iii.

° Pope's Iliad, XXII. 267.—Perhaps, the idea of stopping a whole army by a nod, or shake of the head, (a circumstance distinctly mentioned by Homer, but sunk in Mr. Pope's version,) was the absurdity here principally meant. If this whole Homeric scene were represented on our stage, in the best manner possible, there can be no doubt, that the effect would justify Aristotle's observation. It would certainly set the audience in a roar.

consists in a sort of sophism. When one thing is observed to be constantly accompanied, or followed, by another, men are apt to conclude, that, if the latter is, or has happened, the former must also be, or must have happened. But this is an error. * * * * * For, knowing the latter to be true, the mind is betrayed into the false inference, that the first is true also¹.

VI.

Of the IMPROBABLE
and ABSURD.

The Poet should prefer *impossibilities*² which appear probable, to such things as, though possible, appear improbable. Far from producing a plan

¹ For an attempt to explain Aristotle's meaning in this difficult passage, which, I think, has not hitherto been understood, I must refer the reader to the NOTE.

² This includes all that is called faery, machinery, ghosts, witches, enchantments, &c.—things, according to Hobbes, “beyond the actual bounds, and only within the “conceived possibility of nature.” [See the Letters on Chivalry, as above.] Such a being as Caliban, for example, is impossible. Yet Shakspeare has made the character appear probable; not certainly, to reason, but to imagination: that is, we make no difficulty about the possibility of it, in reading. Is not the Lovelace of Richardson, in this view, more out of nature, more improbable, than the Caliban of Shakspeare? The latter is, at least, consistent. I can imagine such a monster as Caliban: I never could imagine such a man as Lovelace.

a plan³ made up of improbable incidents, he should, if possible, admit no one circumstance of that kind; or, if he does, it should be exterior to the action itself⁴, like the ignorance of Oedipus concerning the manner in which Laius died; not within the drama, like the narrative of what happened at the Pythian games, in the *Electra*⁵; or, in The Mysians, the man who travels from Tegea to Mysia without speaking⁶. To say, that without

³ The general plan, story, or argument, as Part II. Sect. 17. including events prior to the action, but necessary to be known.

⁴ See the beginning of the Oedipus of Sophocles. Though the ignorance of Oedipus appears in the drama itself, yet the circumstances, upon which the improbability of that ignorance depends (his coming to Thebes, marrying Jocasta, and living with her twenty years,) are exterior to the drama: i. e. prior to the opening of the action. See above, Part II. Sect. 15.

⁵ See Brumoy, Th. des Grecs, I. p. 428. I believe he is right in understanding the absurdity here meant to be—"d'avoir fait raconter comme inconnue, une chose dont Clytemnestre auroit pû sçavoir d'ailleurs la verité ou la fausseté, surtout s'agissant d'Oreste qu'elle craignoit."—The games in question were probably frequented by all Greece, and whatever happened at them, must have been matter of such public notoriety, that a fraudulent account would have been liable to immediate detection.

⁶ Respecting this Tragedy, see REMARK 30.

without these circumstances the fable would have been destroyed, is a ridiculous excuse: the Poet should take care, from the first, not to construct his fable in that manner. If, however, any thing of this kind has been admitted, and yet is made to pass under some colour of probability, it may be allowed, though even, in itself, absurd. Thus in the *Odyssey*⁷, the improbable account of the manner in which Ulysses was landed upon the shore of Ithaca, is such, as in the hands of an ordinary Poet, would evidently have been intolerable: but here, the absurdity is concealed under the various beauties, of other kinds, with which the Poet has embellished it.

The Diction should be most laboured in the *idle parts*⁸ of the Poem—those, in which neither manners,

⁷ See Pope's Transl. XIII. 138, and the note there, and on v. 142. Homer seems, clearly, to have imagined this circumstance, for the sake of the interesting scene which follows when Ulysses wakes. See v. 220, &c. Of the original, v. 187.

⁸ In the strictly narrative or descriptive parts, where the Poet speaks in his own person, and the imitation, the drama, which Aristotle considers as the true business of Poetry, is suspended. These he calls the idle parts. The expression is applicable also to Tragedy; for though its imitation is throughout, yet every drama must have its comparatively idle parts. Such is the description above alluded to, of the chariot-race, in the Electra of Sophocles. The chorusses also may, in a great measure be so considered; manners, nor sentiments? prevail; for the manners and the sentiments are only obscured by too splendid a diction¹.

considered; and in them, accordingly, the language is “laboured” and “splendid.”—In Epic Poetry, these parts are of great importance to that variety which characterizes the species. [See above, Sect. II.] In so long a work, relief is wanted, and we are glad to hear the Poet in his turn.

⁹ The reader may wonder that Aristotle did not add—“nor passion.” But that part of the Epic and Tragic Poem, which he calls the sentiments, includes the expression of passion. See Part II. Sect. 22. And the NOTE here.

¹ “His diction [Thomson’s] is in the highest degree “florid and luxuriant; such as may be said to be to his “images and thoughts both their lustre and their shade; “such as invests them with splendour, through which “perhaps they are not always easily discerned.”—Dr. Johnson’s Life of Thomson.

P A R T IV.
OF CRITICAL OBJECTIONS, AND THE PRINCIPLES ON WHICH THEY ARE TO BE ANSWERED.

I.

PRINCIPLES on which Poetry is to be DEFENDED.

WITH respect to CRITICAL OBJECTIONS¹, and the ANSWERS to them, the number and nature of the different sources, from which they may be drawn, will be clearly understood, if we consider them in the following manner.

1. The

¹ The original is, Problems. This appears to have been a common title of critical works in Aristotle's time. Objections, censures, and the most unreasonable cavils, were conveyed in the civil form of problems and questions. Thus, many criticisms on Homer were published under the title of Homeric Problems.

The scope of this part of Aristotle's work is of more importance to his subject than, at first view, it may appear to be. In teaching how to answer criticisms, it, in fact, teaches, (as far, I mean, as it goes,) what the Poet should do to avoid giving occasion to them. It seems, indeed, intended as an apology for Poetry, and a vindication of its privileges upon true poetical principles, at a time when the art and its professors were unfairly attacked on all sides, by the cavils of prosaic philosophers and sophists, such as Ariphrades, Protagoras, Euclid, &c. and by the puritanical objections of PLATO and his followers.

1. The Poet, being an imitator, like the painter or any other artist of that kind, must necessarily, when he imitates, have in view one of these three objects ;—he must represent things, *such as they were, or are*²;—or *such as they are said to be, and believed to be*³,—or, *such as they should be*⁴.

2. Again: all this he is to express in words, either common, or foreign and metaphorical—or varied by some of those many modifications and peculiarities of language, which are the privilege of Poets.

3. To this we must add, that what is right in the Poetic art, is a distinct consideration from what is right in the political, or any other art. The faults of Poetry are of two kinds, essential and accidental. If the Poet has undertaken to imitate without talents for imitation, his Poetry will be essentially faulty. But if he is right in applying himself to Poetic imitation, yet in imitating is occasionally wrong; as, if a horse, for example, were represented moving both his right legs at once;—or, if he has committed mistakes, or described things impossible, with respect to other.

² Compare Part I. Sect. 3.

³ This opens the door for the marvellous; machinery, ghosts, witches, faery, &c.

⁴ Compare Part I. Sect. 3.—II. end of Sect. 15. and below, Sect. 5.

other arts, that of Physic, for instance, or any other—all such faults, whatever they may be, are not essential, but accidental faults, in the Poetry.

II.

APPLICA-TION of the last Principle.

To the foregoing considerations, then, we must have recourse, in order to obviate the doubts and objections of the critics.

For, in the first place, suppose the Poet to have represented things impossible with respect to some other art. This is certainly a fault. Yet it may be an excusable fault, provided the end of the Poet's art be more effectually obtained by it; that is, according to what has already been said of that end, if, by this means, that, or any other part, of the Poem, is made to produce a more *striking effect*⁵. The pursuit of Hector is an instance⁶. If, indeed, this end might as well, or nearly as well, have been attained, without departing from the principles of the particular art in question, the fault, in that case, could not be justified; since faults of every kind should, if possible, be avoided.

Still we are to consider, farther, whether a fault be in things essential to the Poetic art, or foreign and

⁵ Which is exactly the case with Homer's improbable account of the landing of Ulysses, mentioned above, Part III. Sect. 6. See Note 7.

⁶ Part III. Sect. 4.

and incidental to it: for it is a far more pardonable fault to be ignorant, for instance, that a hind has no horns⁷, than to paint one badly.

III.

Farther: If it be objected to the Poet, that he has not represented things conformably to *truth*⁸, he may answer, that he has represented them as they should be. This was the answer of Sophocles—that “he drew mankind such as they should be; Euripides, such as they are.” And this is the proper answer.

APPLICA-TION
of the first Principle.

But if the Poet has represented things in neither of these ways, he may answer, that he has represented them as they are said and believed to be. Of this kind are the poetical descriptions of the Gods. It cannot, perhaps, be said, that they are either what is best, or what is true; but, as Xenophanes says, opinions “taken up at random:” these are things, however, not “clearly known.”

Again—What the Poet has exhibited is, perhaps, not what is best, but it is the fact; as in the ⁷ “A hind with golden horns,” is expressly mentioned by Pindar in his 3d Olympic Ode, and by other Greek Poets. This inaccuracy in natural history, had probably been the subject of critical cavil.

⁸ i.e. to common nature. Above, he expresses it, by “representing things such as they were, or art.”

the passage about the arms of the sleeping soldiers :

- - - fixed upright in the earth

Their spears stood by? - - -

For such was the custom at that time, as it is now among the Illyrians.

IV.

Censure of IMMORAL speech or action, how to be examined.

In order to judge whether what is said, or done, by any character, be well, or ill, we are not to consider that speech or action *alone*¹, whether in itself

⁹ Iliad, X. 152.—In Pope's translation, v. 170, &c.—On what account this had been objected to by the critics, we are left to guess. Dacier, after Victorius, supposes the objection to be, that the spears, so fastened in the ground, could not be readily disengaged, in case of a sudden attack. I shall only observe, that by Homer's description of the truce in the 3d book, this appears to have been the usual position of their spears when no attack was apprehended, and in open day-light; which makes it the less surprising that it should have been objected to as an impropriety in a situation of nocturnal danger, such as is described in the passage referred to.—What Pope, III. 177, translates, "rest their spears," is, in Homer, "their spears were fixed." (—παρα δ' ἐν ῥησιν ἄνωγε ΠΕΠΗΓΕΝ. v. 135.)

¹ This is plainly connected with what precedes, which cannot be properly applied without taking in the consideration of character, circumstances, motives, &c.—The speech of Satan, for example, in Parad. Lost, IV. 32, taken in itself, is horrible; referred to the character who itself it be good, or bad, but also by whom it is spoken or done; to whom, at what time, in what manner, or for what end—whether, for instance, in order to obtain some greater good, or to avoid some greater evil.

V.

For the solution of some objections, we must have recourse to the Diction. For example.:

ΟΥΡΗΑΣ ΜΕΝ ΠΡΩΤΟΝ—

“On MULES and dogs the infection first began.”

POPE.

This may be defended by saying, that the Poet has, perhaps, used the word ἐρηας in its FOREIGN acceptation of sentinels, not in its proper sense, of mules.

So also in the passage where it is said of Dolon—

— — — ΕΙΔΟΣ ΜΕΝ ἦν ΚΑΚΟΝ.³ — — —

— — — Of form, unhappy. — — —

The

speaks it, nothing can be better. It is, poetically speaking, exactly what it should be.

² II. I. 69.—The reason of the objection here is not told, and has been variously guessed by the commentators. Probably, the propriety of making the mules the first sufferers, before horses and other animals, was the matter in dispute. The objection seems frivolous, and the solution improbable.

³ II. K. 316.—Pope, X. 375, has followed Aristotle's interpretation:

“Not blest by nature with the charms of face,
But swift of foot, and matchless in the race.”

VOL. I.

O

The

APPLICA-TION of the second Principle.

The meaning is, not, that his person was deformed, but, that his face was ugly; for the Cretans use the word ΕΤΕΙΔΕΣ — “well-FORMED” — to express a beautiful face.

Again :

ΖΩΠΟΤΕΡΟΝ δὲ κεραιε⁴ - - -

Here, the meaning is not, “mix it strong,” as for intemperate drinkers; but, “mix it quickly.”

2. The following passages may be defended by METAPHOR.

“Now pleasing sleep had seal’d each mortal eye;
“Stretch’d in the tents the Grecian leaders lie;
“The immortals slumber’d on their thrones above⁵” - - -

POPE.

The objection of the critics is supposed to have been, that an ill-made man, could not be a good racer. See Pope’s Note.

⁴ Iliad IX. 267, 8.—Pope follows the common, and probably the right, acceptance of the word. “Mix purser wine.”—Aristotle’s interpretation has not made its fortune with the critics. He seems to have produced it rather as an exemplification of the sort of answer which he is here considering, than as an opinion in which he acquiesced himself. It was, probably, an answer which had been given. The cavil, according to Plutarch, came from Zoilus. [See the Symposiac Prob. of Plut. V. 4. where this subject is discussed, and several other conjectural senses of the word Ζωποτερον are proposed.]

⁵ Beginning of Il. II.—What it was that wanted defence in this passage, and that was to be taken metaphorically, we are not told. That it was the representation

Again—

“ When on the Trojan plain his anxious eye

“ Watchful he fix’d.” - - -

And—

Αυλων συριγγων θ’ ΟΜΑΔΟΝ⁷. - - -

* * * * *

For, ALL⁸, is put *metaphorically*⁹ instead of many; all being a species of many.

Here also—

- - - “ The Bear ALONE,

“ Still shines exalted in th’ ætherial plain,

“ Nor bathes his flaming forehead in the main¹.”

POPE.

sensation of the Gods as sleeping, is the most probable conjecture. This is somewhat softened by Mr. Pope’s “ slumbered.” Homer says—“ SLEPT all the night.”—Ευδον παννυχιοι.

⁶ Iliad, X. v. 13. (of the Orig. v. 11.) But Pope’s version was not literal enough for my purpose. For the supposed objection, see my NOTE.

⁷ Ibid. 15, 16.—Orig. 13. The sense of the example may be given, pretty closely, thus :

“ The distant voice of flutes and pipes he mark’d

With wonder, and the “ busy hum of men.”

But this does not answer exactly to the Greek, where the word, which I have rendered hum, may signify either the hum or murmur of a multitude, or the multitude itself. See the NOTE.

⁸ As the Greek word for ALL, does not occur in any of the preceding examples, we suppose some example, corresponding to this explanation, to have been lost.

⁹ i. e. by Synecdoche. See above, p. 166.

¹ Iliad, XVIII. v. 565, 566, and see the note there.

ALONE, is metaphorical: the most remarkable thing in any kind, we speak of as the only one.

We may have recourse also,

3. To ACCENT: as the following passage—

ΔΙΔΟΜΕΝ ΔΕ ΟΙ ΕΥΧΟΜΕΝΟΙ ἄρσθαι²—

And this—το μὲν ΟΥ καταπνυθεται ὀμβρῶν³—were defended by Hippias of Thasos.

4. To PUNCTUATION; as in this passage of Empedocles:—

Αἰψά δὲ θνήτ' ἐφύοντο τὰ πρὶν μαθὼν ἀθανάτ' εἶναι, ΖΩΡΑ ΤΕ ΤΑ ΠΡΙΝ ΑΚΡΗΤΑ - - -

i. e. - - 7 things, before immortal,

Mortal became, and mix'd before *unmix'd,

[Their courses changed.]

5. To

² See Pope's Iliad, II. 9, and his note. For the Jesuitical distinction of Hippias's Theology, see the NOTE.

³ II. Ψ. 328.—Pope's transl. XXIII. 402.—“unperished with the rains.” According to a different accentuation of the word ΟΥ, in the original, it would mean, “where perished with the rains.”—See the NOTE.

⁴ The verses allude to the two great physical principles of Empedocles, which he chose to denominate friendship and strife, and in which modern philosophers have discovered the Newtonian principles of attraction and repulsion. He held everything to be formed of the four elements, and resolved into them again. Friendship was the uniting, strife, the separating, principle. The elements

5. TO AMBIGUITY; as in — παρῳχῆκεν δε ΠΛΕΩΝ νυξ⁵ — where the word ΠΛΕΩΝ is ambiguous.

6. TO CUSTOMARY SPEECH: thus, wine mixed with water, or whatever is poured out to drink as wine, is called ΟΙΝΟΣ — wine: hence, Ganymede is said — Δῦ ΟΙΝΟΧΟΕΤΕΙΝ⁶ — to “pour the elements themselves, in their separate and simple state, were immortal; the things compounded of them, were mortal; i. e. liable to be resolved into their first principles. — As far as we can make anything of this fragment, it seems intended to express the two contrary changes of things; from immortal to mortal, by the uniting principle, and from mortal to immortal, i. e. from mixed to unmixed, by the disuniting principle. But the words — “mixed before unmixed,” will, plainly, express either of these changes, according as we place the comma, after mixed, or after before. It is imagined, that the critics mistook the punctuation so as to make Empedocles express only the same change in different words, and then censured this, as inconsistent with the expression, “their courses changed.” [διαλλαττοντα κελυθες — changing their ways.]
“ WINE

⁵ Il. K. 252. — Pope’s translation, X. 298. The original says, “more than two parts of the night are past; the third part remains.” — This the cavilling critics censured as a sort of bull. What is guessed to have been the answer, the reader may see, but I believe will hardly wish to see, in Dacier’s notes.

⁶ Il. T. 234. Pope, XX. 278, &c. — He renders it — “to bear the cup of Jove.”

“WINE to Jove:” though wine is not the liquor of the Gods. This, however, may also be defended by metaphor⁷.

Thus, again, artificers in iron are called Χαλκεις—literally, brasiers. Of this kind is the expression of the Pœt—*Κνημεις νεοτευκτα ΚΑΣΣΙ-ΤΕΡΟΙΟ*⁸.

7. When a word, in any passage, appears to express a contradiction, we must consider, in how many different SENSES it may there be taken. Here, for instance—

—τη ῥ' ἔΣΧΕΤΟ χαλκεον ἐγχ⁹—

“There stuck the lance⁹.” POPE.

—the meaning is, was stopped only, or repelled.

Of

⁷ The metaphor from species to species. See p. 167.

⁸ II. Φ. 592.—Literally, “greaves of tin.” But it is not customary speech with us, to say tin, for iron or steel. The Greek word for tin, however, appears to have been so used.—We are not here to understand the objection to have been pointed at the improper use of a word. The critics took, or pretended to take, the word in its proper sense, and thence objected to the absurdity of tin armour.

⁹ II. XX. 321.—Mr. Pope seems to have translated very accurately here, and to have preserved even the ambiguity of the original; for the verb, to stick, admits, like the Greek word, (ἐχέσθαι) of two senses;—that of being fastened to, or fixed in, and that of being stopped—prevented from going farther.—See the NOTE.

- - - “impene-

Of how many different senses a word is capable, may best be discovered by considering the different senses that are opposed to it.

We may also say, with Glauco, that some critics, first take things for granted without foundation, and then argue from these previous decisions of their own; and, having once pronounced their judgment, condemn, as an inconsistence, whatever is contrary to their preconceived opinion. Of this kind is the cavil of the critics concerning *Icarius*¹. Taking it for granted that he was a Lacedæmonian, they thence infer the absurdity of supposing Telemachus not to have seen him when he went to Lacedæmon². But, perhaps, what the Cephælenians say may be the truth. They assert, that the wife of Ulysses was of their country, and that the name of her father was not Icarius, but Idæus. The objection

- - - "impenetrable charms
 Secur'd the temper of th' æth'ial arms.
 Thro' two strong plates the point its passage held,
 But stopp'd, and rested, by the third repell'd;
 Five plates of various metal, various mold,
 Compos'd the shield; of brass each outward fold,
 Of tin each inward, and the middle, gold:
 THERE STUCK THE LANCE." - - -

¹ Mentioned by Homer as the father of Penelope.

² See Pope's Odyssey, IV.

objection itself, therefore, is probably founded on a mistake.

VI.

Censure
of IMPOSSIB-LITY
further considered.

The Impossible, in general, is to be justified by referring, either to the end of Poetry itself, or to what is best, or to opinion.

For, with respect to Poetry, impossibilities, rendered probable, are preferable to things improbable, though *possible*³.

With respect also to what is *best*⁴, the imitations of Poetry should resemble the paintings of ZEUXIS⁵: the example should be more perfect than nature.

To

³ See Part III. Sect. 6. and *Note*², p. 184.

⁴ Improved nature, ideal beauty, &c. which, elsewhere, is expressed by, what should be. Compare the beginning of this Part, and Sect. 3.—Part I. Sect. 3.—Part II. Sect. 15. p. 146.

⁵ “ In ancient days, while Greece was flourishing in “ liberty and arts, a celebrated painter, [Zeuxis,] having “ drawn many excellent pictures for a certain free state, “ and been generously rewarded for his labours, at last “ made an offer to paint them a Helen, as a model and “ exemplar of the most exquisite beauty. The proposal “ was readily accepted, when the artist informed them, “ that in order to draw one Fair, it was necessary he “ should contemplate many. He demanded therefore a “ sight of all their finest women. The state, to assist
“ the

To opinion, or what is commonly said to be, may be referred even such things as are improbable and absurd; and it may also be said, that events of that kind are, sometimes, not really improbable; since "it is probable, that many things should happen contrary to probability⁶."

VII.

When things are said, which appear to be contradictory, we must examine them as we do in logical confutation: whether the same thing be spoken of; whether in the same respect, and in the same sense. * * * * *

INCONSISTENCE.

VIII.

Improbability, and vitious manners, when excused by no necessity, are just objects of critical censure. Such is the improbability in the *Ægeus*⁷ of Euripides, and the vitious character of Menelaus in his *Orestes*⁸.

IMPROBABILITY and VITIOUS CHARACTER.

Thus,

"the work, assented to his request. They were exhibited before him; he selected the most beautiful; and from these formed his Helen, more beautiful than them all."—Harris's Three Treatises, p. 216.

⁶ See Part II. Sect. 20, at the end; and NOTE 156.

⁷ Of this Tragedy, some inconsiderable fragments only remain.

⁸ See p. 144.

Recapitula-
tion.

Thus, the sources from which the critics draw their objections are five: they object to things as impossible, or improbable, or of immoral tendency, or contradictory, or contrary to technical accuracy. The answers, which are twelve in number, may be deduced from what has been said⁹.

⁹ The reader, who regards his own ease, will, I believe, do well to take this for granted. If however he has any desire to try the experiment, he may read the NOTE on this passage; and I wish it may answer to him.

P A R T V.

OF THE SUPERIORITY OF TRAGIC TO EPIC POETRY.

I.

IT may be inquired, farther, which of the two imitations, the EPIC, or the TRAGIC, deserves the preference. OBJECTION
to
TRAGEDY.

If that, which is the least vulgar, or popular, of the two, be the best, and that be such, which is calculated for the better sort of spectators—the imitation, which extends to every circumstance¹, must, evidently, be the most vulgar, or popular; for there, the imitators have recourse to every kind of motion and gesticulation, as if the audience, without the aid of action, were incapable of understanding them: like bad flute-players, who whirl themselves round, when they would imitate the motion of the Discus, and pull the Coryphæus, when Scylla is the subject². Such is Tragedy.

It

¹ Though Aristotle instances in gesture only, the objection, no doubt, extended to the whole imitative representation of the theatre, including the stage and scenery, by which place is imitated, and the dresses, which are necessary to complete the imitation of the persons.

² See the NOTES.

It may also be compared to what the modern actors are in the estimation of their predecessors; for Myniscus used to call Callipides, on account of his intemperate action, the ape: and Tyndarus was censured on the same account. What these performers are with respect to their predecessors, the Tragic imitation, when entire, is to the Epic. The latter, then, it is urged, addresses itself to hearers of the better sort, to whom the addition of gesture is superfluous: but Tragedy is for *the people*³; and being, therefore, the most vulgar kind of imitation, is evidently the inferior.

II.

The Objection ANSWERED.

But now, in the first place, this censure falls, not upon the Poet's art, but upon that of the actor; for the gesticulation may be equally laboured in the recitation of an Epic Poem, as it was by Sosistratus; and in singing, as by Mnasitheus, the Opuntian.

Again—All gesticulation is not to be condemned; since even all dancing is not; but such only, as is unbecoming—such as was objected to Callipides, and is now objected to others, whose whose gestures resemble those of immodest women⁴.

³ “It must be allowed, that stage-poetry, of all other, is more particularly levelled to please the populace, and its success more immediately depending upon the common suffrage.” Pope's Pref. to Shakspeare.

Farther—Tragedy, as well as the Epic, is capable of producing its effect, even without action; we can judge of it perfectly by *reading*⁵. If, then, in other respects, Tragedy be superior, it is sufficient that the fault here objected is not essential to it.

III.

Tragedy has the advantage in the following respects.—It possesses all that is possessed by the Epic; it might even adopt its metre⁶: and to this it makes no inconsiderable addition, in the Music and the Decoration; by the latter of which, the illusion is heightened, and the pleasure, arising from the action, is rendered more sensible and striking.

ADVANTAGES
of Tragedy.

It has the advantage of greater clearness and distinctness of impression, as well in reading, as in representation.

It

⁴ As no actresses were admitted on the Greek stage, their capital actors must frequently have appeared in female parts, such as, Electra, Iphigenia, Medea, &c. This is sufficiently proved by many passages of antient authors; and among others, by a remarkable story of an eminent Greek Tragic actor, told by Aulus Gellius. See the NOTE.

⁵ So above, p. 121,—“the power of Tragedy is felt “without representation and actors.”

⁶ See NOTE 36.

It has also that, of attaining the end of its imitation in a shorter compass: for the effect is more pleasurable, when produced by a short and close series of impressions, than when weakened by diffusion through a long extent of time; as the Oedipus of SOPHOCLES, for example, would be, if it were drawn out to the length of the Iliad.

Farther: there is less *unity*⁷ in all Epic imitation; as appears from this—that any Epic Poem will furnish matter for several Tragedies. For, supposing the Poet to chuse a fable strictly one, the consequence must be, either, that his Poem, if proportionably contracted, will appear curtailed and defective, or, if extended to the usual length, will become weak, and, as it were, diluted. If, on the other hand, we suppose him to employ several fables—that is, a fable composed of *several actions*⁸—his imitation is no longer strictly one. The Iliad, for example, and the Odyssey contain many such subordinate parts, each of which has a certain magnitude, and unity,
of

⁷ See p. 59, Note 2.

⁸ Compare Part II. Sect. 20, and Note 9.—Aristotle is not here speaking of that unconnected, historical multiplicity of action, which he had before condemned, [Part III. Sect. 1.] but of such as was essential to the nature of the Epic Poem. This is plain, from the example, which immediately follows; and, indeed, from the very drift of his argument.

of its own: yet is the construction of those Poems as perfect, and as nearly approaching to the imitation of a single action, as possible.

IV.

If then TRAGEDY be superior to the EPIC in all these respects, and, also, in the peculiar end at which it aims⁹, (for each species ought to afford, not any sort of pleasure indiscriminately, but such only as has been pointed out,) it evidently follows, that TRAGEDY, as it attains more effectually the end of the art itself, must deserve the preference.

PREFER-ENCE
of
TRAGEDY.

AND THUS MUCH concerning TRAGIC and EPIC Poetry in general, and their several species—the number and the differences of their parts—the causes of their beauties and their defects—the censures of critics, and the principles on which they are to be answered.

CONCLU-SION.

⁹ i.e. according to Aristotle's principles, to give "that pleasure, which arises from terror and pity, through imitation." See p. 139.

NOTES.

N O T E S.

NOTE 1.

P. 101. DITHYRAMBICS—IMITATION.

IF the senses, in which the term imitation is applied by Aristotle to Poetry, have been rightly determined in the first Dissertation, there can be no difficulty with respect to the imitative nature of the Epic and Dramatic species. That of the Dithyrambic is not quite so obvious, and has accordingly been variously explained. The little, however, that remains of what Aristotle had said upon this subject, seems sufficient to release any commentator, who is willing to be released, from the trouble of conjectural ingenuity. In Sect. 3. Part I. where the different objects of imitation are considered, he expressly makes Dithyrambic Poetry imitative of actions, characters, and manners, as well as the Epic and Dramatic; and he, particularly, mentions the Persians and the Cyclops as imitated in the

VOL. I. P Dithyrambic

Dithyrambic and Nomic Poetry of Timotheus and Philoxenus^a. We may conclude, then, that he regarded this kind of Poetry as imitative because, though the mythological tales, which furnished the subject of these hymns, were, indeed, articles of Pagan faith, and depended not on the Poet's imagination, yet, in the detail of these stories, in describing the actions, and delineating the characters, of the deities themselves, and, still more, of other fabulous and heroic personages occasionally introduced, his fancy and invention must necessarily be, more or less, employed. This, as we have seen, was, in Aristotle's view, imitation; whether the form of that imitation was partly dramatic and personative, or mere recital in the person of the Poet^b. That the Poetry of these Dithyrambic compositions was chiefly of the latter kind, seems to be implied in the expression of Plato, who, where he explains his division of Poetry into three sorts—the purely imitative, or dramatic, the purely narrative, and the mixed—refers, for an example of the purely narrative, to Dithyrambic Poetry. Yet he says only, that it is to be found chiefly there—ἐν τοῖς δ' αὖ αὐτὴν ΜΑΛΙΣΤΑ ΠΟΤ' ἐν Διθύραμβοις^c. The expression is remarkable, and leaves room for more than a conjecture, that that the Dithyrambic was sometimes imitative even in the strict sense of Plato; that is, that the dramatic mixture of the Epic was occasionally admitted. Instances of this occur in the Odes of Pindar^d; and many of the Odes of Horace are dramatic*.

^a — ὡς ΠΕΡΣΑΕΣ καὶ ΚΥΚΛΩΠΑΣ Τιμοθεῖ καὶ Φιλοξένῳ.

^b Diss. I. p. 36.

^c Rep. lib. iii. p. 394

The embarrassment of the commentators seems to have arisen, principally, from the difficulty they found in conceiving, that fiction could be admitted into a species of Poetry addressed to the Gods, and founded on the established Theology of the age. The hymns of Callimachus, and those attributed to Homer, might have been sufficient to remove this difficulty. These are not, like the Orphic hymns, mere invocations, and indigitamenta, consisting in a short and solemn accumulation of epithets and attributes: they are Epic, narrative hymns; in which the birth, the actions, and even the characters and manners of the ^d Olymp. I. Antist. γ, where Pelops speaks. See also Olymp. VI. Epode α, and γ.—Olymp. VIII. Ep. β.—And the prophecy of Amphiaraus, in Pyth. VIII. Strophe γ.—and of Medea; Pyth. IV. Antist. α, to Antist. γ.—The Odes of Pindar, indeed, are not strictly Dithyrambic Poetry; but the chief difference was probably that of their subjects.

* See Dr. Warton's Essay on Pope, vol. ii. 44, &c. where the beauties of those dramatic Odes, and particularly of the fifth Epode, are pointed out and illustrated with much taste.

the deities are described at length, and the fictions of the Poet's imagination are every where engrafted upon the popular creed. The mixture of dramatic imitation, in the Dithyrambic Poetry, is also rendered more probable by the frequent examples of it in these hymns; and especially in those of Homer. From the enthusiastic, wild, audacious character^f peculiarly attributed to the Bacchic hymns, we have, surely, no reason to suppose in them a degree of scruple and reserve, with respect to all this, which we do not find in other antient religious compositions of a more sober and regular cast.

After what has been said, the reader will hardly think it necessary to have recourse to so distant and conjectural an interpretation as that of the Abbé Batteux, who says—"Le Dithyrambe est imitation, parceque le Poete, en le composant, exprime d'apres le vraisemblable, les sentimens, les transports, l'ivresse, qui doit regner dans le Dithyrambe^g. This ingenious writer seems to have been forced into this solution of the matter by his desire of extending the principle of Poetic imitation beyond the limits, not only of Aristotle's meaning, but of all reasonable analogy. All Lyric Poetry he holds to be essentially imitative; and defining it to be that Poetry, "qui exprime le sentiment

^f "Audaces Dithyrambos." Hor.

^g Ch. i. of his translation;—note, under the text.

sentiment^a," he is reduced to the necessity of making out these sentiments, or feelings, to be, in some sort, imitations; for no other reason, than, that they are assumed and feigned—the temporary produce of that voluntary enthusiasm, which the Poet, by the force of his imagination, excites in himself during the moments of composition. But this belongs rather to the style and manner, than to the matter, of Poetry: if imitation at all, it is the imitation, not, properly, of the Poet, but of the man, in order to become the Poet.—The general character of Lyric Poetry is enthusiasm; and enthusiasm, says M. Batteux, "n'est autre chose qu'un sentiment " quel qu'il soit—amour, colere, joie, admiration, tristesse, &c.—produit par une idee¹." But if all illusive feelings of this kind, raised in us by imagination, are imitations, then, not only every artist of genius is an imitator, when he conceives and plans his work, but even every man of sensibility, whenever he is led, by the voluntary excursions of his fancy, into warm and passionate feelings, that are not prompted by real circumstances.—It is certain, indeed, that not only Dithyrambic and Lyric Poetry, but Epic also, and perhaps every other species worth regarding, regarding, has its appropriated style and tone, which every Poet adopts and imitates, when he composes in the kind to which it belongs. But the same may be said of a history, a sermon, and even of a letter: for in these also, though we may not imitate any particular writer, we naturally conform to the general style and manner that characterize the particular species of composition. All this however has, manifestly, nothing to do with the imitation that we are considering.

^a See his Beaux Arts réduits à un même principe, ch. on Lyric Poetry: and vol. iii. of his Principes de la littérature, ch. i. Traité 6.

¹ Principes de la Lit. Traité 6, ch. i.

The Lyric Poet is not always, and essentially, an imitator, any more than the Epic. While he is merely expressing his own sentiments, in his own person, we consider him not as imitating;—we inquire not whether they are the assumed sentiments of the Poetic character, or the real sentiments of the writer himself; we do not even think of any such distinction. He is understood to imitate, in the most general view, no other-wise than by fiction, by personation, by description, or by sound^{*}; in the view of Aristotle, only by the two first of these.

I will only add, that the Dithyrambic Poetry was, it seems, not originally imitative, but became so by degrees. This fact, and the causes of it, we learn from a curious passage, in the Harmonic Problems of Aristotle, which I shall have occasion to mention in another place.

^{*} See Dissert. I. p. 32.

NOTE 2.

P. 102. FOR AS MEN, SOME THROUGH ART, AND SOME THROUGH HABIT, IMITATE VARIOUS OBJECTS, &c.

I have followed the old and most authentic reading, δια της ΦΩΝΗΣ: which, though not unexceptionable, has been rejected, I think, without sufficient reason. The philosopher is, here, only illustrating what he had said of the different means of poetical and musical imitation, by comparing those arts, in this respect, with other arts more strictly and obviously imitative. That he meant to confine his illustration to Painting, was a groundless fancy of Dacier, which led him into two unnecessary corrections of the text, and a very forced and improbable explication of the whole passage. The remark of Aristotle, parenthetically flung in, about art and habit, (οἱ μὲν δια τεχνῆς, οἱ δὲ δια συνθείας,) was by no means necessary to his illustration. Dacier extends the parenthesis by the reading he adopts, (οἱ μὲν δια τεχνῆς, οἱ δὲ δια συνθείας, ἑτέροι δὲ δι' ἀμφοῖν,) then wonders, why Aristotle, “qui n'écrit pas un seul mot “inutilement,” should enter into such a detail; and then, wantonly alters the text, (from δια τεχνῆς, to δια ΤΥΧΗΣ,) in order to account for it in a manner, that leaves it more wonderful than he found it. Castelvetro had before proposed a a similar alteration—ἄλλοι δὲ ἀμφοτέροισι; but in a sense, which, could it be supported, would be far more to the purpose than that of Dacier: i. e. “others, again, [imitate] both by colour “and by figure.” This would answer to what follows,—that the different means of imitation, in the Poetical and Musical arts, were used, sometimes separately, and sometimes combined. To this sense, however, an objection immediately occurs. We may imitate an object by figure without colour, but not by colour without figure. This difficulty, indeed, Castelvetro endeavours to get rid of, by understanding σχηματα, here, to denote only the solid form of Sculpture, and χρῆματα, Painting, as chiefly characterized by colour; and, thus, for an example of imitation by both those means, he is forced to have recourse to the coloured Sculpture of the antients*. But

it

* That the antients sometimes coloured their statues, is well known. From many passages which might be produced as proofs, I shall select one from Plato, which is curious, and would be, alone, decisive. It is in the beginning of his 4th book De Repub.—It had been objected, that, by the severity of his laws relating to his φύλακες or magistrates, they were reduced to a worse condition, with respect to happiness, than the rest of the citizens. His answer is, that the aim of his legislation was, not to provide for the superior happiness of any one part of his commonwealth, but for the greatest possible happiness of the whole. “Suppose,” says it would be a waste of discussion to enter fully into the merits of an explanation, that is founded on a reading, by no means, I think, sufficiently warranted, either by the authority of MSS. or by any necessity of alteration.

That the words χρῶματα and σχήματα are very frequently joined by the Greek writers to denote painting, is certain^b. But Aristotle is not here speaking of the different Arts which employ these means of imitation, but of the means themselves,

Socrates, “ we were painting a statue; and any one “ should come, and object to us, as a fault, that we did “ not apply the most beautiful colours to the most “ beautiful parts of the body—that we had made the “ eyes, for instance, black, when we should have given “ them, as being the chief beauty of the human form, “ a purple colour.—It would,” continues Socrates, “ be “ a very reasonable apology, if we should request this “ critic not to insist on our making the eyes so beautiful, “ as to have no longer the appearance of eyes; but to “ consider, only, whether, by giving to each part its “ proper colour, we should not make the whole beau“ tiful.—This is precisely the apology I make for our “ legislation: I request the objector, not to insist on our “ allotting to the guardians of the state such a happiness, “ as would render them any thing else rather than “ guardians,” &c. Plato De Rep. lib. iv. p. 420. C.
Ed. Ser. Ωςπερ ἐν αὐτῇ—&c.

^b See Arist. de Rep. lib. viii. cap. 5. p. 455. C.
Plat. de Rep. x. p. 601. A. De Leg. ii. p. 669. A.

selves, separately and abstractedly. The application of these, singly, or in their various combinations, to those arts, he has left to the reader. It seems probable, (as Victorius has observed,) that Sculpture, at least, was included in Aristotle's idea of σχηματα. Possibly, too, the word may be here used in its widest sense, of figure or form in general; which would take in the outline of Painting, the solid figure of Sculpture^c, and the gestures of the personal Mimic.

That, at least, the word φωνη is right, in the old reading, appears highly probable from the frequent mention of the voice, as a principal instrument of imitation, in antient authors^d. It is called by Aristotle, as Mr. Winstanley has judiciously observed, παντων μιμητικωτατον των μοριων ημιν^e.

Farther—by this reading the illustration intended is more perfect, as it comprehends more “means of different kinds”—ΓΕΝΕΙ ἑτερα. The same reason favours also the extension of the word σχηματα to Sculpture, at least.

The only objection to the reading, δια της φωνης, is, the improbability that Aristotle should, without

^c Σχημα is defined by Socrates, in the MENO of Plato, to be, περας εἶδες — “the boundary of solid form.”

^d See Diss. I. towards the end, *Note*¹. Victorius defends the reading on the same ground.

^e Rhet. lib. iii. cap. I. § 4.

without any apparent reason, envelop the whole passage in embarrassment and ambiguity, by such a change of phrase:—ΔΙΑ φωνης;—which every reader is naturally led to join, not with the datives, χρωμασι και σχημασι, but with ΔΙΑ τεχνης, and ΔΙΑ συνηθειας: but the word φωνης opposing such a construction, has therefore, probably, been changed to ἀμφοιν.—This objection has not been solidly answered, I think, either by Victorius, or any other commentator; nor can I think the change of phrase here by any means sufficiently accounted for, merely by assigning, as Victorius does, a passage of Lucian, where the phrase itself, (to which no one objects,) occurs. [See Mr. Winstanley's note.]—I am much inclined, therefore, to admit the reading said by Madius to have been found in an antient MS. and confirming the conjecture of Robortelli,—ἑτεροι δὲ τῆς ΦΩΝΗΣ. This would clearly mark the bounds of the parenthesis, and fix the construction: και χρωμασι, και σχημασι, πολλὰ μίμνυνται τινες — (——) ἑτεροι δὲ τῇ φωνῇ.

NOTE 3.

P. 102. AND OF ANY OTHER INSTRUMENTS CAPABLE OF A SIMILAR EFFECT, AS, THE SYRINX OR PIPE.

The word Συριγξ is usually understood to mean the Fistula Panis, constructed of reeds, differing differing in length, fastened together with wax and thread:—καλαμων συνθηκη, λινω και κηρω συνδεθεισα—as it is described by Jul. Pollux^a. Tibullus has presented in two lines almost as distinct an idea of its form as can be obtained from a drawing.

Fistula cui semper decrescit arundinis ordo,
Nam calamus cerâ jungitur usque minor.

[Lib.ii. 5.31.]

But the Συριγξ of Aristotle, whatever it was, is here mentioned with the Lyre, and the Flute, as having some, though an inferior, degree of the same power and effect:—τοιαυται την δυναμιν. This is hardly applicable to so very simple and rude an instrument as the pipe of Pan; a contrivance not beyond the invention of a school-boy. Instruments of nearly the same construction are found, at this day, not only in Turkey, and Arabia, but even in the island of New Amsterdam in the South Seas^b; and it is a circumstance somewhat curious, that, in France, the instrument of the Arcadian deity, or something very like it, is degraded to the use of travelling tinkers, and known by the name of sifflet de chaudronnier. The reader may see a description and a figure of it in Mersennus^c; as he may, also, of the South Sea instrument in the Philosophical Transactions, vol. 65, Part I.—But he will not, probably, be much

^a Onomast. lib. iv. cap. 9.

^b Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 511.

^c Harmonic, p. 73.

much disposed to believe, that the wild and random sounds of this savage whistle have any thing to do with the chromatic system of the Greeks.

But the passage before us is not the only one, where the Syrinx is mentioned in a way which naturally leads one to suppose, that some instrument less simple and imperfect than the fistula Panis must be meant. It is often joined with the cithara and the flute, as an instrument of some importance and effect in concerts and choral accompaniments^d. In Lucian's treatise Περὶ Ορχήσεως, it appears, among other curious information upon the subject, that the words of the drama, which the pantomimic dancer was to express by gesture alone, were, at the same time, sung by a chorus, accompanied by various instruments, among which the syrinx is repeatedly mentioned, together with the Αὐλὸς or flute^e. This has, certainly, the appearance of some more powerful instrument than the pastoral syrinx.—Indeed, from the passage of Pollux above referred to, there is reason to conclude, that there were two instruments of this denomination; that above described, which he calls the rude, or extemporaneous syrinx, [αὐτοσχέδιον] and another, of

^d See Spanheim, in Callimachum—Hymn. in Dianam, v. 243.

^e Ed. Benedicti, p. 942, E.—938, D, E.—945, B.

of similar form, but more artificial construction, which he describes as consisting, not of reeds, but of a number of flutes, [αῦλοι πολλοί] arranged in the same manner. The passage is defective; but this seems to me pretty clearly to be the drift of it^f. By flutes, he must, at least, be supposed to mean pipes of larger size, and of more solid materials, such as those of which flutes were made.

It seems, on the whole, very probable, that the syrinx of Aristotle was either some such improved construction of the flute of Pan, or, as I rather incline to believe, some kind of single pipe, or flageolet. Any single pipe, modulated by the fingers, must be regarded as an instrument far superior to any kind of the fistula Panis, that could be played on only by the clumsy expedient of drawing it along the mouth;—"suprà calamos " unco percurrere labro," as Lucretius has well described the operation^g. I cannot indeed say, that

^f The passage should, I think, be written as defective, thus : ἡ μὲν ἐν, (sc. συριγξ,) καλαμῶν ἐστὶ συνθήκη λινῶ καὶ κηρῶ συνθεθεῖσα, ἥγε αὐτοσχέδι⊕. * * * * * ΑΤΛΟΙ πολλοί, ἑκαστ⊕ κ. τ. ἀλλ.—Saimasius supplied the hiatus thus :—ΑΛΛ' Ἡ ΣΠΟΥΔΑΙΟΤΕΡΑ, αἰλοὶ πολλοί, &c.—I would not answer for the very words; but that something equivalent is omitted, I have little doubt. See Ed. Hempst. p. 387. Note 43.—where, by the way, Kuhnus commends the emendation, but appears to misunderstand it.

^g Lib. v. 1406.

that I have met with any passage in which the word Συριγξ, by itself, is clearly and expressly applied to a single musical pipe or flute. But such a sense is perfectly analogous to other common applications of the word^h; and, on the other hand, I know of no clear authority that restrains the meaning of the word, whenever it is singly used, to the fistula Panis. Athenæus speaks of the μονοκαλαμὸς Συριγξ invented by Mercury, and opposes it to the *πολυκαλαμὸς*ⁱ; and Spanheim^k, whose authority, in matters of erudition, is as great as the profoundest erudition can give to any man, understands this single-reed syrx to be meant in the hymn to Mercury attributed to Homer, where it is said of that god, that—

ΣΥΡΙΓΓΩΝ ἔνοπλην ποιήσατο ΤΗΛΟΘ'

ΑΚΟΥΣΤΗΝ:

v. 509.

—a mode of characterizing the tone of the instrument, that reminds one of the “ear-piercing fife” of Shakspeare.

After all, a modern reader may be still surprised to find any degree of imitation, or expression, attributed to so trifling an instrument as a flageolet,

^h Vide Lexica :^a and see Dr. Burney's Hist of Music, vol. i. p. 511, where it is rightly observed, that “each of the pipes” which composed the fistula Panis, “was, properly, a Συριγξ.”

ⁱ P. 184.

^k Ubi suprà.

flageolet, or a common flute. But, in reading antient authors, it is frequently necessary, if we would either relish, or even understand them, properly, to lay aside modern ideas. And if this be necessary in general, it is, perhaps, peculiarly so in the subject of Music. Expression, in our musical language, usually conveys the idea of delicate and refined performance, and is almost appropriated to emotions of the tender and pathetic kind. But, with the antients, imitation, or expression (for the words appear to have been synonymous¹;) extended to every kind of emotion; to every effect produced, in any considerable degree, by Music upon the mind. Now very simple instruments, as well as very simple music, are capable of making impressions, and strong impressions, of the joyous kind, without any delicacy or refinement, either in the composition, or the execution. It is not, therefore, strange, that the syrinx, a shrill and lively pipe, should be ranked by Aristotle as an instrument of some expression; especially if, as it seems probable, the syrinx, of whatever kind, was considered as a pastoral instrument, and its expressions were, in consequence, aided by the association of rural and pastoral ideas^m. The rude syrinx of Pan was

¹ See Diss. II.

^m " One of the most affecting styles in music is the pastoral. Some airs," [we may add, and those instruments, was unquestionably of this kind, and appropriated to pastoral useⁿ; and, as far as it can be supposed to have affected by association, might, in the musical language of the Greeks, and by a hearer who felt that effect from it, be considered and spoken of as imitative, without impropriety. But being, as I conceive, of too simple and inconvenient a construction to admit of any expression but what it derived purely from associated ideas, it would not, I think, have been joined by Aristotle with the most expressive and refined instruments of the antients, the cithara, and the flute, and mentioned as of "similar power and effect."

ments, also, on which we have been used to hear those airs performed,] "put us in mind of the country, of "rural sights and rural sounds, and dispose the heart to "that chearful tranquillity, that pleasing melancholy, "that "vernal delight," which groves and streams, "flocks and herds, hills and vallies, inspire." Dr. Beattie — Essay on Poetry and Music, p. 142.

ⁿ Plato, Rep. iii. p. 399. . Serran.

• Aristotle, in the 8th book De Republicâ, cap. vi. where he is considering what instruments should be used in the musical education of children, excludes the cithara, as too complicated and difficult for any but professors. He calls it τεχνικον ὄργανον, and ranks it with the αὐλὴ or flute. Plato, however, admits the use of the cithara in his republic, as a more simple instrument than the flute, which he forbids. [Rep. iii. ubi supra.] For some idea of the delicacy and refinement of execution, and force of expression, expected from the accomplished Αὐλητής, I refer the reader to the Harmonides of Lucian, and to a passage in Philostratus, Ed. Morel. p. 228. '

VOL. I.

Q

NOTE 4.

P. 102. FOR THERE ARE DANCERS WHO BY RHYTHM APPLIED TO GESTURE - - -.

The Greek is—οἱ τῶν ὀρχησῶν: but there is great reason to suspect the reading. It is generally rendered, “Some dancers:” but Victorius, who understands it in that sense, says—durus tamen sermo; and produces no authority for such a phrase. Heinsius proposed—οἱ ΠΟΛΛΟΙ τῶν ὀρχησῶν. The learned reader may, perhaps, agree with me, that—ΕΝΙΟΙ τῶν ὀρχησῶν, would be preferable, as nearer to the text. It is not probable, that the degree of imitative skill here described was possessed by all dancers, or even by “the greater part” of them. A passage from Aristocles is preserved by Athenæus, in which Telestes, a dancer employed by Æschylus, is mentioned as remarkable for this talent:—ΟΥΤΩΣ ΗΝ ΤΕΧΝΙΤΗΣ, ὥς, ἐν τῷ ὀρχησθαι τὰς ἑπτα ἑπὶ Θηβας, φανερά ποιῆσθαι τὰ πράγματα δι’ ὀρχησεως. [Athen. p. 22.] This dancing appears plainly to have been of that kind, which was afterwards pushed to such an excess of cultivation by the pantomimic dancers in the age of Augustus²; and which is well known to have divided all ² — κατὰ τὸν ΣΕΒΑΣΤΟΝ μάλιστα· αἱ μὲν γὰρ πρῶται ἔκειναι [sc. ὀρχηστῆς] ὥσπερ τινες ρίμαι καὶ θεμελιοὶ τῆς ὀρχησεως ἦσαν.—Lucian. de Salt. p. 927. Ed. Bened.
Rome

Rome into parties, and even, frequently, to have made the theatre a scene of bloodshed^b. Of this fact, I cannot help adding, that a proof somewhat curious is furnished by Valerius Maximus ; who, in the arrangement of his miscellaneous work, places his chapter De Spectaculis, immediately after that, De militaribus institutis ; and gives this reason : “ Proximus militaribus institutis, ad urbana castra, id est, Theatra, gradus faciendus est : quoniam hæc quoque, sæpenumero, animosas acies instruxerunt ; excogitataque cultûs Deorum, et hominum delectationis, causâ, non sine aliquo pacis rubore, voluptatem et religionem CIVILI SANGUINE, scenicorum portentorum gratiâ, maculârunt.” [Lib. ii. 4.]—These scenica portenta were the Pantomimes.

Aristotle says here, δια των σχηματιζομενων ρυθμων. It seems, at first view, that the inverse of this expression would have been more accurate—δια των ρυθμιζομενων σχηματων — by rhythmic gestures. And, if he had been here considering the imitation of Dance, separately, and in itself, he probably would have expressed himself in that way. But dancing is here transiently mentioned, merely to exemplify what he had been saying, of the combined, or separate, use of rhythm, words, and melody ; and to shew, in what manner, not only melody and rhythm might be separated from words, as in music ; but rhythm, also, might be separated separated from melody, and used alone^c. Any mode of expression, therefore, which would have represented gestures (σχηματα) as the principal means of the imitation, would not have suited his purpose. It would, also, as Victorius and others have observed, have tended to confound the means of imitation in the poetic and musical arts, which he is here considering, with those means of a different kind, which he had just enumerated, as employed in arts of more obvious and strict imitation, and among which ΣΧΗΜΑΤΑ were mentioned.

^b See Tacit. and Sueton. passim.

It has been also objected, that Aristotle is, here, professedly instancing in ταῖς ΕΙΡΗΜΕΝΑΙΣ τεχναῖς—in the arts “above-mentioned”—and yet introduces Dancing, which had not been mentioned: a difficulty easily overcome, if we consider, that Dancing was among the musical arts; closely connected with Poetry, and, above all, with Tragedy.

^c For such an instance, he could have recourse only to Dance; and so Arist. Quintil.—ῥυθμὸς δὲ ΚΑΘ' ΑΥΤΟΝ ΜΕΝ [VOEITAI] ἔννι ΨΑΛΗΣ ΟΡΧΗΣΕΩΣ. The whole passage, where he is considering melody, rhythm, and words, in their separate use, and in their various combinations, is curious, and may serve to illustrate this part of Aristotle's treatise.—See p. 31, 32. Ed. Meib.

NOTE 5.

P. 102. THE EPOPOEIA IMITATES BY WORDS ALONE, OR BY VERSE, &c.

In my translation of this perplexing passage, as far as the words — ποιῶτο τὴν μιμήσιν — inclusively, I have given that sense which is now generally adopted, and in which almost all the commentators are agreed*. And it has certainly this advantage, that it seems to be the only consistent and intelligible version that can be given of the whole passage, as it now stands. But it appears to me, after the closest attention I have been able to give it, that, in the present condition of the text, no man can reasonably be confident of conveying the true meaning of Aristotle in any translation or explanation that he can give.

The passage sets out with an expression most unfortunately ambiguous, and demonstrated to be so, by the very confidence with which the ambiguity has been denied, by critics and commentators of great learning and sagacity, in favour of interpretations directly opposite to each other. Some, by the expression, λόγοις ψιλοῖς, have understood Aristotle to mean prose, and others, verse, without music.—But this is far from being all the difficulty with which a translator has to struggle in

* Madius, Beni, Piccolomini, Heinsius, Dacier, Batteux.

in this passage. In the words—εἰθ' ἐν τινὶ γένει ΧΡΩΜΕΝΗ τῶν μέτρων τυγχάνουσα ΜΕΧΡΙ ΤΟΥ ΝΥΝ—there is, surely, something defective. All render this,—“or, making use of some one kind of metre, AS IT HAS DONE to this day”^b. And this, indeed, seems the only sense that can be given to the words as they stand. But it appears to me, that the original cannot, by any fair and warranted elliptical construction, be made to say this. Heinsius alone gives the fair and literal version; “vel uno tantum genere utatur usque ad tempus nostrum”—in plain English—“whether mixing different metres together, or using some one kind of metre to this day”^c. I am perfectly aware of the elliptical genius of the Greek language in general, and of Aristotle's style, in particular; yet to my ears, I confess, this English, nonsensical as it is, does not sound more strange than the Greek from which it is taken. Some word, or words, must, I should suppose, have been omitted between τυγχάνουσα, and, μέχρι.

Again :

^b “Aut uno aliquo metrorum genere usa sit, quod à priscis temporibus ad nostrum usque factitatum est.” Goulston.—“Ou qu'elle se contente d'une seule espece, comme elle l'a fait jusq' à present.” Dacier.—And so Piccolomini, “Per quello che si vede fare sino ai tempi d'oggi.”

^c It is so rendered, I find, by the English translator of 1775; “either intermixing the various metres, or, using one particular sort to this very day.”

Again: — ἔθεν γὰρ ἂν ἔχοιμεν ΟΝΟΜΑΣΑΙ
ΚΟΙΝΟΝ τὰς Σωφρον^ο και Ξεναρχε μιμνῆς, &c.—

I submit it to those who are versed in the Greek language, whether it seems probable, that, if Aristotle had meant to express the sense usually given to the words, (i. e. “ for we should other“ wise have no common name to give to,” &c.) he would have expressed it in that Greek? I can only say that I know of no similar example. But farther: the words are conditional—ἔθεν γὰρ ἂν ἔχοιμεν—and yet the condition is by no means clearly pointed out. The sense may be, and has been, variously supplied. It seems not improbable, that there is some omission between the words, νυν, and ἔθεν.—I am not able entirely to repel a suspicion—for I give it as nothing more—that the words, μέχρι τε νυν, may belong to this sentence, and the whole may originally have stood thus:—εἴτε μιγνυσα μετ’ ἀλλήλων, εἰθ’ ἐνι τινι γενεῇ χρωμένη τῶν μετρῶν τυγχάνουσα. Μεχρι ΓΑΡ τε νυν ἔθεν ΕΧΟΜΕΝ, &c. i. e. “ For we have hitherto no “ common appellation^d,” &c.—So much, as to the condition of the text in this passage.

The interpretation, which I have followed, has been very ably defended by several of the commentators, whose arguments I need not repeat; by none, I think, so powerfully as by Paolo Beni^e:
but

^d I have only transposed γὰρ, and omitted ἂν, for which omission there is MS. authority.

^e Comment. in Aristotelis Poeticam, Partic. 6.

but it requires considerable patience to follow him through the controversial zigzag of his captious and fatiguing logic.

The strongest support furnished by Aristotle himself to this extension of the term Epopæia to all imitation, fiction, invention, &c. by words only, without music, whether in verse or prose, is, I think, to be found in Sect. 6, Part I. [Original, cap. ix.] For, if a history put into verse would, as he there asserts, be still a sort of history, we may infer, that an Epic Poem reduced to prose would, in his idea, have been still a sort, at least, of Poem.—What he says in the conclusion of that section—that the Poet should be the ΠΟΙΗΤΗΣ, or Maker, rather of his fable, than of his verse, has the same aspect.—The same idea is also favoured by the extent which he has actually given to the term Epopæia, in Sect. 3, Part I. [Original, cap. ii.] where it is expressly applied, not only to the serious Poetry of Homer, but to Poems of a comic, and even burlesque, character. An Epic Poem without elevation is, nearly, as repugnant to modern ideas as a Poem without verse. It would not appear much more strange to give the title of Epic Poem to Tom Jones, than to Hudibras; to apply it to the Telemaque, would, undoubtedly, appear much less strange^f.

It

^f Itaque video visum esse nonnullis, Platonis & Democriti locutionem, etsi absit à versu, tamen, quòd

It may be worth remarking, farther, that there is one circumstance, which, I think, would evidently tend to render this doctrine of Aristotle—if it was his doctrine—less extraordinary to the ancients, than it appears to us; and that is, that the difference between metre, and well-measured prose, though, no doubt, sufficient to make them readily distinguished by the ear, seems to have been less than it is with us. To what a degree of refinement they carried their rules for the application of the various poetical feet to their prose compositions, and with what fastidious delicacy of ear they discriminated one combination of syllables from another, is well known from the writings of Cicero, Quintilian, Dion. Halicarnassensis, &c.—It would be thought a strange expression, were a modern writer to say, comparing the Orator and the Poet, that the latter was “rather more confined by numbers:” “numerus adstrictior paulo.” incitatus feratur, et clarissimis verborum luminibus utatur, potius POEMA putandum quam comicorum Poetarum, apud quos, nisi quod versiculi sunt, nihil est aliud quotidiani dissimile sermonis. Cic. Orat. cap. xx.

But,

* Cic. de Orat. i. 16. — So, again, Or. ad Brutum, cap. lxi. speaking of prose compared with verse, he says, “at liberior aliquantò oratio.”—To the same purpose ibid. cap. xx. Nam etiam Poetæ quæstionem attulerunt, quidnam esset illud quo ipsi differrent ab oratoribus. Numero maximè videbantur antea, et versu; nunc apud oratores jam ipse numerus increbuit.

But, after all, the chief point of difficulty appears to me to lie, not in Aristotle's asserting, that Poetry, in his idea of the word, might subsist without verse, but in his giving the name of Epopæia to such compositions as the Mimes of Sophron, and the Dialogues of Plato. But of this, in the next note.

In my translation of the words, λογοις ψιλοις, I have ventured to depart from the common interpretation; but without any material change in the sense. They are generally understood to mean prose; and Dacier asserts positively, that, "those two words are never joined by Aristotle " or Plato in any other sense^b." If he meant, that, wherever ψιλ is joined to λογ, it is always used to exclude metre only, he is certainly mistaken. He had, himself, but just before, quoted a passage of Plato, in which the expression, λογοι ψιλοι, appears clearly to mean, words without melody. It is in his second book De Legibus, where, complaining, in his usual strain, of the separation of Poetry and Music, he says of the Poets, that they employ *ῥυθμον μὲν καὶ ῥήματα*¹

Μελεις

^b Ch. i. Note 22.

¹ I have ventured to alter the word σχηματα to ῥήματα; a correction, which, I think, the learned reader will see to be obviously necessary, from the purport and expression of the whole passage. The opposition is clear—ῥυθμον μὲν καὶ PHMATA μελεις χωρις—μελ δ' AT καὶ ῥυθμης ἀνευ PHMATΩΝ.

ΜΕΛΟΣ ΧΩΡΙΣ, ΛΟΓΟΥΣ ΨΙΛΟΥΣ ΕΙΣ ΜΕΤΡΑ
 ΤΙΘΕΝΤΕΣ· μέλος δ' αὐ καὶ ῥυθμὸς ἀνευ ῥημάτων, ψιλὴ καθαρίζει τε καὶ αὐλῆσαι προσχρωμένοι^{*}. The words, λογὸς ψιλὸς εἰς μέτρα τιθέντες, Dacier translates, very strangely, "mettant de la simple prose
" en vers." But what has turning prose into verse to do with Plato's complaint?—ψιλοί, here, applied to λόγοι, answers evidently to μέλος χωρίς,
 and excludes melody; just as, in ψιλὴ καθαρίζει καὶ αὐλῆσαι, the same adjective answers to ἀνευ ῥημάτων, and excludes *words*¹. And this appears to me to be the obvious sense of ψιλοῖς in the passage of Aristotle before us. By λόγοις ψιλοῖς,
 I understand—not, words without metre, i. e.
 Prose—but, words without music. It is, surely, most natural, and most to Aristotle's purpose, to apply the privative force of ψιλό, here, to the two means of imitation, melody and rhythm; which are excluded in the Epopœia, as words are, in the preceding instance of the flute and the lyre, and both words and music, in that of dance. And thus

* Ed. Serr. vol. ii. p. 669.

¹ I find this very passage mentioned by Casaubon, De Satyrâ, &c. p. 346, with the same explanation of λογὸς ψιλὸς.—This is not the only instance in Plato that contradicts the assertion of Dacier. In a passage of his Symposium, cited by Victorius, [Ed. Serr. p. 215.] the words—ἀντὶ ὀργάνων, ψιλοῖς λόγοις—are, I think, rightly rendered by Serranus, "Sine ullis instrumentis, assâ tantum simplicique voce."

thus he has actually used the word, in the compound ψιλομετρία, in the next chapter. The only difference is, that there he has joined the word ψιλο to metre; here, to words in general. But in both places, the meaning is probably the same—i.e. “without melody and rhythm.”

The word λογος is, plainly, used by Aristotle, in his first enumeration of the means of imitation, [—ἐν Ρυθμῷ καὶ Λόγῳ καὶ Ἀρμονίᾳ. cap. i.] in the general sense, of language, discourse, or words, whether with, or without metre; as we say, “the words of a song,” &c. as opposed to the music^m; and that, whether those words are verse, as in general they are, or prose, as in the songs of the Messiah, and in the anthems of our church. And, that the word λογος was purposely used by Aristotle in this latitude, is rendered highly probable by his varying the expression, where he speaks of Tragedy, Comedy, Dithyrambics, and Nomes, to which metre was essential, and substituting there, the word Μετρησ, for *Λογῶν*ⁿ. It was natural, then, that he should say,

^m So Virgil :

“ - - - numeros memini, si VERBA tenerem.”

Ecl. ix.

Nothing is more common than this use of λογος in Aristotle and Plato. Thus the latter, De Rep. lib. iii.—το μελὸς ἐκ τριῶν ἐστὶ συγκειμενον, ΛΟΓΟΥ τε καὶ ἁρμονίας καὶ ρυθμοῦ—which agrees exactly with Aristotle’s account of the means of imitation.

ⁿ ῥυθμῳ, καὶ μελῃ, καὶ ΜΕΤΡΩ. Cap. i.

say, when he came to speak of the Epic imitation, as distinguished from those he had before mentioned, that it imitates by words alone—i. e. without melody and rhythm, or, as we should say, without music. But he adds—ἢ Μετροῖς—“ or verse.” And why?—Probably, because he thought his expression would be neither clear, nor exact, without it: not clear, because the most usual meaning of λόγοι ψιλοὶ being prose, it might have been so taken here, and he might have appeared to say, at least, though no one could reasonably suppose he meant it, that the Epic imitates by prose only—μονον τοῖς λόγοις ψιλοῖς:—not exact, because, metre being, as he himself expressly says, a species, or part, of rhythm°, words, put into metre, were not, strictly speaking, ψιλοὶ, that is, χωρὶς Ἀρμονίας καὶ Ρυθμοῦ. And this is exactly conformable to the expression of Plato in the passage above quoted, where he considers verse, even unaccompanied by music, as still consisting of rhythm and words, [ΡΥΘΜΟΝ μὲν καὶ ῥήματα Μελὸς χωρὶς;]—plainly regarding metre as a species, or form, of rhythm.

I understand, therefore, the meaning of Aristotle, in this expression—τοῖς λόγοις ψιλοῖς, ἢ τοῖς μετροῖς, to amount to this;—“ by words, without the “ other means of melody and rhythm, or at most,
“ with so much of rhythm only, as is implied in * τα γὰρ μετρά, ὅτι ΜΟΡΙΑ τῶν ῥυθμῶν ἐστὶ, φανερόν. Cap. iv.
“ the

" the idea of metre: without rhythm, in its 'musical sense of strict time'." This sense of the words agrees perfectly with what follows—εἶναι γὰρ ἂν ἔχοιμεν, &c. i. e. "For otherwise—
 " if we do not allow the Epopsia to imitate by
 " words, in the general sense, whether prose or " verse—we shall have no common name for " Epic imitations in prose; and, if we do not " allow it to imitate in either one or more species
 " of metre, we shall have no common name for " the same kind of imitation in Elegiac, or other
 " verse."

The great advantage of this sense of λογίς φιλοίς is, that, while it leaves in full force that explanation of the whole passage, which I have followed, it removes, at the same time, or at least considerably weakens, what has always struck me as one of the strongest objections to it. Nothing appears to me more improbable, than, that Aristotle, advancing a doctrine so new, and so repugnant to the prevailing ideas of his own times, as, that a species of Poetry might subsist without verse, should chuse to present this novelty in the most offensive way, by beginning at once, and without any management, with the mention of prose: that he should say—"The Epic Poem " imitates by prose alone, or, by verse." If by λογίς φιλοίς he had meant prose, as Dacier and others

* See the quotation from Mr. Harris, p. 108-9.

others contend, would he not naturally — one might say, unavoidably — have reserved those words for the last in the period? Would not the order, in short, have been this? — “ by verse alone; “ and that either of a single kind, or mixed—or “ even by prose.” As I have rendered the words, prose is not mentioned at all, but implied only in the general expression of, words; as it is, equally, in his first enumeration of the means of imitation — ἐν ῥυθμῷ καὶ ΛΟΓΩ καὶ ἀρμονίᾳ. At the worst, the idea of prose is not, as in the other version, presented before that of verse.

With respect to what I have said of the novelty of the philosopher's doctrine, and its remoteness from the common ideas of the antients concerning the importance of metre to Poetry, I may refer even to his own way of speaking, in general, upon that subject. In his Rhetoric, for example, he says—ῥυθμον δεῖ ἔχειν τὸν λόγον, Μῆτρον δὲ, μὴ ΠΟΙΗΜΑ ΓΑΡ ΕΣΤΑΙ.—“ In prose-composition “ there should be rhythm, but not metre—for “ then it will be a POEM.” The reader may also be not displeased to see what Isocrates thought of the importance of verse, in a passage, which I have given in NOTE 229, respecting the privileges and advantages of Poetry.—Plato goes so far, as to compare Poetry, when reduced to prose, to a face, which, having no solid beauty of form form and symmetry, has lost its only charm, when the bloom of youth, and delicacy of complexion, have deserted it'. But the zeal of Plato for depreciating Poetry is well known. He would, probably, have approved the indignation of one of the Fathers, who called it "the Devil's wine." It must be confessed, however, that he has poured a great deal of this wine into his own writings; and were they to be reduced to plain prose, and stripped of that αἶθος—that bloom and colouring of poetic diction, and poetic fancy, by which they are so distinguished, I should be in some pain for the appearance they would make.

¹ Rhet. lib. iii. cap. viii. p. 591. Ed. Duval.

But, to return:—After all that is to be said in favour of that interpretation, which, on the whole, I have thought it best to follow, I must end this note, as I began it, by declaring my conviction of the imperfect condition of the original, and confessing my doubt, whether the true meaning of

* — ἔοικε [sc. τα τῶν Ποιητῶν, γυμνωθέντα γε τῶν τῆς μουσικῆς ΧΡΩΜΑΤΩΝ, αὐτὰ ἐφ' αὐτῶν λεγόμενα,] τοῖς τῶν ὈΡΑΙΩΝ προσώποις, ΚΑΛΩΝ ΔΕ ΜΗ, ὅσα γίνονται ἰδεῖν, ὅταν αὐτὰ το ΑΝΘΡΩΠΩΣ προλήπῃ.—Rep. x. p. 601. Ed. Serrani.—This is quoted by Aristotle, Rhet. iii. cap. iv. p. 588. Duval.—In Dr. Beattie's Essay on Poetry, &c. Part II. ch. ii. it is, by mistake, attributed to Demosthenes. Nor is the meaning of the passage there fully given. Plato does not content himself with saying, that "versification is to Poetry, what bloom is to the human countenance." He says, that versification is to Poetry, what bloom is to a face, that has no beauty but bloom.

of Aristotle, in this passage, has yet been, or ever will be, discovered.

NOTE 6.

P. 103. THE MIMES OF SOPHRON AND XENARCHUS, AND THE SOCRATIC DIALOGUES.

Had Aristotle proposed only to extend the term ἑρμῆα to all imitations of the NARRATIVE kind, whether in verse or prose, whether serious or comic, this, to a reader who should enter thoroughly into his ideas of Poetry, would not, perhaps, appear extraordinary. It would be only classing the different forms of Poetry, as one might expect him to class them, according to what he himself conceived to be the chief and most characteristic difference of their imitations. But here, we find the name applied to compositions of a character strikingly different—to Mimes, and Dialogues; for it is indeed, as Dacier says, a very obvious question, and one which cannot but have occurred to every reader—"les Dia-logues ne ressemblent-ils pas plutot au Poeme "Dramatique, qu' au Poeme Epique?"—An embarrassing question, and which, being at all events to be answered, he answers immediately, and roundly—"Non, sans doute." And why?—Because, says he, "the drama imitates by words and music, the Epic Poem, by words only." But, to apply the expression of the philosopher to this critic — πλεξας εὖ, λυει κακῶς^a. This is much the same thing as if one should deny, that two men, of form and features strikingly similar, resembled each other, merely because their coats were of different colours ; or, to come still nearer to the case, if one should assert that one of these men bore a greater resemblance to a third, with whom he chanced to agree in the single circumstance of not wearing a wig. Is it probable, that Aristotle, in classing and denominating a principal species of Poetry, should be guided by such a circumstance as the mere absence of music? when even metre he regards as not essential, and speaks of it as one of the ἡδυσματα of Poetic language^b. He allows, indeed, that music is the most pleasurable of the ἡδυσματα, or seasonings, of Tragedy^c; but, that he regarded it as less essential than metre, is evident from the place which he assigns it in his arrangement of the six parts of Tragedy according to the order of their importance ; for he there places it next before the ὄψις, or Decoration, which he pronounces to be, of all the parts, “ the most foreign to the “ Poet’s art : ” ἥμισυ οἶκον της ποιητικης^d.—On the other hand, the circumstance of Narration in the

^a Cap. xviii.

^b — λεγω δε ἭΔΥΣΜΕΝΟΝ λόγον, τον ἔχοντα ῥυθμον και ἁρμονιαν και ΜΕΤΡΟΝ. Cap. vi.

^c — μεγιστον των ἡδυσματων. Ibid.

^d Ibid.

the person of the Poet he every where seems to make an essential mark of distinction between the Epic and the Dramatic Poem^c: so that, in order to avoid making him absolutely inconsistent with himself, we must be obliged to suppose, with the commentators, that he uses the word Ἐποποιῖα in two senses; here, in its general and etymological sense, that of imitating, or making, by words^f, and every where else in the common and limited sense of narrative imitation^g. The first of these must be considered as a mere proposal: we must understand Aristotle to say no more than this—that some common term, to include all compositions imitating by words only, was wanted, and that the term Epopeia, was best adapted to that purpose. In the rest of his treatise he conforms to the established ideas and language.—This, however, is by no means satisfactory. It still remains, I confess, no inconsiderable difficulty with me, to conceive, that Aristotle should, by applying the term Ἐποποιῖα to all imitative writing, whether of a narrative or dramatic form, without music, give it an extension inconsistent, as it seems, with his own

^c See Cap. v.—Cap. xxiii. initio. So Cap. xxiv. ἐν δὲ τῇ Ἐποποιῖᾳ, διὰ τὸ ΔΙΗΓΗΣΙΝ εἶναι, &c.—and ibid. ἡ διηγηματικὴ μῦθσις, is equivalent to ἡ Ἐποποιητικὴ μῦθσις, in Cap. xxvi.

^f See the note of Heinsius.

^g As in the passages just referred to, Note c.

own principles, and confounding those distinctions, which, in his own view, were the most essential. If he had meant so to apply the term in the passage before us, he would, surely, have been more explicit, and, where, after this passage, he first mentioned the Epopœia in the usual sense, would have added some words of limitation and distinction to prevent confusion. But this he has not done. Though evidently speaking of the heroic and narrative Epic, he calls it only, ἡ ΕΠΟΠΟΙΑ; as if no other application of the word had been mentioned.

Of the MIMES of SOPHRON we can acquire but a very imperfect idea, either from what is said of them in antient authors, or from the fragments that are preserved in Athenæus, Demetrius, and others. It has even been long disputed among the learned, whether they were prose or verse; and, at last, it seems to be settled, that they were neither; a kind of compromise comfortable enough to the disputants on both sides; for if the fragments are something between verse and prose, they, who assert them to be either, are something between right and wrong. I shall not enter into this discussion; but refer the reader to the remarks of the learned Valckenaer on the argument of the Ἀδωνιαῖσαι of Theocritus; where he will find some curious and uncommon information upon

this

this subject^b. That these compositions, however, were either a species of the drama, or, at least, dialogues in the dramatic form, there seems to be no doubt¹. Dacier, indeed, asserts, that they were, like the Epic Poem, “une imitation com-posée de narration et d’action.” But he produces no proof of this, nor do I know of any.—I must farther observe, that, supposing what is related, of the fondness of Plato for the Mimes of Sophron, and of their having been his model in the μιμησις προσωπων of his own dialogues^k, to be true, it may reasonably be inferred, that we ought by no means to confound them with the Roman Mimes, or to apply to them, as is too often done, all that is said of the latter by Diomedes, and other writers of that age. Such licentious and obscene trash would not, surely, have been found under the pillow of the moral and reforming Plato; and that, ὅλας ἐπὶ γῆρας ἔδωκε, and, as some assert, even in the hour of death^l. In saying this, however, I do not forget, that

^b Theocriti Decem Eidyllia, Lug. Bat. 1773. See, particularly, p. 200.

¹ See Casaubon, de Sat. Poes. cap. iii. p. 115, 116, and the passage of Plutarch to which he refers, Sympos. Prob. lib. vii. Prob. viii. p. 1268. Ed. H. St. And, in his treatise Πότερα των ζων. κ. τ. αλ. p. 1792.

^k See Valckenaer’s Theoc. p. 194.

^l Sophron, mimorum quidem scriptor, sed quem Plato adeo probavit, ut suppositos capiti libros ejus; cum moreretur, habuisse tradatur. Quintil. i. 10.

that delicacy is not to be sought for even in the strictest morality of antient times. For the best idea that can now be formed of the manner of this famous mimographer, we must have recourse, I believe, to the fifteenth Idyl of Theocritus^m, which, as we are informed in the MS. argument found by Ruhnkenius in the royal library at Paris, is an imitation of a Mime of Sophron upon a similar subjectⁿ. A more exact piece of natural delineation cannot be imagined. It is not, indeed, la belle nature; it is the nature of common and simple, or, as some affect to call it, of low, life; but copied with so close and faithful a pencil, that, to every reader accustomed, in any degree, to observe the manners of mankind in general, and whose taste is not perverted by affectation, or fettered by rule, the truth and reality of the imitation will, I believe, amply compensate for the want of dignity in the thing imitated. To those who receive no pleasure from this source, I would rather recommend the belle nature of Pope's Pastorals, or the still finer nature of Fontenelle's.—I would only observe farther, that this imitation of Sophron is in the strict dramatic form; and that it contains nothing

^m The Συρακιώσαι, ἢ Ἀδωνιάζουσαι. The Syracusan women, or, the women at the festival of Adonis.

ⁿ Παρεπλάσε δε ποιημάτων ἐκ τῶν παρὰ Σωφρονι θεωμένων τὰ ἰσθμια. Valcken. Decem Eid. Theoc. p. 188.

nothing in the least degree indecent, or disgusting.

Of the ΛΟΓΟΙ ΣΩΚΡΑΤΙΚΟΙ, by which, undoubtedly, Aristotle meant chiefly, if not solely, the DIALOGUES of PLATO, I shall only observe, that they have all, in a high degree, the dramatic and imitative spirit, and that by far the greater part of them are in the unmixed dramatic form*, so as to admit of representation; and it, accordingly, appears from Plutarch, that those of the lighter cast among them were sometimes performed by boys, as an entertainment, at the Symposia of the Romans in his time†.

NOTE 7.

P. 103. CONNECTING THE POETRY, OR MAKING, WITH THE METRE.

—ΣΥΝΑΠΤΟΝΤΕΣ ΤΩ ΜΕΤΡῳ ΤΟ ΠΟΙΕΙΝ.—Not, “on applique au vers seul l'idée qu'on a de la Poesie,” as M. Batteux renders it, but, as it is translated by Piccolomini, with his usual exactness—“congiugnendo il verbo, ΠΟΙΕΙΝ, [Poiein, “cio é fare,] con la qualità del metro.”—I understand Aristotle's expression to mean, not the connection

* We have, I think, thirty-two dialogues of Plato, taking those De Republicâ, and De Legibus, which are now divided into books, as each one dialogue. Of these thirty-two, only six are in the narrative form.

† Plutarchi Sympos. Prob. lib. vii. Prob. viii.

connection of the general idea of Poetry with that of Verse, though this indeed be implied; but, the junction of the word, Ποιῖν, with the name of some particular metre, in the compound words, Ελεγείοιοι, Εποίοιοι, and the like.

NOTE 8.

P. 103. TREATISES OF MEDICINE OR NATURAL PHILOSOPHY IN VERSE.

Two Poems of Empedocles—that concerning Nature, and his Expiations—contained together, according to Diog. Laertius, five thousand hexameters, and another, on the subject of Medicine, six hundred.—τα μὲν ἐν περὶ ΦΥΣΕΩΣ αὐτῷ καὶ οἱ Καθαρμοὶ, εἰς ἔπη τεινῶσι πεντακισχίλια, ὁ δὲ ΙΑΤΡΙΚΟΣ λογῶ, εἰς ἔπη ἑξακοσια [End of the Life of Empedocles.] This, by the way, confirms the emendation of Heinsius—φυσικόν, for μεσικόν. Nothing, I believe, is known of any antient Poem on the subject of Music.

The earliest philosophy was natural philosophy, and the earliest vehicle of that philosophy was verse. Orpheus, Hesiod, Parmenides, Xenophanes, Empedocles, and Thales, are all mentioned by Plutarch as poet-philosophers of this kind. Pythagoras is said to have written a Poem On the Universe, in hexameters^a. This measure sure was, at least, suited to the dignity of philosophical speculation. We cannot say so much of the verse chosen by Epicharmus for the vehicle of a treatise Concerning sensible and intellectual objects—Περὶ τῶν αἰσθητῶν καὶ νοητῶν—part of which is quoted by Diog. Laertius in his life of Plato^b. It was written in the Trochaic tetrameter, a very unphilosophical measure, if rightly characterized by Aristotle, who gives it the epithets of τροχέρον—ὀρχησικόν—ΚΟΡΔΑΚΙΚΩΤΕΡΟΝ^c. An English reader would be surprised, on opening a didactic and philosophical Poem, to find it written in the measure of—" Jolly mortals, fill your glasses," &c.

^a Περὶ τῆς Ὀυλῆς, ἐν ἑπεσι. Diog. Laert. VIII. 7.—And see Plut. Περὶ τῆς μὴ χρονῆς ἑμμετρίας, &c. p. 716. H. Steph.

NOTE 9.

P. 103. HOMER AND EMPEDOCLES HAVE NOTHING IN COMMON BUT THEIR METRE.

In his book De Poetis, Aristotle spoke somewhat differently. He there said, as cited by Diog.

^b III. 10.

^c Rhet. iii. 8. Poet. cap. xxiv. The word, κορδακικώτερον, cannot be adequately translated. "A jiggish measure," would be weak, to the force of the original. The Κορδαξ is known to have been a kind of dance, so full of buffoonery and indecency, that Theophrastus makes it one of the marks of his Profligate Man, that "he will even dance the Κορδαξ, sober, and without a mask."—Theophrasti Charact. cap. vi. Περὶ Απονοίας.

Diog. Laertius, "that Empedocles resembled
 " Homer in the beauty of his DICTION; abound" ing in metaphors, and making a happy use of " the other embellishments of Poetic language *." It does not seem easy to make this perfectly consistent with what he here asserts—that Empedocles had nothing in common with Homer but his metre. He meant, I suppose, no more, than that Empedocles had nothing of the true Poetic character of Homer, his invention, imitation, &c. But he certainly has said more.

NOTE 10.

P. 104. SO, ALSO, THOUGH ANY ONE SHOULD CHUSE TO CONVEY HIS IMITATION IN EVERY KIND OF METRE, &c.

The conjecture of Heinsius, who contended, that—ἐκ ἥδη καὶ ποιητὴν προσαγορευτεον—should be read interrogatively, I have rejected, because the sense it gives the passage appears to me to be trifling. It makes Aristotle say—"If Poets are " to be denominated from their metre, what
 " name is to be given to him, who writes a " Poem in all sorts of metre? You cannot call " him

* — ἐν δὲ τῷ Περὶ Ποιητῶν φησιν [Ἀριστοτέλης] ὅτι καὶ ὈΜΗΡΙΚΟΣ ὁ Ἐμπεδοκλής, καὶ δεῖν περὶ τὴν ΦΡΑΣΙΝ γεγενῆσθαι, μεταφορικῶς τε ὦν, καὶ τοῖς ἄλλοις τοῖς περὶ ποιητικὴν ἐπιτευχμασι χρωμένῳ. Diog. Laert. lib. viii. 57.

“ him an Εποποιῆς, an Ιαμβοποιῆς, &c. Is he, “ therefore, not to be called a Poet at all, be“ cause you cannot call him the Poet, or Maker, “ of this or that particular metre?”—But the answer to this would surely be obvious: “ We “ cannot, it is true, call him any one of these, “ exclusively; we call him all these; he is the “ Poet of every metre, in which he composes;
 “ and, in our ideas, the more a Poet, in propor“ tion to the number of the different measures, “ of which he shews himself a master.”—I must also remark, that, in this way of understanding the passage, the word, ὁμοίως, is not accounted for, nor fairly rendered, I think, either in the version of Heinsius, or in any of those that follow him.

• I have, also, rejected the reading of Victorius —ὅτ ποιοῖτο τὴν μίμησιν; because it appears to me, that the phrase will not admit of the sense, in which it is rendered, of not imitating at all.—
 It is observed by Victorius himself, that the phrase, ποιεῖσθαι τὴν μίμησιν, is never used by Aristotle as equivalent to μιμεῖσθαι only, but always where he is speaking of the means, or manner, by, or in, which, the imitation is made. Thus, ch. i.—ΠΟΙΟΥΝΤΑΙ τὴν μίμησιν ΕΝ
ΡΥΘΜῳ καὶ ΛΟΓῳ καὶ ΑΡΜΟΝΙΑΙ.—Again—
ΔΙΑ ΤΡΙΜΕΤΡΩΝ κ. τ. αλ. ΠΟΙΟΙΤΟ τὴν μίμησιν.
 And, at the end, ΕΝ ὍΙΣ ΠΟΙΟΥΝΤΑΙ τὴν μίμησιν—“ the different means, by which they form

form or execute their imitation.”—Thus, too, ch. xxiv.—εἰ γὰρ τις ἐν ἀλλῳ τινὶ μέτρῳ διηγηματικὴν μίμησιν ποιοίτο.—ch. vi. ἐν τοῦτοῖς [sc. μιλοποῖα καὶ λέξει] ποιοῦνται τὴν μίμησιν. So ibid. with a participle—πράττοντες ποιοῦνται τὴν μίμησιν—as in the passage before us, ἅπαντα τὰ μέτρα μίγνυν ποιοίτο τὴν μίμησιν.—The construction and the sense are the same, when the same mode of expression is applied to other subjects; as, cap. iv. —τὰς μαθησεὶς ποιεῖται διὰ μίμησης—And, Rhet. lib. i. cap. i. sect. 3. διὰ τῶν κοινῶν ποιεῖσθαι τὰς πρὶς καὶ τὰς λογὰς—i. e. “to argue through the medium of common and popular truths.”—I do not know of any instance, in which ποιεῖσθαι τὴν μίμησιν is used in any other way, or put simply for μιμῆσθαι. I cannot, for example, conceive, that Aristotle, instead of, το τε γὰρ μίμῆσθαι συμφυτοῖς τοῖς ἀνθρώποις, (cap. iv.) would have written—το τε γὰρ ποιεῖσθαι μίμῆσιν συμφυτον, &c. It appears to me, that, whether the phrase be used positively, or negatively, some imitation is equally implied; and this sentence—εἰ τις ἅπαντα τὰ μέτρα μίγνυν οὐ ποιοίτο τὴν μίμησιν—I should by no means think it accurate to translate—“If any one, mixing all sorts of metre, should not imitate;—but, (to construe literally for the sake of clearness,) “if any one should not make THE, (or, which is the same thing, HIS) imitation

“ imitation by mixing all sorts of metre.” This, I confess, appears clearly to me to be the fair English of that Greek; but, as this certainly cannot be the meaning of Aristotle here, I must abandon the reading which gives it, and content myself with following that explanation, which is encumbered with the fewest difficulties*. The sense, in this way, does not materially differ from that, which is given to the passage by those who adopt the reading of Victorius. The word, ὁμοίως, has thus its proper force. So has, ἔκ ΗΔΗ, ΚΑΙ ποιητὴν προσαγορευτεον. As if Aristotle had said—“ Such a writer we might, certainly, on the first glance, call, a versifier—a metre-maker—“ ἐποποιον, ἐλεγείοποιον, &c. but we should not “ immediately (ΗΔΗ), merely on account of the “ variety of his versification, allow him also “ the title of Poet—ΚΑΙ ποιητὴν προσαγορευτεον.”

I must, however, be again permitted to declare my doubt, as to the integrity of the text.—I have here given, as I have been obliged to do in many other places, that sense, which appears to me the best that can be given to the original as it stands; not that, upon which I can with any confidence rely, as the clear meaning of the author.

* According to the version of Goulston—“ Similiter “ verò etiam si quis omnia metrorum genera uno in “ opere permiscens, imitationem instituerit, (quemad- “ modum Chæremon, &c.) non statim Poetæ titulo, “ ob carmen, sed ob imitationem, insigniendus.” See also Castelvetro, p. 25, 26.

NOTE 11.

P. 104. AS CHÆREMON HAS DONE IN HIS CENTAUR.

From some curious fragments of this Poet preserved, or, rather, half-preserved, in Athenæus, his genius appears to, have been of a gay and voluptuous cast, and to have delighted in minute description of pleasurable objects. In the lines quoted by Athenæus from his Tragedy of Æneus, which are a description of a group of beautiful virgins sporting by moon-light, there is certainly some fancy, and some elegance; but, of that kind, the effect of which is, perhaps, somewhat counteracted by too much appearance of affectation and research. And this corresponds with the character given of this Poet by Aristotle, in his Rhetoric [lib. iii. cap. xii.] that he was, ἀκριβὲς ὥσπερ λογογράφος; and of that class of Poets, whom he calls ἀναγνωστικοί; that is, whose productions, as we commonly express it, read better than they act; are more adapted to the closet, than to the stage. The antient Poets, both Greek and Roman, were often, I believe, indebted, for their descriptive ideas, to Painting, or Sculpture. This passage of Chæremon is certainly very picturesque, and was, probably, suggested by some painting on the same subject.

Athenæus

Athenæus says of this Poet, that he was particularly fond of dwelling upon the description of flowers—ἐπικαταφορῶς ἐπὶ τα ἀνθῆ*; and cites some lines of that kind from his Tragedies.

In his CENTAUR, which Athenæus calls δράμα πολυμετρὸν, we must understand, that even the dialogue was in various metres; for in the choral parts this would have been no innovation.

NOTE 12.

P. 105. POLYGNOTUS—PAUSON—DIONYSIUS.

Polygnotus and Pauson are also mentioned by Aristotle in his 8th book De Rep. cap. v. where, speaking of Painting with a view to education, he says, that “young men should “ not be permitted to contemplate the works of “ PAUSON, but those only of POLYGNOTUS, and “ of other artists who excelled in moral expres- “ sion.” It seems probable, from this passage, that the pictures of Pauson were not only of a ludicrous, but also of a licentious cast. To what a degree the abuse of this art was carried in Aristotle’s time, appears from another passage, [Rep.

* Athen. lib. xiii. p. 608.

* — Δε μὴ τα ΠΑΥΣΩΝΟΣ θεωρεῖν τις νεύς, ἀλλὰ τα ΠΟΛΥΓΝΩΤΟΥ, καὶ ἀν εἰ τις ἄλλος τῶν γραφῶν ἢ τῶν ἀγαματοποιῶν ἐστὶν ἥδιος.—De Rep. viii. 5.

[Rep. lib. vii. cap. xvii.] in which he says, the magistrate should suffer no “licentious and indecent paintings or statues,” such as would endanger the morals of youth: but the exception that follows is curious;—“Unless,” he adds, “in the temples of some DEITIES OF THAT CHARACTER, whose legal and established worship consists in ludicrous and wanton rites^b.”

While I am upon this subject, I cannot forbear adding a singular passage of Euripides, where Hippolytus, vindicating himself, and asserting his chastity, says, with a naïveté that, I fear, would hardly be received with decent gravity by a modern audience;—

Λεχες γαρ, εἰς τοδ' ἡμερας, ἄγνον δεμας.
 Ουκ οἶδα ΠΡΑΞΙΝ ΤΗΝΔΕ, πλην λογῶ κλυων,
 ΓΡΑΦΗΙ ΤΕ ΛΕΥΣΣΩΝ· ἔδε ταυτα γαρ σκοπεω Προθυμῶ εἰμι, ΠΑΡΘΕΝΟΝ ΨΥΧΗΝ ἔχων.

Hippol. v. 1003.

I am a stranger to the couch of love;
 Nor know I of its rites more than the tale
 May have informed me, or the Painter's pencil
Presented to mine eye; yet on such picture Dwells not mine eye delighted, for my mind
 Is as a virgin's pure. - - -

[Mr. Potter's Translation, v. 1060.]

The

^b — μὴτε ἀγαλμα μὴτε γράφην εἶναι ΤΟΙΟΥΤΩΝ ΠΡΑΞΕΩΝ ΜΙΜΗΣΙΝ· εἰ μὴ παρὰ τισὶ ΘΕΟΙΣ ΤΟΙΟΥΤΟΙΣ, οἷς καὶ τὸν τῶθασμον ἀποδίδωσιν ὁ νομῶ.—

The Pauson mentioned by Aristotle was probably the same painter, whose poverty only is recorded by Suidas^c, and of whose wit we have a curious specimen in Ælian^d.

Of DIONYSIUS, too, very little is known. That he excelled in natural representation and exact resemblance—in exhibiting men, such as he saw them, without ideal grace on the one hand, or exaggerated deformity on the other—is known, I believe, only from this passage of Aristotle. Dacier says this account is confirmed by Ælian; but I think he is mistaken. It appears to me, that the μεγεθος of which Ælian speaks, as the only difference between the paintings of Polygnotus and those of Dionysius, is literal, not figurative, magnitude. He says only, that the pictures of Dionysius, “except, that they were “on a small scale, were exact imitations of “Polygnotus, in the expression of passions and “manners, the attitudes of the figures, the “lightness and transparency of the draperies, “and every other circumstance.” It is not easy

^c Πάυσωνος πτωχότερος, was proverbial. Suidas. And see Aristoph. Plut. 602. Thesmoph. 958. Acharn. 854.

^d Lib. xiv. cap. xv.—And see Dacier’s note on the passage of Aristotle.

^e ὁ μὲν Πολυγνώτης ἔγραφε τὰ μεγάλα, καὶ ἐν τοῖς ΤΕΛΕ-ΙΟΙΣ εἰργαζέτο τὰ ἄλλα· τὰ δὲ τῆς Διονυσίου, ΠΑΛΗΝ ΤΟΤ ΜΕΓΕΘΟΥΣ, τὴν τῆς Πολυγνώτης τέχνην ἐμμεῖτο εἰς τὴν
VOL. I. S ἀκριβείαν,

easy to see how Dionysius could copy so exactly, εἰς ἀκριβείαν, the expression, and the forms, or attitudes, of Polygnotus, without copying, at the same time, his greatness of manner, and his improvement of that nature which he imitated; for these seem entirely to depend upon those two circumstances, the expression of the countenance, and the airs and attitudes of the figures^f.

It seems, therefore, doubtful, whether Aristotle and Ælian speak of the same person. There must, in all probability, have been more painters than one, of that name; which was so common, that the writers so called, alone, furnished Meursius with matter for a whole book.—The pictures ἀκριβείαν, καθ' ὅ, καὶ ἡθ' ὅ, καὶ σχημάτων χρῆσιν, ἱματίων λεπτότητας, καὶ τὰ λοιπά.—Ælian. iv. 3. If the sense of the whole passage left room for doubt as to the sense of the word μεγέθ' ὅ, it would, I think, be sufficiently fixed by what follows—in ΤΕΛΕΙΟΙΣ. i. e. justâ staturâ, as rightly rendered by Perizonius; in large figures,—as large as life, &c. Dacier's "visoit à la perfection," is nothing to the purpose.

^f "The painter has no other means of giving an idea of the dignity of the mind, but by that external appearance which grandeur of thought does generally, though not always, impress on the countenance; and by that correspondence of figure to sentiment and situation, which all men wish, but cannot command."
—Sir Jos. Reynolds's Disc. on Painting, p. 111.

pictures of Dionysius the Colophonian are mentioned by Plutarch^a as being painted with considerable strength of pencil, [—ισχυρὸν ἔχοντα καὶ τρυφόν,] but in a manner which appeared forced and laboured, [ἐκβεβιασμένον,] and which he opposes to the freedom and facility of Nicomachus, who seems to have been the Fà Presto of the antient painters^b. This fault, so likely to be that of the artist who aims at an exact and scrupulous resemblance of the nature that is before his eyes, may, perhaps, afford some presumption, that Plutarch and Aristotle speak of the same painter.

What Aristotle says of these three styles of picturesque imitation, is easily applied to modern times. The productions, indeed, of these antient artists, were perishable and of short duration;—“At genus immortale manet:” these specific characters have subsisted, and probably will subsist, in every period of the art. For the name of Polygnotus, it is obvious enough to substitute that of RAPHAEL, or other masters of the higher Italian schools. “When a man,” says Mr. Richardson, with that simplicity of enthusiasm, which gives so amusing a singularity to his writings,

^a Life of Timoleon—vol. i. p. 461. Hen. Steph.

^b Luca Giordano was called, Luca Fà Presto. Pliny says of Nicomachus—“Nec fuit alius in eâ arte velocior.”—Lib. xxxv. cap. x.

writings¹—"When a man enters into that awful
 " gallery at Hampton-court^{*}, he finds himself
 " amongst a sort of people superior to what he " has ever seen, and very probably to what those " *really were*¹." This is exactly the βελτιονας η καθ' ημας of Aristotle. "Michael Angelo," says the same author, "no where saw such living " figures as he cut in marble."—The Flemish and Dutch schools will supply plenty of substitutes for the Dionysii of antient painting—those, who, like Protogenes, "in picturâ verum esse,
 " non verisimile, volunt^m." Rembrandt must occur to every body. Even Rubens "took his " figures too much from the people before him."
 [Sir Jos. Reynolds's Disc. p. 133.]

As for the Pausons, the buffoons of the art, they are to be seen in the windows of every print-shop. We must not, however, confound with these "Tom Browns of the mob," as Mr.
 Walpole

¹ See Mr. Walpole's just apology for the singularities of Richardson's style, and just censure of those, who saw nothing, in that sensible and original writer, but an object of derision.—Anecdotes of Painting.

^{*} Where the Cartoons then were.

¹ Theory of Painting, p. 96. Ed. 1773.

^m Plin. lib. xxxv. cap. x. See his account of the laboriousness of that painter.—See also Ælian. Var.
Hist. lib. xii. cap. xli. and Plut. in Demet. p. 1646
Ed. H. S.

Walpole calls themⁿ, the moral humour of Hogarth, or the sportive, but harmless, exaggerations of Mr. Bunbury. Hogarth, indeed, in general, and in his greatest works, seems rather to belong to the highest class of the exact imitators of vulgar nature—των ΦΑΤΛΩΝ. His Country-dance, however, may be mentioned as an example, and an admirable one, of exaggerated comic imitation, in which men are made, in some degree at least, “worse than they are”—ΧΕΙΡΟΥΣ εἰκαζει.—And if any man can look at this print, or at the Family-piece, the Coffee-house Patriots, or the Long Story, of Mr. Bunbury, without feeling a high degree of that pleasure which arises from the perception of strong humour, he must, I think, be still more unprovided with a sense of the ridiculous, than even that Crassus, who is recorded to have laughed once, though once only, in his life^o.

NOTE 13.

P. 105. WITH THE MUSIC OF THE FLUTE
AND OF THE LYRE. - - -

Thus PLATO, in the very language of Aristotle, —τα περὶ τῆς ῥυθμῆς καὶ πᾶσαν μουσικὴν ἐν τρεσὶν
μυμηματα BEATIONΩΝ καὶ ΧΕΙΡΟΝΩΝ ΑΝΘΡΩ-ΠΩΝ. [De Leg. vii. p. 798. D.] A modern reader,

ⁿ Anec. of Painting, vol. iv. p. 149.

^o Cic. de Fin. v. 30.

reader, that is, a person who reads an antient author with modern ideas, might be inclined to ask, how men are to be represented as better, or worse, than they are, or how, indeed, represented at all, in a harpsichord lesson, or a solo for a German flute? But the same reader, supposing him in any degree conversant with music, would surely be at no loss to conceive, that it admits of the difference of serious and comic expression; and admits of it in various degrees, from the highest elevation and dignity of style, down to the coarse and vulgar jollity of the gavot, or the hornpipe. Now the meaning of Aristotle, put into modern musical language, amounts, I apprehend, to no more than that. Suppose, then, the music, in these different styles, to be accompanied by words, relating the actions, or imitating the speech, of low, or elevated characters; we might say, that the music was expressive of such actions, or characters; the antients would have said, that it imitated them. On the contrary, suppose this music merely instrumental, we should, in general, only say, that it was grand, and sublime, or comic, mean, vulgar, &c. But the antients, from the close, and almost inseparable connection of their Music with Poetry, and particularly with the most imitative sort of Poetry, the Dramatic^r; and partly, also, from the nature
of

^r Diss. II. p. 75, &c.

of their Music itself^a, would, in this case likewise, have retained much the same language, and would have considered this Music as imitative of the manners and passions of exalted, or vulgar characters, or even as representing those characters themselves.—But the different ideas, or rather, the different language, of the antients and the moderns on this subject, I have considered more fully, and endeavoured to account for, in the Second Dissertation.

NOTE 14.

P. 105. CLEOPHON, AS THEY ARE.—

It may be worth while to remark, that the character Aristotle gives of the diction of Cleophon^a—that it was of the common and familiar kind, without Poetic elevation—corresponds with the account here given of the general object of his Poetry, the exact delineation of common nature and common life. He who means to represent men as they are, will also, of course, represent their language nearly as it is.

The only Poet of this name, of whom, I believe, any account is given, is recorded as a Tragic Poet^b: but Aristotle undoubtedly alludes here

^a Diss. II. p. 76.

^a Part II. Sect. 26. Of the Orig. cap. xxii.

^b Suidas v. CLEOPHON. He gives the names of some of his Tragedies.

here to a Poem of the narrative kind. In another part of his works he mentions a Poem of Cleophon, called MANDRABULUS^c. From the proverbial expression—ἐπὶ Μανδραβελῆ χωρεῖ τὸ πρᾶγμα (“worse and worse, like the affairs of Mandrabulus”—) in Lucian^d, and the account of its origin in Suidas, and Hesychius^e, it seems very improbable that the Poem was a Tragedy. We may rather conclude it to have been of a comic cast; and it seems no unreasonable conjecture, to suppose, that it might be of the narrative kind; modelled, perhaps, in some respects, upon the MARGITES of Homer. At least, the two heroes seem to have been of kindred characters.

NOTE 15.

P. 105. HEGEMON - - - - INVENTOR OF PARODIES.

See Athenæus, p. 698, 699, and 406, 407. And Fabric. Biblioth. Gr. lib. ii. cap. vii. — The Athenians were delighted with this sort of fun—of all expedients to raise a laugh, the cheapest, and, at the same time, the most infallible. HOMER was the great and inexhaustible resource
of

^c De Soph. Elench. cap. xv, where we should, I suppose, for Μανδροβελῆ, read, Μανδραβελῆ.

^d De Mercede conduct. 478. Ed. Benedict.

^e v. Επὶ τῇ Μανδραβελῇ.

of these Parodists. The best and most considerable specimen remaining, of this kind of Poem, seems to be the Homeric description of an Attic supper by Matron, a great Parodist, and a great eater, in Athenæus, lib. iv. cap. v. Isaac Casaubon calls it, "Carmen ingeniosum, et leporis ac venustatis plenissimum."—The first three lines may serve as a specimen:—

Δειπνα μοι ἔννεπε, Μῆσα, πολυτροφα καὶ μάλα πολλὰ^a,

Ἄ Ξενοκλῆς ῥήτωρ ἐν Ἀθηναῖς δειπνίσειν ἡμᾶς,
Ἦλθον γὰρ κ' ἀκείσει, πολὺς δὲ μοι ἔσπετο λιμῶ^b.

The Poem, it must be confessed, has some pleasantry, and much dexterity of comical perversion. We cannot wonder at its effect upon a people, who had all Homer in their memories. It is easy to conceive the roar of the Athenian upper gallery, when, in the description of the cook, bringing in the supper, they heard this line:

Τῷ δ' ἀρὰ τεσσαρεκοντα μέλαιναί χυτπαί ἔποντο^c.

Sometimes the Parody depended on a pun; of which Athenæus gives, with great complacence, a curious

^a Ἀνδρα μοι ἔννεπε, Μῆσα, πολυτροπόν, ὃς μάλα πολλὰ Hom. Od. init.

^b Ἦλθον γὰρ κ' ἀκείσει, πολὺς δὲ μοι ἔσπετο γὰ^c. Hom.

^c Τῷ δ' ἀρὰ τεσσαρεκοντα μέλαιναί νηες ἔποντο.
Hom. in Catal. passim.

a curious example, in a scrap from a Parody of Eubæus, describing a quarrel between a barber and a potter. The barber, whose wife, it seems, the other attempts to force from him, addresses the potter in the language of Nestor^d :—

Μῆτε σὺ τοῦδ', ἀγαθὸν περ ἱών, ἀποαιρεῖο
ΚΟΤΡΗΝ,

Μῆτε σὺ, ΠΗΛΕΪΔΗ. - - -

—where the joke depends on the allusion to ΠΗΛΟΣ, mud, or clay; and, probably, to the trade of the speaker, in the word κοτρην; or, perhaps, to the instrument of his art, which we may suppose the actor of the Parody to have brandished at his adversary.—But I do not mean to take to myself the honour of this illustration of an Attic joke. It is to be found in the Poetica of J. C. Scaliger.—See Athen. p. 699. B.

NOTE 16.

P. 106. THE DELIAD. - - -

The conjecture of Castelvetro, τὴν ΔΕΙΛΙΑΔΑ, (which might be rendered, The Poltroniad,) was certainly ingenious, but, I think, unnecessary. Dacier's account is probably right; and both his idea, and the common reading, seem to receive some support from the similar national titles that are preserved of other pieces of this Poet; such as,

^d See Il. I. 275, &c.

as, Κρητες, Λακωνες, Αθηναιοι. — See Suidas and Fabricius.

NOTE 17.

P. 106. SO, AGAIN, WITH RESPECT TO DITHYRAMBICS AND NOMES.

The expression, in this passage, is too general, and too little is known of the examples mentioned in it, to admit of perfect satisfaction, with respect to any thing farther than its general meaning; i. e. that both Dithyrambic and Nomic Poetry admitted the same differences in the objects of their imitation. For so, I think, the sense requires us to understand; not, that the imitation of heroic characters was appropriated to the one, and that of light characters to the other. Both these species of Poetry were hymns; and though the Dithyrambic, or hymn to Bacchus, might, indeed, from its wild and free character, be privileged with a greater latitude and variety of imitation, yet I know of no authority that will warrant our going so far, as to suppose, that they were essentially distinguished from each other in this respect, like Tragedy and Comedy*.

The construction of the Greek I understand to be this:—μιμνησταιτο ἂν τις, ὡς Τιμοθεος και Φιλοξενος [sc. ἐμιμνησαντο] Περσας και Κυκλωπας.

I am

* Yet so the last Ox. editor seems to understand:—
 “Hoc differre Nomos à Dithyrambis, quod illis personas graves, his leves imitarentur.” p. 273.

I am astonished, that any commentators should have taken either of the compositions here mentioned for dramas; an idea totally repugnant to the plain sense of the whole passage, and to the evident purpose for which these examples are cited. With respect to the Περσαι, the passage of Pausanias may be regarded as decisive;—Πυλαδε — ἄδοντες Τιμοθεε ΝΟΜΟΝ, τε Μιλησια, ΠΕΡΣΑΣ^b.

The Poem of Philoxenus here meant must, clearly, have been either a Nome, or a Dithyrambic Poem; most probably, the latter. Philoxenus is recorded as a Dithyrambic Poet; and Aristotle's illustration will be more complete, if we understand him to exemplify in each of the kinds of Poetry in question. It is by no means certain, that the Cyclops of Philoxenus mentioned by Athenæus, Ælian, and others, is the piece here alluded to: and, if it were, which, undoubtedly, appears rather probable, I know of no sufficient proof that it was a Drama, as it has been repeatedly called. If Ælian is to be regarded, it certainly was not; for he calls it μελος—a term appropriated to Lyric Poetry.—τον ΚΥΚΛΩΠΑ ἐργασατο, των ἑαυτε ΜΕΛΩΝ το καλλιφων^c.

I men-

^b Paus. Arcad.—And the Poem began with an hexameter verse which is there quoted. Yet Fabricius calls it a Tragedy.

^c Æl. Var. Hist. lib. xii. cap. 44.

I mentioned, in the conclusion of NOTE 1. a problem of Aristotle, from which it appears, that the Dithyrambic Poetry was not originally imitative, but became so by degrees. It is the 15th of the Harmonic Problems, Sect. 19. It is there said, that the Dithyrambics, after they became imitative, laid aside the antistrophical form, (i. e. the division into corresponding stanzas^d), in which, before, they had been composed^e. And the reason assigned for this is, that, originally, these Dithyrambic hymns were performed by chorusses of gentlemen, [ἐλευθεροί] who could not sing in the style of artists, and professors: [ἀγωνιστικῶς ᾄδειν:] the words were, therefore, set to the simplest kind of melody, such as that, in which the same air is repeated to similar stanzas, as in our ballads^f. But afterwards, it seems, the performance

^d Ἀντιστροφῶν—ΙΣΗ, ὍΜΟΙΑ. Hesych.

^e —ἐπειδὴ μίμητικοί ἐγένοντο, ἔκτετι ἔχουσιν ἀντιστροφῶς, πρότερον δὲ εἶχον.

^f Διὸ ἀπλᾶτερα ἐποίησαν αὐτοῖς τὰ μελῆ ἢ δὲ ἀντιστροφῶν ἀπλᾶν ἀριθμῶν γὰρ ἐστὶ καὶ ἐν μετρείται: i. e. (if I understand it rightly,) it consists of a number of parts that have one common measure.

That, in the Strophe and Antistrophe of the Greek Ode, the same musical strain was repeated, is clear from Dionys. Hal. de Struct. Orat. § 19. τοῖς δὲ τὰ μελῆ γραφῶσι, κ. τ. αλ. And also from what Aristotle, in this Prob. says of the Nomes, which were not antistrophical, and the melodies of which, as well as the words τῇ μίμησει ἠκολούθει ΑΕΙ ΕΤΕΡΑ γινόμενα.

ance of these hymns, like that of the Nomes, was left to professed musicians, the ἀγωναῖς, or masters of the art, who contended with each other in trials of skill, and who were, of course, to exert all their imitative powers. The symmetry of strophe and antistrophe, and the simplicity of air regularly repeated, were ill adapted to this purpose, which required length, variety, and frequent changes^a of metre, melody, rhythm, mode, genus, &c. in conformity to the various subjects of imitation, and transitions of expression^b.—This account, which affords some little glimpse of curious information, with respect both to the Nomic and Dithyrambic hymn, is confirmed, as far as the latter is concerned, by Dionysius Halicarn. De Structurâ Orat. Sect. 19. He there traces the progress of all this Lyric corruption, and names TIMOTHEUS and PHILOXENUS as the principal authors of these licentious and wicked innovations—"for, in the time of the old Poets," he says, "the

^a See Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 61; &c.

^b —ἀγωνιστῶν—ὧν ἡδὴ μιμῆσθαι δυνάμενον καὶ διατηνεσθαι, ἢ ὧδῃ ἐγίνετο μακρὰ καὶ παρυειδής. καθάπερ ἐν ταῖς PHMATĀ, καὶ ταῖς MEΛĒ τῇ μιμησὶ ἠκολούθει, αἱ ἕτερα γινόμενα.—He adds, πολλοὺν γὰρ τῶν μελῶν ἀνάγκη μιμῆσθαι ἢ τοῖς ῥήμασι—By which, I suppose, he means, that in this union of poetical and musical imitation in the Nomes, the musical imitation was considered as the principal and most essential object.

“ the Dithyrambic ode was an orderly and regular composition¹.”

Plutarch, too, in the Dialogue Περὶ Μουσικῆς, speaks exactly the same language. Timotheus and Philoxenus are there repeatedly stigmatized as corrupters of the good old music; and the Πινδαρεὺς and Σιμωνιδεὺς τροπῶς, is opposed to the Φιλοξενεὺς^k, with a zeal similar to that, with which, in modern music, we sometimes hear the style of Corelli and Geminiani opposed and preferred to the heterodox novelties of Haydn and Boccherini.

The manner, in which Aristotle, in this problem, speaks of the Nomes, when compared with his expressions relative to the Dithyrambics, rather leads one to suppose, that the former were not, even originally, composed in the antistrophic form^l: the least, however, that can be inferred from it, is, that they discarded that form, and, consequently, became complicated, artificial, and imitative, long before a similar revolution took place in the Dithyrambic Poetry and Music.— I may, also, observe that the variety of imitation,

and

¹ — παρα γὰρ τοῖς ἀρχαίοις ΤΕΤΑΓΜΕΝΟΣ ἦν ὁ ΔΙΘΥΡΑΜΒΟΣ. What he means by τεταγμῶς is sufficiently explained in the first paragraph of the same section.

^k Plut. Ed. H. Steph. p. 2092, and 2084.

^l Διὰ τὴν οἱ μὲν Νόμοι ἐκ ἐν ἀντιστροφῶν ΕΠΟΙΟΥΝΤΟ;— and, οἱ Νόμοι ἀγωνιστῶν ἦσαν.

and changes of expression, clearly attributed by Aristotle to the Nomes, seem to confirm what I said above—that they did not exclude the same variety, in the objects of their imitation, which the Dithyrambic Poem confessedly admitted.

I will just add, that this problem of Aristotle throws light upon a passage in his Rhetoric, which has embarrassed his commentators. He there [lib. iii. cap. 9.] compares the diction that is divided into periods, to the Antistrophic Odes “of the old Poets :” but, the λεῖξις εἰρομένη, in which the sentence has no other unity than that which copulatives give it^m, nor any other measure than the completion of the sense, and the necessity of taking breathⁿ, or, as Cicero, in few words, so admirably describes it, “illa sine intervallis loquacitas perennis et profluens”^o—this Aristotle compares to what he calls the ἀναβολαὶ in Dithyrambic Poetry; meaning, I think, evidently, the long, irregular, protracted Odes of the more modern Dithyrambic Poets; such as those, of which he speaks in the Problem. For the word, ἀναβολή, here, does not, I believe, signify exordium, proœmium,

^m — τῷ συνδέσμῳ μιαν.

ⁿ ἢ ἔδεν ἔχει τελευτὴν καὶ αὐτὴν, ἂν μὴ τὸ πρᾶγμα λεγόμενον τελειωθῇ. The periodic diction, as opposed to this, he calls εὐαναπνευστική. [§ 3.]—Ille rudis, inconditè fundit quantum potest, et id quod dicit SPIRITU, non ARTE, determinat.—Cic. de Or. iii. 44.

^o De Or. iii. 48.

proœmium, as usually understood, but was, probably, the name by which these ὠδαί μακραι καὶ πολυεῖδεις^p were distinguished, and opposed to the old and simple Dithyrambic in stanzas.

NOTE 18.

P. 106. EITHER IN NARRATION, - - - AND THAT, AGAIN, EITHER, &c.

It may safely be pronounced, that the original here, either is not as Aristotle left it, or, was carelessly and ambiguously written. As the ambiguity, however, does not affect the general sense of the passage, it is scarcely worth while to engage in a minute discussion of the comparative merits of the two different constructions, which have been adopted by different commentators and translators. The learned reader knows, or may see, what has been said on both sides. I have preferred that construction, which has always appeared to me to result most obviously and naturally from the words of the original.—ἐν τοῖς αὐτοῖς, καὶ τὰ αὐτὰ μιμεῖσθαι ἴσιν, ὅτε μὲν ΑΠΑΓΓΕΛΛΟΝΤΑ (ἢ ἕτερον τι γιγνομενον, ὥσπερ Ὅμηρος^q ποιεῖ, ἢ ὡς τὸν αὐτὸν, καὶ μὴ μεταβαλλοντα,) ἢ πάντας ὡς ΠΑΤΤΟΝΤΑΣ καὶ ἐνεργοντας τὰς μιμνήμενους.—

In the other, and most usual way of taking this passage, the mixture of mere narration, and dramatic

^p See note ^h.

dramatic imitation, in the Epic species, is expressed by the words, ὅτε μὲν ἀπαγγέλλοντα, ἢ ἑτέρον τι γιγνομενον. But it seems not likely, that Aristotle would thus oppose the word ἀπαγγέλλοντα, to ἑτέρον τι γιγνομενον; because the term, ἀπαγγελία, is constantly applied by him, throughout the treatise, to the narrative species in general: it is opposed, not to the dramatic part of the Epic, but to the drama itself. Απαγγελία and διηγησις, are used by him as synonymous terms, and are both applied to the whole of the Homeric, or dramatic, Epic Poem*.

On the other hand, the words—ἢ ΕΤΕΡΟΝ ΤΙ γιγνομενον—seem evidently opposed to—ἢ ὡς ΤΟΝ ΑΥΤΟΝ καὶ μὴ μετὰβαλλοντα, and should, therefore, be joined with them, not with ἀπαγγέλλοντα.—Lastly, in this way of understanding the passage, Aristotle divides the different manners of imitation, as he might naturally be expected to divide them, into those which characterize the two great and principal species, of which he means to treat—the NARRATIVE and the DRAMATIC. The two different modes of the former, i. e. the pure narrative, and the dramatic narrative, are, with more propriety than in the other construction, (in his view of the subject, at least,) flung into a subdivision.

In

* See ch. v.—τῷ δὲ ----- ΑΠΑΓΓΕΛΙΑΝ εἶναι—speaking of the Epic Poem.—And cap. vi. in the definition of Tragedy — καὶ ἡ δὲ ΑΠΑΓΓΕΛΙΑΣ. So, ch. xxiii. and xxiv. passim.

In either construction, however, Aristotle agrees with Plato in enumerating three kinds of Poetry, the purely dramatic, the purely narrative, and the mixed^b. But the generality of the commentators seem, too hastily, to have taken it for granted, that Aristotle must therefore necessarily enumerate them in the same manner; and they have, accordingly, moulded the flexible and ambiguous construction of this passage, exactly upon the division of Plato^c.

I was glad to find myself supported here by the judgment of the accurate Piccolomini, whose version coincides with mine.—In UN MODO, per via di narratione,—e questo, ò ponendo se stesso alle volte il Poeta in persona d'altri, come fà Homero, over conservando sempre la propria persona non mutata mai. Nel ALTRO MODO poi, introducendo persone à trattare et negoziare, come se le stesse persone che sono imitate, fussero.

With respect to the imitation here expressly allowed by Aristotle to subsist even in mere narration, without the intermixture of any thing dramatic, see Diss. I. p. 37, &c.

^d Plato, Rep. lib. iii. p. 392, D. to 394, D. Ed. Serrani. But, for the difference of Plato's doctrine, or rather of his language, from that of Aristotle, see Diss. I. p. 60.

^e See, particularly, Is. Casaubon, De Sat. Poes. cap. iii. init. I agree perfectly with Mr. Winstanley, that his emendations are not necessary. [But see REMARK 7. vol. ii. p. 461.]

NOTE 19.

P. 106. ELEVATED CHARACTERS—

Gr. ΣΠΟΥΔΑΙΟΥΣ.

The adjective Σπυδαίους, and its opposite, Φαυλούς, are words of considerable latitude. They, each of them, comprehend a number of different, though related, ideas, for which we have not, that I know of, any common word. Propriety itself, therefore, requires of a translator that, which, at first view, seems contrary to propriety—that he should render each of those words differently in different places. To have translated σπυδαίους here, “good,” or “virtuous,” as it may generally be translated, would only have been giving an English word with a Greek idea, which none but readers of Greek would have affixed to it.

The Greeks appear to have applied the word, ΣΠΟΥΔΑΙΟΝ, to whatever was, on any account, αξιοσπυδαίος—whatever was respectable, important, admirable, serious, valuable, &c. as opposed to ΦΑΥΛΟΝ, which was applied, not to vice only, but to whatever was contemptible, trifling, light, ordinary,*

* Demosthenes has this expression :—ἐς μετρίαις καὶ ΦΑΥΛΑΣ λαβὼν πληγὰς—Orat. κατὰ Κορινθίους.—So, bad, is sometimes used in familiar English, for, trifling: “no bad blows.”

ordinary, ridiculous—or, as we say in familiar English, good for nothing. Hence the various senses of both these words in the Greek writers, according as they were applied to persons, and things, that were the objects of esteem, or contempt, on different accounts. Sometimes, therefore, σπουδαιⓈ may be rendered by “good”; sometimes by “serious, earnest,” &c.—Sometimes, as in this passage, and in the definition of Tragedy, by “elevated,” “important,” &c.^b

Suidas explains the word, not only by ΕναρετⓈ, but by ΣΟΦΟΣ, and ΕΥΔΟΚΙΜΟΣ. See also the article, ΦαυλⓈ. Hesychius gives, as synonymous to ΦαυλⓈ, not only the general word, ΚακⓈ, but, ΕΥΤΕΛΗΣ—ΑΠΛΟΥΣ—ΚΑΤΑΓΕΛΑΣΤΟΣ. And Phavorinus—φαυλον, το κακον, και το ευτελες, και το μικρον, και ΟΥΔΑΜΙΝΟΝ—Angl. “good for nothing.”

Some kind of virtue, in the extended sense given to the word ΑΡΕΤΗ by the antient writers on morals, was, indeed, always implied in the epithet ΣπουδαιⓈ; but it included such good qualities, and endowments, as we do not usually call virtues; or, at least, such as we never include in our idea of a virtuous man^c: as, wisdom,

^b Thus, Dacier—les gens plus considerables.—Piccolomini—persone grave:—attione grave e magnifica.—Heinsius—honestos. Goulston,—præstantes, &c.

^c See Hume's Principles of Morals, Sect. 6. Part I.—particularly p. 111, &c.—and the note, p. 104.

wisdom, courage, eloquence, &c.—Thus Aristotle himself;—το δὲ ΣΠΟΥΔΑΙΟΝ εἶναι, ἐστὶ το ΤΑΣ ΑΡΕΤΑΣ ἔχειν^d. And what are these virtues?—they are—“all laudable habits.”—των ἔξων τας ΕΠΑΙΝΕΤΑΣ, ΑΡΕΤΑΣ λεγόμεν^e.

The subject of Criticism is necessarily connected, in some degree, with that of Ethics; and unless we understand well the moral language of any writer, we cannot be competent judges of his criticism.

NOTE 20.

P. 107. IN SUPPORT OF THESE CLAIMS THEY ARGUE FROM THE WORDS THEMSELVES.

Ποιημένοι τα ὀνόματα σημειον.—The participle, ποιημένοι, should be applied, I think, to all the Dorians—not confined, as in Dacier's translation, to those of Peloponnesus. See Goulston's version, which appears to me to be right.

Aristotle begins by saying expressly, that the Dorians, in general, laid claim to both Tragedy and Comedy, on account of the term ΔΡΑΜΑ, which was a Doric word;—ΔΙΟ (i. e. from the term Δραματα, just before mentioned,) ἀντιποιεῖνται

της

^d Mag. Moral. i. 1.

^e Eth. Nicom.—End of Book I.—I may also refer the reader, on this subject, to Cic. de Or. lib. ii. cap. 84. “Virtus autem, quæ est per se ipsa laudabilis,” &c.

της τε Τραγωδίας καὶ της Κωμωδίας ΟΙ ΔΩΠΙΕΙΣ.—

He then mentions the peculiar claims of the Megarians to Comedy, and of the Dorians of Peloponnesus to Tragedy; throwing in, parenthetically, some other arguments on which the former also founded their title to the invention of Comedy: after which, he returns, at the word ποιημενοι, to shew, how these people concurred in arguing from the etymology of the words themselves; all of them, from the word δράμα, as it was common to Tragedy and Comedy, and they, who laid claim to Comedy, both from that, and also from the derivation of the word Κωμωδία.

The construction, in this way, is, I confess, somewhat parenthetical and embarrassed; but the reader, who is accustomed to the style of Aristotle, will not, I believe, consider this as affording alone any sufficient presumption against the explanation here given.

NOTE 21.

P. 108. THE FIGURES OF THE MEANEST AND MOST DISGUSTING ANIMALS. - - -

Θηρίων τε μορφῆς των ΑΤΙΜΟΤΑΤΩΝ.—This reading is strongly supported by the arguments of Victorius, the authority of MSS. and the sense and purport of the passage itself, which seems to require instances of mean, or disgusting, rather than of terrible, objects. Thus too Plutarch, in the passages referred to by Victorius, which undoubtedly allude to this of Aristotle.—Γεγραμμενην ΣΑΤΡΑΝ ἢ ΠΙΘΗΚΟΝ,—— ἰδόντες ἡδόμεθα καὶ θαυμάζομεν, οὐχ ὡς καλόν, ἀλλ' ὡς ὅμοιον· ἔστι γὰρ ἔδναται καλόν γενεσθαι ΤΟ Αἴσχρον— κ. τ. αλ.—And presently after—καὶ ΝΟΣΩΔΗ μὲν Ἀνθρώπων, καὶ ΤΠΟΤΑΟΝ, ὡς ἀτερπες θαυμά, φευγομεν· κ. τ. αλ.—See also his Sympos. Problems, lib. v. Prob. 1.

NOTE 22.

P. 108. TO LEARN IS A NATURAL PLEASURE - - -.

To the same purpose, in his Rhetoric, lib. i. cap. xi. p. 537. Ed. Duval. Ἐπει δὲ τὸ ΜΑΝΘΑΝΕΙΝ τε ἡδύ, καὶ τὸ θαυμάζειν, καὶ τὰ τοιαῦτα, ἀναγκη ἡδεῖα εἶναι, τὸ τε μεμιμημένον^a, ὥσπερ ΓΡΑΦΙΚΗ, καὶ ΑΝΔΡΙΑΝΤΟΠΟΙΙΑ, καὶ ΠΟΙΗΤΙΚΗ, καὶ παν ὁ ἂν εὖ μεμιμημένον ἢ, καὶ μὴ ἢ ἡδύ ἔτὸ μιμημα· ἔ γὰρ ἐπὶ τετῷ χαιρεῖ, ἀλλὰ συλλογισμῷ⁶ ἐστὶ, ὅτι ΤΟΥΤΟ ΕΚΕΙΝΟ· ὥστε ΜΑΝΘΑΝΕΙΝ τι συμβαίνει.—“And as it is by nature delightful “to LEARN, to ADMIRE, and the like, hence we “necessarily receive pleasure from imitative “arts,

^a I cannot but suspect this reading. It was perhaps, originally, τὸ τε ΜΙΜΟΥΜΕΝΟΝ: otherwise, μεμιμημένον must here be taken actively, which, though not unusual, is in this place, I think, improbable, because the same participle immediately follows, in the passive sense.

“ arts, as PAINTING, SCULPTURE, and POETRY,
 “ and from whatever is well imitated, even “ though the original may be disagreeable; for “ our pleasure does not arise from the beauty of “ the thing itself, but from the inference—the “ discovery, that “THIS IS THAT,” &c. so that “ we seem to LEARN something.” - - -

Mavdavev—to learn, to know, i. e. merely to recognize, discover, &c. See Harris, On Music, Painting, &c. ch. iv. note (b). The meaning is sufficiently explained by what follows. Dryden, who scarce ever mentions Aristotle without discovering that he had looked only at the wrong side of the tapestry^c, says—“Aristotle tells us, “ that imitation pleases because it affords matter “ for a reasoner to enquire into the truth or “ falsehood of imitation,” &c.^d But Aristotle is not

^c “Methinkes this translating,” says Don Quixote, “is just like looking upon the wrong side of arras hang- “ings; that although the pictures be scene, yet they are “full of thred-ends, that darken them, and they are not “scene with the plainnesse and smoothnesse as on the “other side.” Shelton's Don Quixote. Sec. part, ch. lxiii.

^d Parallel between Poetry and Painting, prefixed to his translation of Dufresnoy. Dryden seems to have taken his idea from Dacier's note on this place, which is extremely confused, and so expressed, as to leave it doubtful, whether he misunderstood the original, or only explained himself awkwardly.—The use that Dryden made of French critics and translators is well known.
 He

not here speaking of reasoners, or inquiry; but, on the contrary, of the vulgar, the generality of mankind, whom he expressly opposes to philosophers, or reasoners: and his συλλογίζεσθαι is no more than that rapid, habitual, and imperceptible act of the mind, that “raisonnement aussi prompt que le coup d’œil,” (as it is well paraphrased by M. Batteux,) by which we collect, or infer, from a comparison of the picture with the image of the original in our minds, that it was intended to represent that original.

The fullest illustration of this passage is to be found in another work of Aristotle, his Rhetoric, lib. iii. cap. x.^{*}, where he applies the same principle to metaphorical language, and resolves the pleasure we receive from such language, into that which arises from the μαθησις TAXEIA—the exercise of our understandings in discovering the meaning, by a quick and easy perception of some quality or qualities common to the thing expressed, and the thing intended—to a mirror, for example, and to the theatre, when the latter is called metaphorically, “The mirror of human life[†].”

In

He commends “Dacier’s late excellent translation of Aristotle,” in the Paral. between Poet. and Paint. just before the passage above quoted.

* Ed. Duval. In other Ed. differently divided, cap. vi.

† See Harris’s Philol. Inq. p. 190, and note*.

In the Problems, Sect. 19, Prob. V. the same principle is applied to Music. The Problem is, Why we are more pleased with singing when we are acquainted with the air that is sung, than when it is new to us?—And one of the answers is, ὅτι ἡδυ το μανθανειν—i. e. to say, this is such a tune, or song, &c. And indeed the pleasure afforded by recognition, is no where, perhaps, more visibly illustrated, than in the raptures and rhythmical agitation of a popular audience, at the return of the leading air, in that species of infallible ear-trap, the RONDEAU.—I must add, as somewhat amusing, that Plato makes use of this principle to prove a dog to be a philosophical animal: “ for, (he argues,) το φιλομαθες και “ φιλοσοφον, τ’ αυτον, the love of knowing, and the “ love of wisdom, are one and the same thing. “ Now dogs are delighted with knowing, simply, “ and disinterestedly; they fawn upon every “ one whom they know, and bark at the approach “ of every stranger^ε; and that, without having “ ever experienced good from the one, or harm “ from the other^h.”

The

^ε Every person, of whom, in Aristotle’s language, they cannot say—Ουτ’ ἐκειν’.—“ This is he.”

^h Ὅν μὲν ἂν ἰδῇ ΑΓΝΩΤΑ, χαλεπαινει, ἔδεν δὲ κακὸν προπεπονθώς· ὃν δ’ ἂν ΓΝΩΡΙΜΟΝ, ἑσπάζεται, καὶ ἂν μηδὲν πωποτε ὑπ’ αὐτῆ ἀγαθὸν πεπονθοί.—Ἀλλὰ μὴν κομψὸν γε φαίνεται το παθ’ αὐτῆ τῆς φύσεως, καὶ ὩΣ ΑΛΗΘΩΣ ΦΙΛΟΣΟΦΟΝ: κ. τ. αλ. Rep. ii. p. 376. Serran.

The philosophy of Aristotle here, though undoubtedly true, as far as it goes, will, I am afraid, to those who examine it, hardly appear to be perfectly satisfactory, or to reach the bottom of the subject. It is however to be considered, that what he has said, seems applicable chiefly to rude and unskilful spectators, and should, perhaps, be considered as a description of the effect of a picture or a statue upon children, and the multitude, who are little accustomed to view works of imitative art. And even with respect to them, the principle seems scarcely applicable but to portraits, and individual resemblances, such as may not be instantly recognized. When we look at a picture of that kind, we may not discover, till after a comparison of, at least, a few moments, that it is an imitation of this or that person; but, that it is an imitation of a man, we see at once; and where there is not even a momentary ignorance, or doubt, I do not see how any *information*¹ can be said to be acquired by the spectator, nor how, on the philosopher's own principles, (if I rightly understand him,) the pleasure conveyed by the imitation, can, in any sense, be resolved into that, which the mind receives from the exertion of its own powers in inferring, or discovering, the resemblance.—I say, on Aristotle's own principles, because, in
the

¹ See below, note¹.

the passage above referred to^k, where he explains himself more fully in applying the principle to metaphor, he expressly allows, that this pleasure of recognition, is not afforded by proper or common words, since they instantly suggest their meaning and cannot be mistaken^l. Now a painting, considered as an imitation of a man, a horse, a house, in general, obviously answers in this respect, unless the imitation be grossly imperfect*, to the common and familiar word; the one suggesting its original, as readily and immediately, as the other suggests its idea.

Among Aristotle's illustrations of this physical principle of the pleasure of self-information, as it might be called, there are two short passages, in ^k Rhet. iii. 10.

^l —τα δὲ κυρία ΙΕΜΕΝ.—“ The Stagirite having told us what a natural pleasure we derive from INFORMATION, and having told us that, in the subject of words, exotic words want that pleasure from being obscure, and common words from being too well known,” adds, &c. Harris, Phil. Inq. p. 190, note*.

* As it was, when Painting was in its infant state—ἐν γὰρ αὐτῇ καὶ σκαρφαλοῖς—according to the quaint expression of Ælian, Hist. Var. x. 10.—of which he seems to have been fond; for it occurs before lib. viii. cap. 8. It seems very properly guarded, in both places, by a —τροπον τινα.—The old painters of whom Ælian speaks were little aware of Aristotle's principle, when they wrote under their pictures—Τὸ το βεῖς—Εἰμὶ ἐπὶ τοῦ—Τὸ το δένδρον.

in particular, which seem to be so explicit with regard to the nature of that pleasure, that I will venture to add to the length of this note by a transcript and translation of them both. They will, I think, satisfy the learned reader that I have not, in the foregoing remarks, misrepresented the philosopher's meaning.

After having applied the principle to metaphor, he applies it in like manner to the enthymemes, or arguments, of the orator.

Διο ὅτε τα ἐπιπολαία τῶν ἐνθυμημάτων εὐδοκίμει· (ἐπιπολαία γὰρ λεγόμεν τα παντί δηλα, καὶ Ἄ ΜΗΔΕΝ ΔΕΙ ΖΗΤΗΣΑΙ) ὅτε ὅσα εἰρημένα ἀγνωσμένα ἐσι· ἀλλ' ὅσων, ἢ αἶμα λεγόμενων ἢ γνώσις γίνεται, καὶ εἰ μὴ πρότερον ὑπῆρχεν, ἢ μικρὸν ὑπερίκει ἢ διανοία· γίνεται γὰρ Οἶον ΜΑΘΗΣΙΣ· ἐκείνως δέ, ἕδτερον^m.

“ For the same reason, we are pleased, “ neither with superficial arguments, (by which “ we mean such as are obvious to every one,
 “ and require no thought or search in the hearer;)
 “ nor with such as we do not understand when “ we have heard them; but, with those, which “ the mind apprehends, either while we hear “ them, (though not at first,) or in the moment “ after they are delivered:—for by these, we,
 “ in a manner, LEARN something: by the “ others,

^m Rhet. iii. 10.

“ others, we learn nothing in either of these ways.”

The other passage, in which the nature of the pleasure that Aristotle means is still more expressly marked, is this :

Παντων δε των—συλλογισμων θορυβείται μαλιστα τα τοιαυτα ὅσα ἀρχομενα ΠΡΟΟΡΩΣΙ, μη τῷ ἐπιτολῆς εἶναι· ἀμα γαρ και ΑΥΤΟΙ ΕΦ ΕΑΥΤΟΙΣ ΧΑΙΡΟΥΣΙ προαισθανομενοι· και ὁσων τοσδετον ὑξερίζουσιν, ὥσθ· ἀμα εἰρημενων γνωρίζειν°.

“ Of all arguments, those are most applauded”,
“ of which the audience have no sooner heard
“ the beginning, than they foresee the conclu“ sion;—not, however, from their being trite and “ obvious; for they are pleased, [not only with “ the ingenuity of the speaker, but]^q at the same “ time,

ⁿ ἔδετερον—i. e. neither while we hear them, nor as soon as we have heard them.

^o Rhet. ii. cap. xxiii. Duval. In some other editions, cap. xix.

^p “ applauded” — — — θορυβείται. The commentators strangely mistake the sense of this word here, and in lib. i. c. ii. They render it, absurdly,—vehementius percellunt—perturbant maximè, &c.—Whether an audience be pleased, or displeased, to any great degree, noise is equally the consequence; and the word θορυβεῖν is used, sometimes for the uproar of approbation, and sometimes for that of dislike.

^q I insert these words, because, though not in the original, they seem plainly implied in the expression—ἈΜΑ γαρ ΚΑΙ αὐτοί, &c.

“ time, WITH THEMSELVES and their own saga- “ city.—Those arguments, also, afford pleasure, “ which, the moment after they are delivered, we “ are no longer at a loss to apprehend.”

NOTE 23.

P. 108. IN A MORE TRANSIENT AND COM-PENDIOUS MANNER. - - -

Επὶ βραχὺ :—literally, “ for a short time.” As PLATO, Rep. iii. p. 396, κατὰ βραχὺ, for a mo- ment—en passant. Dacier’s explanation—Quoi qu’ils ne soient pas tous également propres à ap-prendre,—is, surely, wide of Aristotle’s purpose.
 None of the versions, that I have seen; seem to give the exact idea, except that of Heinsius :— “ Quamquam minor BREVIORQUE ad hos per“ veniat voluptas.”

NOTE 24.

P. 108. FROM THE WORKMANSHIP. - - -

Διὰ τὴν ΑΠΕΡΓΑΣΙΑΝ—“ neatness ”—“ finish- ing,” &c. In the following passages of PLATO, it is opposed to a slight sketch :—καὶ αὐτῶν τετῶν [sc. δικαιοσύνης, σωφροσύνης, &c.] ἔχ’ ὕΠΟΓΡΑΦΗΝ δι, ὥσπερ νυν θεασασθαι, ἀλλὰ τὴν τελειωτάτην ΑΠΕΡ-ΓΑΣΙΑΝ μὴ παριέναι Rep. vi. p. 504. So again, lib. viii. p. 548, the verb, ὑπεργαζίσθαι, is opposed to ὑπογραφῆν.

NOTE 25.

P. 109. METRE—A SPECIES OF RHYTHM.

Μορία—parts.—The following passage will ascertain the sense of the word in this place, and justify my version. Explaining the different senses in which the word Μερος was used, Aristotle says,—ἐτι, εἰς ἃ το εἶδος διαιρεθῆναι αὐν, ἀνευ τῆ Ποιή, καὶ ταῦτα ΜΟΡΙΑ λεγεται τῆς διὰ τὰ Εἶδη, τὰ ΓΕΝΟΣ φασιν εἶναι ΜΟΡΙΑ.—Metaphys. lib. v. cap. 25.—So, in this treatise, cap. 5.—τὰ Αἰσχροὺς εἰς τὸ Γελοῖον ΜΟΡΙΟΝ—"a part, or species, of "the ridiculous."

NOTE 26.

P. 109. THOSE PERSONS, IN WHOM, ORIGINALLY, THESE PROPENSITIES WERE THE STRONGEST, &c.

It is obvious to remark here, that Aristotle, in this deduction of the art from the mimetic and musical instincts, includes verse in his idea of Poetry, which he, at least, considered as imperfect without it. All that he drops, elsewhere, to the disparagement of metre, must be understood only comparatively: it goes no farther, than to say, that imitation, that is, fiction and invention, without verse, deserves the title of Poetry, or Making, better than verse without imitation.

An eminent writer has adjusted this matter, and set it on its true and solid basis, in his Dissertation *On the idea of Universal Poetry. What is there said, of “the origin and first application of Poetry among all nations,” will furnish the best comment I can give, upon the passage which is the subject of this note.

“Poetry is every where of the most early growth, preceding every other sort of composition; and being destined for the ear, that is, to be either sung, or at least recited, it adapts itself, even in its first rude essays, to that sense of measure, and proportion in sounds, which is so natural to us. The hearer’s attention is the sooner gained by this means, his entertainment quickened, and his admiration of the performer’s art excited. Men are ambitious of pleasing, and ingenious in refining upon what they observe will please. So that musical cadences and harmonious sounds, which nature dictated, are farther softened and improved by art, till Poetry become as ravishing to the ear, as the images, it presents, are to the imagination. In process of time, what was at first the extemporaneous production of genius or passion, under the conduct of a natural ear, becomes the labour of the closet, and is conducted by artificial rules; yet still, with a secret reference to the sense of hearing,

* Dr. Hurd’s Horace, vol. ii.

“ hearing, and to that acception which melodious sounds meet with in the recital of expressive words.”

NOTE 27.

P. 110. MARGITES.

The scraps that have been preserved of this Poem, the Dunciad of HOMER, are so few, and so short, that it may be worth while, for the convenience of the reader, to collect them.—

Μεσαιων θεραπων και ἐκηβολε Απολλων^α,

—a line as likely to be found in one kind of Poem as in another, and which affords about as good a sample of this Poem, as a brick does of the building from which it was taken.—The other fragments are a little more interesting, as they give some idea of the hero of the Poem.

ΤΟΝΔ' ἔτ' αὖ σκαπττηρα θεοι θεσαν, ἔτ' ἀροττηρα, Οὐτ' ἄλλως τι σοφον· πασης δ' ἡμαρτανε τεχνης^β.
Πολλ' ἠπισατο ἔργα, κακως δ' ἠπισατο παντα^γ.

—This last stroke of character is not peculiarly antique. The line is of easy application in all times.

* Cited by the Scholiast on the Aves of Aristophanes, v. 914.

^β Preserved by Aristotle, Eth. lib. vi. cap 7, as far as the word σοφον. The remainder of the second line is in Clem. Alexand. Strom. lib. i.

^γ Plato, Alcib. Secund. p. 147. Ed. Serrani.

times. It is not so easy to reconcile it with some other accounts, which seem to make Margites a downright idiot; such as, his not being able to number beyond five; his abstaining from all intercourse with his bride, lest she should complain of him to her mother, &c^d.—One cannot well conceive, how such a man should, as Homer expressly says, “know how to do many things;” even though he did them ever so ill. But a tale, still more ridiculous, is told of this curious personage by Eustathius^e.

NOTE 28.

P. 110. HIS MARGITES BEARS THE SAME ANALOGY TO COMEDY, AS HIS ILIAD AND ODYSSEY TO TRAGEDY.

Whenever Aristotle speaks of COMEDY, we must remember, that he speaks of the Old, or Middle Comedy, which was no other than what we should call farce, and to which his definition of Comedy was adapted: μιμῆσις παυλοτέρων; that is, as he explains himself, “an imitation of “RIDICULOUS characters^f.”—This remark is necessary to explain what is here said of the Margites.

^d Suidas, Art. MARGITES.

^e Eustath. ad Hom. Odyss. K.—See also Kuster's note on Suidas, Art. MARGITES.

^f Chap. v. Translation, § 8. Part I. And see Dr. Hurd's Diss. on the Provinces of the Drama, ch.ii. p. 201.

Margites. A Poem, which, as far as we can form any idea of it, celebrated the blunders and absurdities of an idiot, cannot well be conceived to have been analogous to any thing, that would now be denominated a Comedy. It seems to verge to the very bottom of the dramatic scale; “jusq’ au bonaffon; celui-ci sera l’extrême de “la Comedie, le plus bas degré de l’échelle, “opposé au terrible qui est à l’autre bout^b.” The Bourgeois Gentilhomme of Moliere is certainly farce, however excellent in its way. But Mons. Jourdain is a very Ulysses, compared with Margites.

NOTE 29.

P. 111. BY SUCH SUCCESSIVE IMPROVEMENTS AS WERE MOST OBVIOUS.

Ὅσον ἐγίνετο φανερόν αὐτοῖς—literally, “so much of it as was manifest.”—I doubt of the reading: but, taking it as it stands, I have given what appears to me to offer itself as the most natural and simple meaning of the expression, if not the only one that it will reasonably bear.

^b Fontenelle, Préface to his Comedies, vol. vii. of his works.

NOTE 30.

P. 111-12. ÆSCHYLUS - - - - - ABRIDGED
THE CHORAL PART.

The words are, ΤΑ ΤΣ ΧΟΡΟΣ. Aristotle would hardly have expressed himself thus, had he meant, as Madius, Bayle, and others, have understood, a retrenchment in the number of choral performers. ΤΑ ΤΣ ΧΟΡΟΣ, the choral part, is opposed to ΤΑ ἈΠΟΣΚΗΝΗΣ, the dialogue, Prob. xv. of Sect. 19. It is singular, that Stanley should misunderstand this passage; and still more singular, that he should cite Philostratus, who is directly against him: for his words are, συνεβηλε τας χορους, ΑΠΟΤΑΔΗΝΟΝΤΑΣ: "he contracted the chorusses, which were immoderately long."

This is confirmed by one of Aristotle's Problems, referred to by Victorius^b. The Problem is, Δια τι οι περι Φρυγικων ησαν μαλλον μελοποιοι; (meaning, I suppose, more Musicians than the dramatic Poets of his own time :) The answer is, η, δια το πολλαπλασια ειναι τοτε τα μελη εν ταις των μετρων τραγωδiais;—I believe the passage may be rectified by transposition—πολλ. ειναι τοτε τα μελη των μετρων εν τ. Τ. . Perhaps, too, we should read, των ΤΡΙΜΕΤΡΩΝ. But, even taking it as it stands, it may sufficiently answer our purpose, as it shews clearly clearly enough how much the Lyric parts of Tragedy, before the time of Æschylus, wanted contraction.

^a Stanl. in vit. Æschyli, Ed. Pauw, p. 706.

^b Sect. 19. Prob. xxxi.

The prolixity of the Tragic Chorus, we know, was sometimes trying to the patience of an Athenian audience. This is pleasantly glanced at by Aristophanes in his ὄρνιθες: where the Chorus of birds, descanting on the convenience of wings, tell the spectators, that if they had wings, whenever, in the Theatre, they “found themselves hungry, and were tired with the Tragic Chorus,” they might fly home and eat their dinners, and “fly back again, when the Chorus was over.”

XOP.

Οὐδέν ἐς' αἶμανον, ἔδ' ἡδίων, ἢ φῦσαι πτερὰ.
 Αὐτιχ', ὕμων των θεατων εἰ τις ἦν ὑποπτεροῖ,
 Εἴτα, πεινων, τοῖς χοροῖσι τῶν Τραγωδῶν ἤχθετο, Εκπετομεν ἂν ἔτ' ἤρῃσιν, ἔλθων οἰκαδὲ,
 Κατ' ἂν, ἐμπλησθας, ἐφ' ἡμᾶς αὐθις αὐ κατεπτατο.
 v. 786.

NOTE 31.

P. 112. AND MADE THE DIALOGUE THE PRINCIPAL PART OF TRAGEDY.

— Καὶ τον λογον πρωταγωνισην παρεσκευασε. — Victorius, and others, have supposed Aristotle to mean the Prologue. But it seems to be a sufficient objection to this sense, that no example has been produced of the word πρωταγωνιστης, used as merely synonymous to πρωτῷ; as signifying first only, not principal. Nor is it easy to discover any reason, why Aristotle should have recourse here to an unusual and ambiguous expression, when, presently after, in speaking of the improvements of Comedy [cap. v.], he makes use of the proper established term, πρόλογος. There seem to be no words in the Greek language, of which the sense is more clearly fixed, than that of πρωταγωνιστης—πρωταγωνιστης. They occur frequently, and always, as far as I know, in the same sense, of principal—primas agere, &c. To this sense, therefore, I thought it necessary to adhere. But I confess I cannot be satisfied with either of the explanations which have been given of the word ΛΟΓΟΣ. It appears strange to say, that Æschylus first introduced two actors, and then to add, as a distinct improvement, that he also first introduced a principal part or character:—unless we are to understand, what seems not very probable, that the two actors even of Æschylus himself were, at first, personages of equal dignity and importance in the drama, like the two kings of Brentford in the Rehearsal; and that, afterwards, he was the first who corrected this error, (in which he would probably have been followed by other Poets,) and reduced the drama to unity of action by a proper subordination of characters. But, admitting this sense to be without difficulty, the expression of it,
 U 4 produced

I think, is not. Λογος, for a part in the drama, rôle, personnage, (as Dacier,) character, &c. seems harsh, and unusual. At least, I know no example of it.

The difficulties which attend both the expression and the sense, in each of these interpretations, have almost convinced me, that the very construction of the words has been mistaken; and that the meaning is, "he made the discourse, or " dialogue, the principal part of Tragedy." This is well connected with what precedes, and agreeable to the known history of the Tragic drama, in which, originally, the Chorus was the essential, and the Episodes, or dramatic part, only the accessory. But Æschylus "abridged the Chorus, "and made the Episodic part the principal." Λογος, here, may well be understood to mean what Aristotle elsewhere calls λεξις; the speaking, or recitative, part of Tragedy, whether delivered by one or more actors, as opposed to the μελη, or Lyric part^a. Παρασκευασε, reddidit, effecit, &c. as, (to take the first instance of this common use of that verb which the Lexicons offer me)—εὐσεβεστερας τε και σωφρονεστερας της συνοντας παρασκευασεν —"magis pios et temperatos reddidit"^b. And thus Aristotle himself, cap. xix. όταν ἡ ἐλεεινα ἡ δεινα — δει παρασκευαζεν. i.e. to make things piteous, piteous, terrible, &c. as in Goulston's version ; and that of the accurate Piccolomini :—" Quando " occorre d'havere à far parere le cose, ò mise- " rabili, ò atroci," &c.—If the use of πρωταγωνιστης as an adjective be an objection, it is one to which the other explanations are equally liable. On the whole, I have not scrupled to prefer this sense in my version^c.

^a See NOTE 90.

^b Xenophon. So Isocrates, Παρασκευαζει σεαυτον πλεονεκτειν μεν δυναμενον, &c. Ad Dæmonium.

NOTE 32.

P. 112. SOPHOCLES ---- ADDED THE DECORATION OF PAINTED SCENERY.

To adjust exactly the rival claims of Æschylus and Sophocles with respect to the Οψις, or decoration, of the Tragic stage, would be a desperate undertaking. Some accounts are so liberal to Æschylus, as scarce to leave his successors any room for farther improvements. They give him "paintings, machinery, altars, tombs, trumpets, " ghosts, and furies :"—to which others add a very singular species of Tragic improvement, the "exhibition of drunken men."—την δε σκηνην ἰκοσμησε, και την ὄψιν των θεωμενων κατεπληξε τη λαμπροτητι—ΓΡΑΦΑΙΣ και μηχαναις, βωμοις τε και ταφοις, σαλπιγξιν, ειδωλοις, ἱριννυσι.—MS. life of Æschylus, quoted by Stanley, In vitam Æschyli, and ^c Since this note was written, the same explanation has been given, and well supported, in the Camb. edit. of 1785. Prel. p. xxxi. &c.

and by Fabric. Bib. Gr. lib. ii. cap. xvi. Sect. 2.—
And Athenæus says, πρωτῷ ἐκείνῳ --- παρη- γάγε την των ΜΕΘΥΝΤΩΝ ΟΥΙΝ ἐς τραγωδιαν.
p. 428.—He adds an example. In the Tragedy called Καβαίροι, he introduced “Jason and his retinue drunk!”

The passage given by Dacier from Vitruvius is very general; it says only, “scenam fecit.”
This may, or may not, include painting; which, indeed, rather seems to be implied, in what follows, about the improvements of Democritus and Anaxagoras, where the “imagines ædificiorum “in scenarum picturis” are mentioned. But all this is far outweighed by the testimony of Aristotle, who here explicitly attributes the introduction of painted scenery to Sophocles.

NOTE 33.

P. 112. IT WAS LATE BEFORE TRAGEDY --- ATTAINED ITS PROPER DIGNITY.

—Οψὲ ἀπεσεμνωθῆ:—and to “late,” we might add, imperfectly. For, what Horace says of the Roman Tragedy, is, in some measure, though perhaps not equally, applicable to the Greek:

----- in longum tamen ævum

Manserunt, hodieque manent vestigia ruris.

Ep. ad Aug. v. 160.

Prejudice

* Primus Agatharcus Athenis, Æschylo docente Tragœdiam, scenam fecit. Vitruv. Præf. in lib. vii.

Prejudice aside, it cannot surely be said, that the Greek Tragedy, in the hands, at least, of Æschylus, Sophocles, or Euripides, ever attained its proper dignity. I do not speak of modern dignity; of that uniform, unremitting strut of pomp and solemnity, which is now required in Tragedy. This was equally unknown to the manners, and to the Poetry, of the antients. I speak only of such a degree of dignity as excludes, not simplicity, but meanness—the familiar, the jocose, the coarse, the comic. Now it cannot, I think, be said, with any truth, that these are thoroughly excluded in any of the Greek Tragedies that are extant: in some of them they are admitted to a very considerable degree. In particular, something of this sort—of what the French call mesquin—is almost constantly to be found in the short dialogue of the Greek Tragedies; in that part, I mean, which the eye, when we turn over any Tragedy, easily distinguishes from the rest, by its being carried on in a regular alternation of single verses*. In this “close fighting” of the dialogue, as Dryden calls it^b, which seems to have retained something of the spirit

* A sensible writer has justly remarked the ill effect of this symmetrical sort of conversation upon the illusion of the drama. [Letters on various subjects, by Mr. Jackson of Exeter, vol. ii. p. 109.] The English reader may see an example of it in Milton's Comus, v. 277—290.

^b Essay on Dram. Poesy.

spirit of the old satyric diverbia, where, in the origin of the Greek, as well as of the Roman drama,

VERSIBUS ALTERNIS opprobria rustica fundunt,

HOR.

—in this part of the dialogue, we generally find, mixed indeed frequently with fine strokes of nature and feeling, somewhat more than what Brumoy calls “un petit vernis de familiarité;” especially when these scenes are, as they often are, scenes of altercation and angry repartee. In the Iphigenia in Aulide of Euripides, Menelaus, in the struggle with the old messenger for the letter, threatens to break his head with his sceptre,

Σκηπτρῷ ταχ' ἄρα σον καθαιμαξῶ καρα.

v. 311.

Fairly rendered by Mr. Potter's verse—

“Soon shall thy head this sceptre stain with “ blood.”

Unfairly dignified by Brumoy's prose—

“Prends garde qu'une mort prompte ne punisse “ ton audace.”

Even Sophocles, who gave the Tragic tone, in general, its proper pitch, between the ὀγκος of Æschylus, and the ἰσχυότης of Euripides^d, is by

no -

^c Theatre des Grecs, tome iii. p. 205.

^d Aristophanes, in The Frogs, makes Euripides boast to Æschylus - - -

— ὡς παρελαβον την τεχνην παρα σε το πρωτον εἶδus

Οἰδusαν ὑπο κομπασματων και ρηματων ἐπαχθων

ΙΣΧΝΑΝΑ μεν πρωτιsον αὐτην, και το βαρὺ ἀφειλον.

no means free from some mixture of this alloy in the language of his short dialogue. For example: in the scene between Ulysses and Neoptolemus in the Philoctetes, [v. 1250.] when Neoptolemus declares his resolution of restoring to Philoctetes his bow and arrows, at which Ulysses expresses his surprise by a repetition of the question, Τί φης;—τιν' εἰρηκας λογον;—Neoptolemus replies, "Would you have me tell you the same thing two or three times over?"

Δις τ' αὐτὰ βέλει καὶ τρεῖς ἀναπολεῖν μ' ἐπή^ε;

v. 1267.

In another scene of this Poet, between Teucer and Menelaus, after a long altercation about the interment of Ajax, Menelaus says—

Ἐν σοὶ φρασῶ—τονδ' ἐξὶν ἔχει θαπτεον.

—to which Teucer replies—

Σὺ δ' ἀντακκσον τέτον ὡς τεθαψεται[†].

In plain English, but no plainer than the Greek—
" M. One thing I'll tell you—he shall not be " buried.

* The reader may also see something of the same cast in the scene between Oedipus and Creon, Oed. Tyr. v. 550, &c. And in that between Oedipus and the two Shepherds, v. 1162, &c. — These scenes of snarling altercation, I suppose, were what gave occasion to the ridiculous idea of some Comic Poet, that "Sophocles seemed to have been assisted, in writing his Tragedies, by a mastiff-dog."

Κυνὸν τις ἔδωκε συμποιεῖν Μολοττικῶν. Diog. Laert. IV. 20.

[†] Ajax. v. 159, 160.

“ buried. T. And I’ll tell another thing—he “ shall be buried.”—Certainly this approaches very nearly to the language of a contest between two washerwomen.

These may be reckoned among the passages, in which the spirit of Sophocles, according to the observation of a great critic, σβεννυται ἀλογως πολλῶν, καὶ πίπτει ἀτυχίσματα. [Longin. Sect. 33.]

In the Antigone there is a scene of altercation between Creon, Ismene, and Antigone, in which, when Ismene, pleading for her sister, asks Creon whether he will put her to death, who was to become the wife of his son, his answer is—

ΑΡΩΣΙΜΟΙ γὰρ χαίτερον εἶσιν ὕται*.

The prejudiced admirers of the antients are very angry at the least insinuation that they had any idea of our barbarous Tragi-Comedy. But after all, it cannot be dissembled, that, if they had not the name, they had the thing, or something very nearly approaching to it. If that be Tragi-Comedy, which is partly serious and partly comical, I do not know why we should scruple to say, that the Alcestis of Euripides is, to all intents and purposes, a Tragi-Comedy. I have not the least doubt, that it had upon an Athenian audience the proper effect of Tragi-Comedy; that is,
that

* v. 576. This is not much more delicate than the answer of one of the Ægyptian fugitives to King Psam-meticus.—Herod. Euterp. p. 63. ed. H. Steph.

that in some places it made them cry, and in others, laugh. And the best thing we have to hope, for the credit of Euripides, is, that he intended to produce this effect. For though he may be an unskilful Poet, who purposes to write a Tragi-Comedy, he surely is a more unskilful Poet, who writes one without knowing it.

The learned reader will understand me to allude particularly to the scene, in which the domestic describes the behaviour of Hercules; and to the speech of Hercules himself, which follows. Nothing can well be of a more comic cast than the servant's complaint^a. He describes the hero as the most greedy* and ill-mannered guest he had ever attended, under his master's hospitable roof; calling about him, eating, drinking, and singing, in a room by himself, while the master and all the family were in the height of funereal lamentation.

He

^a Alcestis, v. 757, &c.

* Hercules was renowned for his ἀσθφαγία. The following extravagant description of his eating, preserved by Athenæus from the Busiris, a satyric drama of Epicharmus, affords a curious specimen of the satyric fun.

Πρωτον μιν, αἰκ' ἐσθοντ' ἰδὼς νιν, ἀποθανούς.

Βρῆμαι μιν ὁ φαρυγὲς ἰνδοῦ, ἀράσει δ' ἅ γναθῶ,

Ψοφει δ' ὁ γομφίῳ, τέτρυγε δ' ὁ κινόδων,

Σίζει δὲ ταῖς ῥίνεσσι, KINEI Δ' ὍΤΑΤΑ

Τῶν τετραποδῶν ἐχ' ἦττον - - - Athen. lib. x. init.

He was not contented with such refreshments as had been set before him ;

----- ἔτι σωφρονως ἐδεῖατο

Τα προστυχοντα ζενια -----

Αλλ' εἰ τι μὴ φεροιμεν, ΩΤΡΤΝΕΝ φερειν.

Then he drinks—

Ἔως ἡθερμην' αὐτον ἀμφιβασα φλοξ

Οἶνῳ -----

—crowns himself with myrtle, and sings, ΑΜΟΤΣ' ΤΛΑΚΤΩΝ—and all this, alone. “ Cette description,” says Fontenelle, “ est si burlesque, “ qu'on diroit d'un crocheteur qui est de 'con- “ frairie¹.” A censure somewhat justified by Euripides himself, who makes the servant take Hercules for a thief:

— πανουργον ΚΛΩΠΙΑ και ΔΗΙΣΤΗΝ τινα.

The speech of Hercules, φιλοσοφευτῶ ἐν μίθῃ, as the scholiast observes, (v. 776,) “ philosophizing in his cups,” is still more curious. It is, indeed, full of the φλοξ οἶνῳ, and completely justifies the attendant's description. Nothing can be more jolly. It is in the true spirit of a modern drinking song ; recommending it to the servant to uncloud his brow, enjoy the present hour, think nothing of the morrow, and drown his cares in love and wine:

ὍΥΤΟΣ

¹ Œuvres de Font. vol. ix. p. 415.

‘ΟΥΤΟΣ^k—τι σεμνον και πεφροντικ^θ βλεπας;
 Ου χρη σκυθρωπον, κ. τ. αλ.

ΔΕΤΡ’ ΕΛΘ’, όπως αν και σοφωτε^θ γενη.
 Τα θνητα πραγματ’ οιδας ην εχει φυσιν;
 ΟΙΜΑΙ ΜΕΝ ‘ΟΤ’ ΠΟΘΕΝ ΓΑΡ,—αλλ’ ακυε με.
 Βροτοις απασι κατθανειν οφειλεται, Κ’ εκ ες θνητων οςις εξεπισαται
 Την αυριον μελλασαν ει βιωσεται.

Ευφραινε σαυτον ΠΙΝΕ!—τον καθ ημεραν
 Βιον λογιζε σον, τα δ’ αλλα, της τυχης.
 Τιμα δε και την πλειστον ηδισην θεων
 ΚΥΤΡΙΝ βροτοισιν—κ. τ. λ. v. 783—812.

If any man can read this, without supposing it to have set the audience in a roar, I certainly cannot demonstrate that he is mistaken. I can only say, that I think he must be a very grave man himself, and must forget that the Athenians were not a very grave people. The zeal of Pere Brumoy in defending this Tragedy, betrays him into a little indiscretion. He says, “tout cela “ à fait penser à quelques critiques modernes “ que cette piece etoit une Tragicomedie; “ chimere inconnu aux anciens. Cette piece
 “ est du goût des autres Tragedies antiques!”

Indeed

^k “ You, fellow ! ”—Mr. Potter’s translation.

^l Tome iii. p. 206.

Indeed they, who call this play a Tragi-Comedy, give it rather a favourable name; for, in the scenes alluded to, it is, in fact, of a lower species than our Tragi-Comedy: it is, rather, burlesque Tragedy; what Demetrius calls τραγωδία παιζουσα^m. Much of the comic cast prevails in other scenes; though mixed with those genuine strokes of simple and universal nature, which abound in this Poet, and which I should be sorry to exchange for that monotonous and unaffecting level of Tragic dignity, which never falls, and never rises.

I will only mention one more instance of this Tragi-comic mixture, and that from Sophocles. The dialogue between Minerva and Ulysses, in the first scene of the Ajax, from v. 74 to 88, is perfectly ludicrous. The cowardice of Ulysses is almost as comic as the cowardice of Falstaff. In spite of the presence of Minerva, and her previous assurance, that she would effectually guard him from all danger by rendering him invisible, when she calls Ajax out, Ulysses, in the utmost trepidation, exclaims—

Τί δρας, Αθανά; μηδαμῶς σφ' ἐξω καλεῖⁿ.

Minerva

^m Περὶ Ερμ. § 170.—Ὁ δὲ γελῶ, says this writer, ἐχθρὸς τραγωδίας. Neither Euripides, nor Sophocles, seem to have held this as an inviolable maxim.

ⁿ v. 74.—Anglicè, “What are you about, Minerva?—by no means call him out.”

Minerva answers:—

Οὐ σιγ' ἀνέξῃ, μῆδε δειλίαν ἄρεις*;

But Ulysses cannot conquer his fears:—

ΜΗ, ΠΡΟΣ ΘΕΩΝ—ἀλλ' ἐνδον ἀρκεῖτω μένων†.

And in this tone the conversation continues; till, upon Minerva's repeating her promise that Ajax should not see him, he consents to stay; but in a line of most comical reluctance, and with an aside, that is in the true spirit of Sancho Pança:—

Μενοίμ' ἂν· ΗΘΕΛΟΝ Δ' ἈΝ ΕΚΤΟΣ ΩΝ ΤΤΧΕΙΝ‡.

No unprejudiced person, I think, can read this scene without being convinced, not only, that it must have actually produced, but that it must have been intended to produce, the effect of Comedy.

It appears, indeed, to me, that we may plainly trace in the Greek Tragedy, with all its improvements, and all its beauties, pretty strong marks of its popular and Tragi-comic origin. For, Τραγωδία, we are told, was, originally, the only dramatic

* “Will you not be silent, and lay aside your fears!”

† “Don't call him out, for heaven's sake:—let him stay within.”

‡ “I'll stay—(aside) but I wish I was not here.”—

“J'avoue,” says Brumoy, “que ce trait n'est pas à la louange d'Ulysse, ni de Sophocle.” (Tome iii.)

dramatic appellation¹; and when, afterwards, the ludicrous was separated from the serious, and distinguished by its appropriated name of Comedy, the separation seems to have been imperfectly made, and Tragedy, distinctively so called, seems still to have retained a tincture of its original merriment. Nor will this appear strange, if we consider the popular nature of the Greek spectacles. The people, it is probable, would still require, even in the midst of their Tragic emotion, a little dash of their old satyric fun, and Poets were obliged to comply, in some degree, with their taste².

When

¹ Casaub. De Sat. Poesi, p. 21, 22.—Constat sanè primis temporibus ignoratum fuisse discrimen inter Tragœdiam et Comœdiam: - - - nam et Τρῳγῳδία et Τραγῳδία, primitùs nomen fuit commune, quod postea διεσπασθῆ, ut ait Aristoteles, et veteres critici testantur. Idem: [sc. Athenæus] τραγῳδία, το παλαιον, ἢ ὄνομα κοινον και προς την Κωμῳδιαν ἕτερον δὲ, το μεν κοινον ὄνομα ἔσχεν ἡ Τραγῳδία ἡ δὲ Κωμῳδία, ἰδιον.

* “Scenical representations, being then intended, not, “as in our days, for the entertainment of the better sort, “but on certain great solemnities, indifferently for the “diversion of the whole city, it became necessary to “consult the taste of the multitude, as well as of those, “quibus est equus, et pater, et res.” Notes on Hor. vol. i. p. 93. See also p. 195.—Plato calls Tragedy, τῆς ποιησεως ΔΗΜΟΤΕΡΠΕΣΤΑΤΟΝ τε και ψυχαγωγικωτατον. Min. vol. ii. p. 321. Serr.

When we speak of the Greek Tragedies as correct and perfect models, we seem merely to conform to the established language of prejudice, and content ourselves with echoing, without reflection or examination, what has been said before us. Lord Shaftsbury, for example, talks of Tragedy's being "raised to its height by Sophocles and Euripides, and no room left for further excellence or emulation." Advice to an Author, Part II. Sect. 2. where the reader may also see his unwarrantable and absurd interpretation of Aristotle's phrase, ἰσχεῖ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ φύσιν, by which he makes the philosopher, "declare, that whatever idea might be formed of the utmost perfection of the kind of Poem, it could, in practice, rise no higher than it had been already carried in his time." I should be sorry to be ranked in the class of those critics, who prefer that Poetry which has the fewest faults, to that which has the greatest beauties¹. I mean only to combat that conventional and hearsay

¹ Ποτερον ποτε κριττων ἐν ποιημασι και λογοις—μεγεθος ἐν ἐνοιαις διαμαρτημενοι, ἢ, το συμμετρον μεν ἐν τοις κατορθωμασι, ὑγιει δὲ παντὴ και ἀδιαπτωτον. Long. Sect. 33. The ὑγιει παντὴ και ἀδιαπτωτον is, surely, by no means the character of the Greek Tragedians. They who think it worth searching for must lay aside Sophocles, and Shakspeare. In the French Theatre, perhaps, they may find it; but they must be content, I fear, to take with it, the συμμετρον ἐν τοις κατορθωμασι.

hearsay kind of praise, which has so often held out the Tragedies of the Greek Poets, as elaborate and perfect models, such as had received the last polish of art and meditation. The true praise of Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, is, (in kind at least, though not in degree;) the praise of Shakspeare; that of strong, but irregular, unequal, and hasty genius. Every thing, which this genius and the feeling of the moment could produce, in an early period of the art, before time, and long experience, and criticism, had cultivated and refined it, these writers possess in great abundance: what meditation, and “the labour and delay of” “the file” only can effect, they too often want. Of Shakspeare, however, compared with the Greek Poets, it may justly, I think, be pronounced, that he has much more, both of this want, and of that abundance.

NOTE 34.

P. 112. ORIGINALLY, THE TROCHAIC TETRAMETER WAS MADE USE OF, &c.

As the Trochaic measure was still occasionally admitted, even in the improved and serious Greek Tragedy, and, in particular, occurs very frequently in the Tragedies of Euripides, it is natural to suppose, that a still more frequent use of it would be one of the characteristics of the satyric drama, which seems to have been only a sort of revival, in an improved and regular form, of the old Trochaic Tragedy^a with its chorus of dancing satyrs^b. It seems therefore somewhat remarkable, though I have not seen it noticed, that in the only satyric drama extant, the CYCLOPS, and that written by Euripides, who has made so much use of this measure in his Tragedies, not a single Trochaic tetrameter is to be found.

NOTE 35.

P. 113. THE IAMBIC IS, OF ALL METRES, THE MOST COLLOQUIAL, &c.

Compare Rhet. lib. iii. cap. i. and cap. viii. Ed. Duval. And Demet. Περὶ Ἑρμ. Sect. 43.

NOTE 36.

P. 113. - - - SELDOM INTO HEXAMETER, AND ONLY WHEN WE DEPART FROM THE USUAL MELODY OF SPEECH.

It has been thought strange, that Aristotle should introduce here the mention of hexameters, when he has been speaking only of Trochaic and Iambic verse, and is accounting for the adoption of ^a Aristotle's expression on this subject elsewhere, is, οἱ τὰς ΤΡΑΓΩΔΙΑΣ ποιῶντες - - - ἐκ τῶν ΤΕΤΡΑΜΕΤΡΩΝ εἰς τοὶς ἸΑΜΒΕΙΟΝ ΜΕΤΕΒΗΣΑΝ, &c. Rhet. iii. 1.

^b See Casaub. de Sat. Poet. lib. i. c. 3.

of the latter, in preference, not to the hexameter, but to the Trochaic tetrameter: and it has, therefore, been doubted, whether we should not read τετραμετρα^a. But the established reading, I believe, is right. The Trochaic tetrameter, Aristotle has, both here, and in his Rhetoric, characterized as σατυρικον—τροχειρον—ὀρχησικωτερον—and even κορδακικωτερον^b. He did not, I apprehend, consider it as being, in any degree, λεκτικον. It was therefore entirely out of the question, when a metre proper for the general dialogue of Tragedy was to be sought for: but the hexameter was not so; and it might, without absurdity, be asked by an objector, as Castelvetro and Piccolomini have observed, why that species of verse was not adopted; especially as the Tragic Poets were the successors of the Epic, or Heroic^c, and Homer, according to Plato, was “the first of Tragic Poets”^d. As its character was grave and stately, it might seem, on that account, well adapted to Tragedy, where, indeed, we actually find it occasionally introduced. But Aristotle objects to it as less proper, because, though σιμων, it was at the same time, & λεκτικον^e. He allows,

^a Ed. Ox. 1780, p. 277.

^b See above, NOTE 8. and ^c.

^c —ἐντι των ἑπων, τραγωδοδιδασκαλοι. ch. iv. Transl.
Part I. Sect. 6.

^d —πρωτον των τραγωδιοποιων.—Repub. lib. x. p. 607.

^e Rhet. iii. 8.

allows, however, that it was not so remote from the rhythm of common speech, but that it might be casually produced, like the Iambic, though it rarely happened^f. He even goes so far, as to allow, in his concluding chapter, that Tragedy “might adopt the Epic metre.”—All this seems to afford sufficient support to the common reading. The Heroic and Iambic feet are, in the same manner, considered together, Rhet. iii. 8.

By λεκτική ἀρμονία, Aristotle means what Aristoxenus calls ΜΕΛΟΣ λογωδῆς^h. We must not suppose him to use the word ἀρμονία here, in that lax and general sense, in which we commonly apply

^f See Quintil. lib. ix. ch. 4.—The most singular instance of involuntary versification that I ever met with, is to be found, where no one would expect to find such a thing,—in Dr. Smith’s System of Optics. The 47th Sect. of ch. ii. book i. begins thus:—

“ When parallel rays

“ Come contrary ways

“ And fall upon opposite sides” — - -

If, as Quintilian says, “Versum in oratione fieri, multò fœdissimum est, totum; sicut etiam in parte, de- forme”—what would he have said to half an Anapestic stanza, in rhyme, produced in a mathematical book, the author of which, too, was supposed to have possessed an uncommon delicacy of ear?

^g — τῷ μετρῷ [sc. τῆς ἐποποιίας] ἔξῃ χρησθαι. Cap. ult.

^h Harmon. lib. i. p. 18. Ed. Meib.—Ἀρμονία, here, is equivalent to μελῶς, as chap. i. iv. vi. &c.

apply it to the rhythm of speech, when we talk of the harmony of a verse or a period. He speaks with his usual accuracy. Speech, as well as Music, has its melody and its rhythm; and these, in speech animated by passion, are so modified, as to approach, more or less perceptibly, to musical melody and rhythm¹. And what Aristotle here asserts, I think, is, that the Greeks seldom, or never, departed so far from the usual rhythm of speech, as to run into hexameter verse, except when they were led, by the same cause, to depart equally from its usual melody or tones.

NOTE 37.

P. 113. THE EPISODES WERE MULTIPLIED. - - -

The mistakes, into which some commentators have been led by annexing to the term Επεισόδιον, as applied by Aristotle to Tragedy, the modern and Epic idea of a digression, "hors-d'œuvre, intermede, morceau d'attache"², have been well pointed out by Le Bossu, *Tr. du Poeme Ep. liv. ii. ch. iv. v. vi.*³. But he appears to me to have gone too far, and to have fallen into the opposite

¹ See Diss. II. p. 77, 78. and note ².

² Batteux's note on this passage.

³ The Abbé D'Aubignac had led the way, in his Pratique du Theatre, liv. iii. ch. i.

opposite error, by extending the word even to the most essential parts of the general action, to which he will not allow the ἐπεισόδια to be, in any sense, added, united, &c.—but insists that they constitute that action, “comme les membres “sont la matiere des corps.” With this idea, he had, indeed, some reason to call the word ἐπεισόδιον, “terme trompeur ;” for, in this application of it, all sight of its etymological sense is lost. By all that I can gather from an attentive comparison of all the passages in which Aristotle uses the word, there appears to me no reason to suppose, that he any where meant to apply it indiscriminately to all the incidents of a fable ; and it is for this reason that I have no where ventured to render it by the word incident, which would have been too general⁴. Le Bossu’s definition is,—“Les Episodes sont les parties necessaires de l’action etendues avec des circonstances vraisemblables.”—The death of Cato, for example, in the Tragedy of Addison, answers to this definition. But would Aristotle have called that an Episode? I can scarce think it. The most I can conceive is, that he might have applied the term ἐπεισόδια to the particular circumstances circumstances and detail of the action, which were the additions of the Poet's fancy. Le Bossu mentions, as an instance, the escape of Orestes by means of the ablution, in the Iphig. in Taur. of Euripides; which, he says, Aristotle calls an *Episode. But, it is not the escape of Orestes, (ἡ ὑμερσία) that Aristotle so denominates; this was an essential circumstance, and is expressly included by him in that general sketch of the plot, into which the introductions were afterwards to be worked: and one of these Episodes was the detail of the manner in which the escape was effected, διὰ τῆς καθάρσεως.—See NOTE 143.

⁴ Chap. vi.

⁴ For the incidents in general, without distinction of essential or episodic, Aristotle’s word seems to be parts of the action. So, ch. viii. and xxiv.

The word introduction is, I think, used by Aristotle only in two senses: 1. The technical sense, in which it is clearly defined to mean, all that part, or, rather, those parts, of a Tragedy, that are included between entire choral odes†. 2. It is evidently applied, in other passages, to the particular parts, subordinate actions, circumstances, or incidents, of the fable; but only, I think, to such, as were not essential parts of the Poet's plan or story, though they might be, and indeed ought to be, closely connected with it:—such, as, however important in the action, by contributing to promote the catastrophe, were yet no way necessitated by history, or popular tradition, or, in subjects

* Ch. xvii.—Transl. Part II. Sect. 17.

† Ch. xii.—Transl. Part II. Sect. 10.

subjects of pure invention, by the Poet's general and determined plan, but depended on the invention or the choice of the Poet, who might, without any alteration in the καθολοι λογῶν, as Aristotle calls it, of his drama, have conducted the action to its catastrophe by different *means*².

The word ἐπεισοδιον, then, appears to me never to be used by Aristotle but in its proper and derivative sense, of something more or less adventitious or accessory—something inserted, superadded, *introduced*³, at pleasure, by the Poet. But the Epic Poem, from its extent of plan, and the variety requisite to its purpose, admits, and requires, subordinate actions of greater length and slighter relation to the principal action of the fable, than is consistent with the shorter compass, closer unity¹, and different end, of Tragedy. As the Episodes of Epic Poetry,

¹ This distinction is very well illustrated by Le Bossu, liv. ii. ch. v. "Mais, s'il étoit nécessaire," &c.—to the end. But, in other respects, this chapter is embrouillé. He confounds (as the reader will see by his marginal quotations) οἰκτιρον, proper, natural, connected, &c. with ἰδιον—necessary, essential to the story, &c. He confounds an Episode with an essential action episoded, i. e. extended and filled up by episodic or invented circumstances.

² Ἐν δὲ τοῖς ἐπιδεικτικοῖς [λογοῖς], δεῖ τον λόγον ΕΠΕΙΣΟΔΙΟΤΝ ἐπαινοῖς, ὅσον Ἰσοκράτης ποιεῖ· αἰεὶ γὰρ τινα ΕΙΣΑΓΕΙ. Rhet. iii. cap. xvii. p. 605. Duval.

³ —ἥττον μὲν ὁνομαζεν μιμησις ἢ τὴν ἑκποιοῖν. ch. ult.

Poetry, therefore, had more distinctness, entireness, and projection from the subject, if I may so express myself, than those of Tragedy, this, as it was the most obvious, became in time almost the only, application of the term; till, at length, from the frequent abuse of this Epic privilege of variety, and the μεταβαλλαν τον ἀκροντα^{*}, scarce any other idea was annexed to the word Episode, than that of digression, hors-d'œuvre, something foreign to the subject, or connected with it only by the slightest thread. Hence, too, in modern language, the word, I think, is applied only to entire actions of this additional, or digressive kind; not to the minuter circumstances or incidents which form the detail of an action. Thus, we call the whole story of Dido, in the Æneid, an Episode; but we should not give that name to any of the incidents by which the death of Turnus (an action essential to the fable,) is circumstantiated, though equally introduced and supplied by the Poet, and therefore equally, in Aristotle's sense, εισισοδια. And so much, as to his use of this term, in general. Whether these remarks are well or ill founded, will best appear, when we come to apply them to the particular passages in which the word occurs. In that now before us, it is used, I think, in the second of the two senses I mentioned; and its best comment seems to be another passage, cap. xxiv. [Transl. Part III. Sect. 2.] where the critic

^{*} Cap. xxiv.

critic observes the advantage which the Epic Poem has in the variety of its Episodes, and assigns the want of that variety, as one common cause of ill success in Tragic writing :—το γὰρ ΟΜΟΙΟΝ ταχὺ πληρὺν ἐκπίπτειν ποιεῖ τὰς τραγωδίας.

NOTE 38.

P. 113. THE RIDICULOUS—A SPECIES OF TURPITUDE OR DEFORMITY; SINCE IT MAY BE DEFINED, &c.

It has been asserted by some writers of eminence, that Aristotle here speaks, not of what is laughable or ludicrous, in general, but only of the ridiculous, in that particular sense of the word, in which it is distinguished from the merely risible, and implies *laughter mixed with disapprobation or contempt. This, however, is certainly not what Aristotle has said; for the word γελοῖον, which he uses, is as general as possible, and answers exactly to our word laughable. And it is in this general sense, justified, I think, by common usage, that I have used the word ridiculous in my version. For though in a philosophical speculation the distinction above-mentioned may be necessary for clearness, and is undoubtedly well founded, yet, in common language, the word ridiculous is never used with this nice appropriation, priation, but applied, like its Latin original, to whatever excites laughter.

* Beattie, On Laughter and Ludicrous composition—ch. i. p. 326.—Lord Kaimes, El. of Criticism, i. ch. vii.

But it is objected, that, if Aristotle means the laughable in general, his account of the matter is false; because “men laugh at that, in which “there is neither fault nor turpitude of any “kind^b.” I answer, that this is true in English, but not true in Greek. Our word, turpitude, is confined, I think, to a moral sense, and I suppose is here so used by Dr. Beattie; and it is certainly true, that we laugh at many things that have in them no turpitude of that kind—nothing morally wrong. But the Greek word, ΑΙΣΧΡΟΝ, was a word of wide extent, and seems manifestly used here by Aristotle in its utmost latitude; comprehending every thing that is, in any degree, ugly or deformed, from atrocious villainy, the highest moral ugliness, to a ridiculous cast of features in an ugly face. It is the opposite to ΚΑΛΟΝ, which was used in a correspondent latitude of application.—The objections, which have been made to this passage, have chiefly, I think, been owing to this,—that the objectors have not been sufficiently aware of the extensive signification in which the Greeks used the words, καλον, αἰσχρον, —ἀρίστη, κακία—σπυδαιον, φαυλον—ἀμαρτημα, &c.—We translate the words of antient authors by words to which we annex different ideas, and then raise objections objections and difficulties from our own mistakes. The consequence of taking αἰσχροῦ here in the restrained sense of moral turpitude, has been, that those writers, who have so taken it, have been obliged to deny, that γελοῖον means laughable, because the laughable in general could not truly be defined, “a species of moral turpitude.”

^b Dr. Beattie, ibid. p. 332.

It plainly was not Aristotle's design here to enter into an accurate inquiry about the nature of laughter, and the distinction of risible and ridiculous objects. This he had perhaps done, in that part of this mutilated treatise, which related to Comedy, and to which he himself refers in his Rhetoric^c. His purpose, here, seems to have been, merely to support and explain his account of Comedy; i.e. that it was μιμησις φαυλοτέρων, “an imitation of bad characters;” that is, as he immediately limits the sense of the general term φαυλον,—of ridiculous, or laughable, characters^d. Such, he continues, are properly denominated φαυλοι, κακοι, bad, &c. because the laughable (γελοῖον) is one species of the αἰσχροῦ, taken in its most general sense. “But to what species, or class,” it was obvious to ask, “does it belong?”—To that class, it is answered, of things αἰσχροα, which

^c — διωρισται δε περι γελοιων χωρις εν τοις περι ποιητικης. Rhet. i. ii. Ed. Duval.—εἰρηται ΠΟΣΑ ΕΙΔΗ ΓΕΛΟΙΩΝ εἰν, εν τοις περι ποιητικης. Ibid. iii. 18.

^d See NOTE 19.—One of the explanations of φαυλῶ in Hesychius is καταγελασῶ.

which are neither destructive nor painful: for these, exciting terror or pity, are the property of Tragedy*. And he asserts, I think, plainly, that the laughable in general, το γελοιον, i. e. every thing that excites laughter, is ἀμαρτημα ΤΙ και αἰσχρον ἀνώδυνον και ἐφθαρτικον—is, in some respect or other, faulty, wrong, deformed, but neither painful nor pernicious. What follows, about a ridiculous face, is, I think, clearly, not an illustration merely, as Dr. Campbell understands it to be†, but an instance. This seems evident from Aristotle's using the very word αἰσχρον; (προσωπον αἰσχρον) which he would hardly have done, had he just before used the words αἰσχρον and αἰσχρον, as Dr. Campbell and Dr. Beattie contend that he has used them, in a moral sense only.

But it is objected—"We can never suppose that Aristotle would have called distorted features "a certain fault or slip‡." To call them a slip, would indeed sound strangely; because that expression conveys the idea of something morally wrong. But when we say, that a very long nose, or a wide mouth, is a fault in a face, we use a very common expression; the word fault having, I think, the same latitude of application as the Greek word ἀμαρτημα.

It

* See cap. xii. initio.—Transl. Part II. End of Sect. 9.

† Philos. of Rhetoric, book i. ch. iii. Sect. 1.

‡ Ibid.

It must be observed, however, that all Aristotle says is, that these two characters, deformity of some sort, and the absence of pain, or hurt, are to be found in every object of laughter: he neither says, nor implies, the converse—that every thing so qualified is laughable^b. With respect to one of these characters—the absence of pain or harm—there can be no doubt. It is only saying that we cannot laugh at that which shocks us. As to the other general character, deformity, ugliness, something wrong, &c. (ἀμαρτυρία τι καὶ αἰσχρ.) it seems to me, that these expressions, taken in that large sense, in which Aristotle plainly means to use them, amount to much the same as those used by modern philosophers to characterize the risible in general; such as, “incongruity, incongruous association, striking unsuitableness,”—“disproportion, inconsistency and dissonance of circumstances in the same object”^c.—“With respect to works both of nature, and of art,” says the ingenious and philosophical author of the Elements

^b “Though every incongruous combination is not “ludicrous, every ludicrous combination is incongruous.”
 Dr. Beattie, On Laughter, &c. ch. ii. p. 351.

^c Phil. of Rhet. book i. p. 89, 93.

^k Beattie, On Laughter, from Dr. Gerrard. See Akenside—

-----, some incongruous form,
Some stubborn dissonance of things combin'd.
Pl. of Im. b. iii. v. 250.

Elements of Criticism, "none of them are risible
 " but what are out of rule, some remarkable " defect or excess; a very long visage, for " example, or a very short one. Hence, nothing
 " just, proper, decent, beautiful, proportioned, or " grand, is risible¹." This appears to me to be exactly the meaning, and to approach very near to the language, of Aristotle. For, of whatever may be thus characterized it surely may be said, that it has some species of fault, deformity, or distortion: in Aristotle's words, ἀμαρτημα Τι καὶ αἰσχρόν—αἰσχρόν ΤΙ καὶ ΔΙΕΣΤΡΑΜΜΕΝΟΝ.

Aristotle's account, then, of the γέλοισιν, appears to be right, as far as it goes. It might, indeed, be objected to, as too general, had he given it as the result of an exact and particular analysis of the subject. But this, as I have already observed, was not his purpose in this place.

It is farther objected by Dr. Campbell, that to speak of laughter in general, " would have " been foreign to Aristotle's purpose:" because,
 " laughter is not his theme, but Comedy; and
 " laughter only so far as Comedy is concerned " with it. Now the concern of Comedy reaches
 " no farther than that kind of ridicule which " relates to manners²."—Undoubtedly it was
 this

¹ Lord Kaimes, El. of Crit. vol. i. ch. vii. Yet he, too, objects to Aristotle's definition, as " obscure and imperfect."—Ch. xii.

² Phil. of Rhet. b. i. ch. iii. sect. I.

this kind of ridicule that Aristotle had principally in view. But I apprehend, that the Comedy here in question was concerned with the ridiculous or laughable in general. For Aristotle's notion of Comedy, as an excellent writer has observed, "was taken from the state and practice of the Athenian stage; that is, from the old or middle Comedy, which answers to his description. The great revolution which the introduction of the new Comedy made in the drama, did not happen till afterwards". Now the old and middle Comedy, as I have before observed^o, were no other than what we should call Farce. To raise a laugh was so eminently their object, that the ridiculous (το γελοιον) is frequently used by Plato, as synonymous to Comedy, and substituted for it; as pity is also for Tragedy^p. Nor was it even very "foreign to Aristotle's purpose" to instance in a ridiculous face; for that this also was an established source of fun in the Greek theatre, is well known from the curious account of the comic masks ⁿ Disc. on the Provinces of the Drama, p. 201.

^o NOTE 28.

^p Ἀρ' ἔχ' ὁ αὐτὸς λόγος καὶ περὶ τοῦ γελοίου;—meaning Comedy: and presently after, ταῦτον ποιεῖς ὅπερ ἐν τοῖς ἐλεοῖς, i. e. in Tragedy. De Rep. lib. x. p. 606. ed. Serr.—See also De Leg. p. 816. where, in perfect agreement with Aristotle, he uses this expression: ὅσα μὲν ἐν ΠΕΡΙ ΓΕΛΩΤΑ ἐστὶ παιγνία, ὅ δὲ ΚΩΜΩΔΙΑΝ ΠΑΝΤΕΣ ΛΕΓΟΜΕΝ—κ. τ. ἄλ.

masks in Jul. Pollux ; who says, particularly of those of the old Comedy, that they were ridiculous caricaturas of the persons represented :—ἐπὶ τῷ γελοιωτέρον ἰσχηματισμῷ¹. The Athenians were certainly not more delicate than Cicero, who thought, we know, that bodily deformities were “ satis bella materies ad jocandum.” He, also, agrees perfectly with Aristotle, or rather follows him, in his account of the ridiculous : “ Locus autem et regio quasi ridiculi TURPITUDE ET DEFORMITATE QUADAM continetur.”

NOTE 39.

P. 114. ITS POETS HAVE BEEN RECORDED.

The original is, οἱ λεγόμενοι αὐτῆς ποιηταὶ μνημονεύονται : the only fair translation of which, I think, is, “ they who are called its Poets.” But as it seems not easy to find any reasonable meaning for this, I have not translated the word at all. The text is probably corrupt. Castelvetro conjectured, very ingeniously, ὈΛΙΓΟΙ ΜΕΝ ὍΙ ἌΥΤΗΣ ποιηταί.—But this Greek, ὀλίγοι οἱ ποιηταί, is, I fear, what the critics call, πονηρὰ κομμάτιον.

I will

¹ Lib. iv. cap. xix. And see Lucian. De Salt. p. 925. ed Bened. He says, that the ridiculousness of the comic masks was regarded as a part of the entertainment ; μερὶς τῆς τέρψης.

² De Or. lib. ii. cap. 59.

³ Ibid. ii. 58.

I will venture to mention another conjecture that has occurred to me. The learned reader will dispose of it as he pleases. It seems not improbable that Aristotle wrote, Ἦν δὲ σχήματα τινα αὐτῆς ἔχουσης ὍΙΑ ΛΕΓΟΜΕΝ, ὍΙ αὐτῆς, &c. i. e. "When it had acquired a certain form, such as we say," alluding to what he had said of Homer's suggesting, by his Margites, the true form, or idea, of Comedy, in which the ridiculous was substituted for the mere invective of the old Iambic, or Satyric form^a. Τα τῆς κωμῳδίας ΣΧΗΜΑΤΑ πρῶτ^ο ὑπεδαξεν, ἔ' ψογον, ἀλλὰ ΤΟ ΓΕΛΟΙΟΝ δραματοποιήσας, [cap. iv.] See, also, what he says immediately after, of the forms (σχήματα) of Tragedy and Comedy being ἐντιμότερα, in higher credit and esteem, than those of the old satirical and encomiastic poems which preceded them: for this seems to accord with what he here says, that Comedy was neglected till it attained something of this its proper form, and aimed at its proper object, the ridiculous. The reader will see the connection: Ἡ δὲ κωμῳδία, διὰ τὸ ΜΗ ΣΠΟΤΔΑΖΕΣΘΑΙ ἐξ ἀρχῆς, ἐλαθεν.—ἩΔΗ ΔΕ ΣΧΗΜΑΤΑ τινα αὐτῆς ἔχουσης ὍΙΑ ΛΕΓΟΜΕΝ, ὍΙ αὐτῆς ποιηταὶ μνημονεύονται.—This differs from the present reading only by the insertion of a single letter, A, which might easily have been omitted, from its resemblance to the Λ that follows.

^a — τῆς ἱαμβικῆς ἰδέας.

NOTE 40.

P. 114. PROLOGUES.

We are not, I think, to look for a sense of the word Προλογος, as here applied to Comedy, different from that, in which it is applied, ch. xii. [Transl. Part II. Sect. 10.] to Tragedy. In both, it was that introductory part of the drama, the business of which was, to give the spectator, either directly, in its very outset, or, more obliquely, in the course of it, so much information relative to the subject of the piece, as would enable him to follow the action without confusion^a. This we learn clearly from the following passage in that part of Aristotle's Rhetoric, where he explains and illustrates the oratorical exordium, by a comparison of it with that of the Epic Poem, and with the prologue of a drama. After giving, as examples, the openings of the Iliad and Odyssey, he goes on, καὶ οἱ Τραγικοί δηλεῖσι περὶ τὸ δράμα, καὶ μὴ εὐθύς, ὥσπερ Εὐριπίδης, ἀλλ' ἐν τῷ ΠΡΟΛΟΓῳ γὰρ ποτ' δηλοῖ, ὥσπερ καὶ Σοφοκλῆς—ΚΑΙ Ἡ ΚΩΜΩΔΙΑ ὝΣΑΤΤΩΣ^b.—This clearly excludes the separate prologue,

^a This purpose is well expressed in the Rhet. lib. iii. cap. 14.—ὁ δὲς ὥσπερ εἰς τὴν χεῖρα τὴν ἀρχὴν, ποιεῖ ἐχόμενον ἀκολουθεῖν τῷ λόγῳ.

^b Rhet. iii. 14. The instance there given from Sophocles, Ἔμοι πατήρ ἦν Πολυβος, seems an interpolation; for prologue, such as that of the Roman Comedy; and it is, also, irreconcilable with Dacier's idea, that by the prologue, in the passage we are considering, Aristotle meant what was afterwards called the Parabasis; for this was merely an address from the Poet to the audience, through the mouth of the Chorus, occurring indifferently in any part of the play, and even, sometimes, at the end of it^c. It seems to differ from the prologue of the Roman Comedy, and of the modern drama, only in its being delivered by the Chorus, and in the body of the piece^d.

Tragedy, according to the usual account of it, seems to have consisted, at first, only of two parts, the Χορὸν, and Ἐπισόδιον^e, and to have begun and ended with those choral songs, which were then esteemed

for those words are not in any part of the πρόλογος of the Oedipus Tyr. even according to Aristotle's own definition of the word, cap. xii.—The sense too seems better without it; for he means, I think, to say, that it was the general practice of Sophocles to convey this information more indirectly, and somewhere in the Prologue, as it was the general practice of Euripides to do this professedly, and in the very opening.

^c As in the Εκκλησι. of Aristophanes, which closes with the Παραβασία.—See Suidas, v. παραβ. and Jul. Pollux.

^d See the Parabasis of the Nubes, v. 518, which, its indecency excepted, is much of the same cast with the Prologues of Terence.

^e Cap. xii. Transl. Part II. Sect. 10.

esteemed the essential part of Tragedy. But, afterwards, these scanty fables, μικροὶ μῦθοι, as Aristotle calls them, were drawn out to their proper size^f, not only by introducing a greater variety of episodic incidents^g, but by prefixing to the first choral song, (or to the first speech of the entire chorus, according to Aristotle's account of the Parode, cap. xii.) the introductory part called Προλογος, and adding, after the last, the concluding part called Εξοδος. The case was probably the same with Comedy. The Phallic songs, from which it received its birth^h, were, I suppose, regarded originally as the essential part of the Comic drama, in the same manner as the Bacchic hymns were of the Tragic. Aristotle plainly speaks of Comedy, as having gradually received similar additions and improvements to those of *Tragedy*ⁱ; and, among these, that of the Προλογος. That such an introductory part, or act, which should be, as Aristotle expresses it, δαγμα λογος, and ὁδοποιήσις τῷ ἐπιοντι^k, was indeed still more necessary to Comedy than to Tragedy, is obvious from the very nature of the former drama^l.

The

^f Cap. iv.

^g See NOTE 37.

^h Cap. iv.

ⁱ προσωπα — προλογος — πλὴν ὑποκριτῶν. — Masks were used in Tragedy also. Æschylus was, "personæ—repertor honestæ," according to Horace.

^k Rhet. ubi suprà.

^l See NOTE 59, and the passage from Athenæus.

The nature and office of the Greek prologue, and its two different manners, are, I observe, very exactly expressed by Terence in the conclusion of his separate prologue to the Adelphi; as they are also very well exemplified in the two first scenes.

Dehinc, ne expectetis argumenta fabulæ.

Senes qui primi venient, hi, partem aperient,

In agendo partem ostendent. - - -

That is, as I understand it, part of the plot they will open to you in the way of direct narration, like the prologues of Euripides, (as, in the soliloquy of Mitio,) and part they will discover in a more oblique and dramatic way, in the scene of action and dialogue that follows: "In agendo partem ostendent."

I ventured, in a former note*, to say, that the Greek Tragedy appeared to me to have retained, with all its improvements, some traces of its origin. Something of this may be perceived, I think, in the very opening of many of the Greek dramas: but especially in those of Euripides, whose inartificial prologues of explanatory narration, addressed directly to the spectators, remind us of the state of tragedy previous to the introduction of the dialogue; when it consisted only of a story told between the acts, (if I may so speak,) of the Dithyrambic Chorus, which was then

* NOTE 33, p. 308.

then the main body and substance of the entertainment. When I read the opening of the Hecuba:

ΗΚΩ, νεκρων κευθμωνα και σκοτε πυλας
 Λιπων, ἰν' Ἀδης χωρις ὤκισαι θεων,
 ΠΟΛΥΔΩΡΟΣ, Εκαβης παις γεγως της Κισσεως Πριαμυτε πατρῶ—κ.τ. αλ.^m - - -

—that of the Persæ of Æschylus:—

ΤΑΔΕ μεν Περσων των οἰχομενων Ἑλλαδ' εἰς αἶαν πιζα καλειται. - - -

—or, even the—

- - - - - ΑΤΤΟΣ ᾧδ' ἔληλυθα
 Ο ΠΑΣΙ ΚΛΕΙΝΟΣ ΟΙΔΙΠΟΤΣ ΚΑΛΟΥ-ΜΕΝΟΣ - - -

—of Sophocles", I cannot help thinking of the single actor of Thespis, announcing his own name and family, and telling the simple tale of his achievements or misfortunes.

This sort of direct explanation was afterwards, with much more propriety, taken from the persons of the drama, and consigned to the actors in a detached

▪ Almost all the Tragedies of Euripides open in the same manner. See, in particular, Iphig. in Taur. Bacchæ, and Phænissæ.

▪ Oed. Tyr. v. 8.—Of all the openings of this Poet, that of the Trachiniæ resembles most the manner of Euripides.

detached prologue, such as those of Plautus and Terence: a practice, which, if we did not know the attachment of Ben Jonson to every thing antient, we might suspect he meant to ridicule, by the pleasant use he has made of it in the prologue to his puppet-shew of Hero and Leander, in the Bartholomew Fair.

“ Gentles, that no longer your expectations may wander, “ Behold our chief actor, amorous Leander,
“ With a great deal of cloth lapp’d about him like a scarf,
“ For he yet serves his father, a dyer at Puddle-wharf,” &c.

The next, and the last step, in the history of Prologues, was again to leave the argument, as it had been left by Sophocles, to the oblique information and gradual development of the action itself, and to make the separate prologue subservient to other purposes, unconnected with the subject of the drama.—The worst of these purposes, and the greatest possible abuse of the term, is to be found in what is called the Prologue of the French Opera; which is wholly composed of two ingredients, almost equally disgusting to a just poetical, or moral taste—allegory and *adulation.

* See Rousseau's account of it, Dict. de Musique, art. PROLOGUE.

NOTE 41.

P. 114. EPICHARMUS AND PHORMIS FIRST INVENTED COMIC FABLES. - - -

Dacier, here, raises unnecessary difficulties. His positive assertion, that, in the old and middle Comedy, "Il n'y avoit rien de feint," [Notes 10 and 13] is surprising. The slightest inspection of Aristophanes will confute it. Was it, then, a fact, that Socrates used to be suspended in a basket for the benefit of aerial meditation? and that Æschylus and Euripides weighed their verses in a pair of scales, to decide, by that means, a contest for superiority, after they were dead? &c. Farther, it seems not easy to reconcile this assertion of Dacier's, to what he afterwards says, ch. ix. note 8.

Μυθας ποιειν, is clearly to invent plots or subjects; and whatever is invented, or feigned, is, in Aristotle's language, καθολα, or general, as opposed to a strictly historical plot, which is καθ' εξακρον, particular. See ch. ix.^b which is the best comment on this passage; especially what is there said of Comedy. The expression, therefore, which Aristotle presently after uses, in speaking of Crates, ἀφαιμεν της ιαμβικης ιδεας, καθολα ποιειν λογος η̄ μυθας, I understand to be no more than ^a Nubes, Act I. Sc. III.—Rana, Act V. Sc. III.

^b Transl. Part II. Sect. 6.

than the development of the shorter expression which preceded, μυθας ποιειν. He does not say, that Crates was the first Poet, but only the first Athenian Poet, who invented such comic subjects. The distinction seems clearly marked : το μεν εν εξ αρχης εκ ΣΙΚΕΛΙΑΣ ηλθε: ΤΩΝ ΔΕ ΑΘΗΝΗΣΙ, Κρατης πρωτος—κ. τ. αλλ.

NOTE 42.

P. 114. EPIC POETRY AGREES SO FAR WITH TRAGIC, &c.

Of the corruption of this passage I have no doubt. It has been proposed to eject the words, μετα λογας. My suspicion rather falls upon the word μετρας; which, as it adds nothing but embarrassment to the sense, (λογος, speech, or words, being a general term, and including metre, as in ch. i.) I have omitted. It appears to me, likewise, that the only meaning, which can reasonably be given to the expression, μεχρι MONOT μετρας, is—"as far as metre alone; i. e. without "considering the other means of imitation, melody "and rhythm." And, accordingly, some commentators, by μετρον ΑΠΛΟΤΝ, understand verse alone, without music. But had this been Aristotle's meaning, he would probably have used the appropriated and clear word, ψιλον^b. The proper and obvious sense of μετρον απλν, is, a simple, or single, single, kind of metre^c. This sense seems also supported by what he says of the metrical difference of the Epic and Tragic Poems, cap. xxiv. where melody and rhythm are not taken into the comparison, but the different kinds of metre only, and their being one, or many:—εἰ γὰρ τις ἐν ἄλλῃ τινὶ μετρῷ διαγνηματικὴν μίμησιν ποιοίτο, ἢ ἐν ΠΟΛΛΟΙΣ, ἀπρεπὲς ἂν φαίνοιτο. And farther, that Aristotle did not mean to express by μετρῶν ἀπλῶν, the exclusion of melody and rhythm, appears the more probable, because he sufficiently expresses this presently afterwards, when he says, that some of the parts of Tragedy were peculiar to it. Now these parts, are no other than the decoration, (ὀψίς,) and the Melopœia, which included melody and rhythm.

^a See NOTE 5. p. 234, &c.

^b Ibid.

On the whole, it seems not improbable, that the passage originally stood in some such way as this: Ἡ μὲν ἐν Εποποιίᾳ τῇ Τραγῳδίᾳ μέχρι μόνου τοῦ μετὰ λόγου μίμησιν εἶναι σκεδαιῶν ἡκολούθησεν.

NOTE 43.

P. 115. THIS, AT FIRST, WAS EQUALLY THE CASE WITH TRAGEDY ITSELF.

It seems to have been taken for granted, without any foundation, by Dacier, and other commentators, commentators, that the modern rule, (for an antient rule it certainly is not,) of what is called the unity of time, was strictly adhered to in every period of the Greek drama: and this has led them, in this passage, to confound the length of the action, or fable, with that of the representation; for these, where a strict unity of time is observed, are indeed the same. But Aristotle here says plainly, that in the earliest state of Tragedy, no rule at all, with respect to the time of the action, was observed; that it was not only allowed to exceed "a single revolution of the sun," but was "indefinite" (ἀόριστος) like that of the Epic Poem. This evidently cannot be applied, without absurdity, to the time of representation. Yet so it is applied by Dacier in his note on this passage, p. 70.

^c Ἀπλῇ—ΜΟΝΟΕΙΔΗΣ—Suidas. Ἀπλῶν—ΑΣΥΝΘΕΤΟΝ. Hes. So, ἀπλῶν is opposed by Aristotle to πεπλεγμένον, cap. x. et passim: and to διπλῶν, cap. xiii. & xxi.

But it appears farther, I think, from what is said, and plainly said, in this chapter, that, after all we have heard so often about this famous unity of time, the rule receives not the least support from Aristotle's authority. Every one, who knows how much stress has been laid by modern critics on the three dramatic unities, and happens not to be well acquainted with Aristotle's treatise on Poetry, would, I suppose, naturally take it for granted, that they are all explicitly laid down, and enforced by him, as essential and indispensable laws, in that famous code of dramatic criticism. But the fact is, that, of these three rules, rules, the only one that can be called important—that of the unity of action—is, indeed, clearly laid down, and explained, and, with great reason, considered by him as indispensable. Of the two other unities, that of place is not once mentioned, or even hinted, in the whole book; and all that is said, respecting the time of the action, is said in this chapter, and in these words: “Tragedy endeavours, as far as possible, to confine its action within the limits of “a single revolution of the sun, or nearly so.” Almost all the commentators seem agreed in understanding the expression, μια περιόδος ἡλίου, to mean only an artificial day. But I own I could never yet perceive any good reason, why we should not permit Aristotle to mean what he seems, in plain terms, to say. If he meant only twelve hours, why did he prefer an expression so ambiguous, to say the least of it, as μιαν περιόδον ἡλίου, to the clear and obvious expression of μιαν ἡμέραν?—But, to wave this question, the utmost, which the most strenuous advocates for the unity of time can make of this passage, is this—that the Poet should endeavour, as far as possible, to confine the supposed time of the action to that of a single day, or nearly so. Now it seems allowed, that that none of the Greek Tragedies extant could have taken up, in the representation, more than three or four hours. What Aristotle, therefore, here says, is so far from being a rule for the unity of time, that, on the contrary, it is saying as plainly as possible, that, in his view, it was no duty incumbent on the dramatic Poet even to aim at the observance of such a rule: for, had he thought otherwise, his mode of expression would, surely, have been very different. He would have proposed the strict unity of time—the exact coincidence of the actual time of representation with the supposed time of the action—as the point of perfection, at which the Poet was to aim: he would have said, “Tragedy endeavours, as far as possible, to confine its action within the time of representation, or nearly so.”

* — ὅτι μάλιστα πεφασται ὑπο μίαν περιόδον ἡλίου εἶναι, ἡ μικρὸν ἐξαλλαστεῖν. Cap. v.

It is certain, indeed, that the nature of the drama, strictly and rigorously considered, would require, I will not say, to the perfection, but to the closeness, of its imitation, the exact coincidence here mentioned; and it is on this foundation only, that any rule at all relative to time could be necessary, and that the dramatic Poet could, with any reason, be denied the privilege of the Epic. All I contend for is, that Aristotle has no where required such a coincidence; that he has not even mentioned it; much less has he, either here, or in any other part of his work,

5

enjoined

enjoined it as a rule. His rule is, as generally understood, "confine your action, as nearly as "you can, to a single day;"—or, as I think, in conformity to his plain words, it should be understood—"to a single revolution of the sun, or "twenty-four hours^b."

It may, perhaps, be objected, that Aristotle has not delivered this in the form of a rule; that he only refers to fact, and to the usual practice of the dramatic Poets of his time. "Tragedy endeavours," &c. But, surely, to mention the general practice of Poets with seeming approbation, or, at least, without a word to the contrary, is, in fact, to erect that practice, (as he has done on many other occasions throughout his treatise,) into a rule.—It is sufficient for my purpose, that, at least, he has given no other rule.

Moreover,

^b It is diverting to hear Castelvetro gravely setting forth the inconveniences of being shut up for four and twenty hours in a theatre:—"Il tempo stretto è quello, "che i veditori possono à suo agio dimorare fedendo in "theatro; il quale io non veggo che possa passare il "giro del sole, si come dice Aristotele, cio è, hore "dodici: conciosia cesa che per le necessità del corpo, "come è, mangiare, bere, diporre i superflui pesi del "ventre e della vesica, dormire, e per altre necessità, "non possa il popolo continuare oltre il predetto termino così fatta dimora in theatro."—p. 109.

Moreover, what he here says of the practice of the Greek dramatists, seems somewhat adverse to the language of those modern critics, who so often appeal, if I mistake not, to that very practice, for the support of their rigorous unity of time. For, if his expression does not prove, that he thought the rule of a single revolution of the sun the only rule which the Poets ought to observe, it surely proves, because it actually says, that he thought it the only rule, which, in general, they did observe. But what says Dacier? “ Une Tragedie, pour être parfaite, ne doit occuper ni plus, ni moins de tems, pour l’action, que pour la representation; car elle est alors dans toute la vraisemblance. Les Tragiques Grecs L’ONT TOUJOURS PRATIQUE.” What he adds, it seems not very easy to comprehend: “ Et ils s’en sont fait une loi si indispensable, que pour ne la pas violer, ils ont quelquefois violente leurs incidens, d’une maniere que je ne conseillerois pas de suivre:” i. e. in plain English, (for I can make nothing else of it,) “ they have so scrupulously adhered to the rule, that, sometimes, for the sake of observing it, they have been obliged to break it.” p. 118.

I believe, every reader, who, in perusing the Greek Tragedians, has taken the pains to examine this matter, must be sensible, that what Dacier so confidently asserts, of their constant adherence
to

to this rule, is palpably false. I shall only mention one remarkable instance of the utter neglect of it, and that in SOPHOCLES; who, in this, as in other respects, is usually regarded, I think, as the most correct and regular of the three Greek Poets whose Tragedies are in our hands. In his Trachinæ, v. 632, Lichas sets out to carry the poisoned garment to Hercules, whom he finds upon the Cenæan promontory, which is said^c to be about sixty Italian miles from the scene of the action. At v. 734, Hyllus, who was present when his father received the garment, arrives with the terrible relation of its effects. Thus, during the performance of about a hundred lines, a journey of about one hundred and twenty Italian miles is supposed to have been taken.—For this, and other instances of the same kind, I must content myself with referring the reader to the sensible and well written Estratto della Poetica d'Aristotile, published among the posthumous works of Metastasio, and which did not fall into my hands till all my notes were written. It contains many ingenious and sagacious observations. The subject of the dramatic unities, in particular, is discussed at large, and, I think, in a very masterly and satisfactory way. And, with respect to the strict unities of time and place, he seems perfectly to have succeeded in shewing, that no such rules were imposed posed on the Greek Poets by the critics, or by themselves;—nor are imposed on any Poet, either by the nature, or the end, of the dramatic imitation itself^a.

^c By Metastasio.

It would be inexcusable to quit this subject without reminding the reader, that the unities of time and place, were long ago powerfully, and, in my opinion, unanswerably combated, as far as their principles are concerned, by Dr. Johnson, in his preface to Shakspeare, p. 20, &c.

^a Capitolo 5.

END OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

London : Printed by Luke Hansard & Sons, near Lincoln's-inn Fields.

or by rather imiject es of l, in
as
in

The borrower must return this item on or before the last date stamped below. If another user places a recall for this item, the borrower will be notified of the need for an earlier return.

Non-receipt of overdue notices does not exempt the borrower from overdue fines.

Harvard College Widener Library
Cambridge, MA 02138 617-495-2413

Please handle with care.
Thank you for helping to preserve library collections at Harvard.

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

HX K5SB S

Ga 113.560.225

A

Harvard College Library

FROM

James M. Paton

Aristotle's
TREATISE ON POETRY,
Translated.

VOL. II.

A

0

L. M. Paton

ARISTOTLE'S
TREATISE ON POETRY,

TRANSLATED:

WITH NOTES
ON THE TRANSLATION, AND ON THE ORIGINAL;

AND
TWO DISSERTATIONS,
ON POETICAL, AND MUSICAL, IMITATION.

BY THOMAS TWINING, M.A.

THE SECOND EDITION,
IN TWO VOLUMES,
BY DANIEL TWINING, M.A.

VOL. II.

London,

Printed by Luke Hansard & Sons, near Lincoln's-Inn Fields:

AND SOLD BY

T. CADELL AND W. DAVIES, IN THE STRAND; PAYNE, FALL-MALL;
WHITE, COCHRANE, AND CO. FLEET-STREET;
LONGMAN, HURST, REES, ORME, AND BROWN, PATERNOSTER-ROW;
DEIGHTON, CAMBRIDGE; and PARKER, OXFORD.

1812.

Ga 112:568.25

RECEIVED

3570
1-2

N O T E S.

NOTE 44.

P. 116. IN THE WAY, NOT OF NARRATION,
BUT OF ACTION.

IT is surprising, that so strange a phrase as ἰδων — δρωντων — formis — agentibus — should have passed as genuine with any Greek scholar.
 It is still more so, that the obvious opposition of δρωντων to ἀπαγγελια, and the no less obvious absurdity of opposing narration to pity and terror, (ἐ δὲ ἀπαγγελιας, ΑΛΛΑ δὲ ἰλεε καὶ φοβε) should have escaped the notice of any commentator*. —
 I should write the passage thus; still considering it as imperfect: — χωρὶς ἱκαση των ἰδων ἐν τοις μοριοις * * * [forte ΔΙΑ] δρωντων καὶ ἐ δὲ ἀπαγ-γελιας

* See the beginning of cap. iii. Transl. sect. 4. — I am glad to find myself well supported in these remarks by Mr. Winstanley's note on this passage. Ed. Ox. 1780, p. 278. — I cannot, however, but still regard the text as defective.

γελίας * * * ἄλλα δι' ἴλιε και φοβε, κ.τ.αλ.
 Thus the word δρῶντων will retain its proper sense, and the active imitation of the drama, which Aristotle every where makes its characteristic distinction, as opposed to the Epic, will be, as we might expect to find it, in a formal and exact definition of Tragedy, distinctly marked.

I will just observe, farther, that this mode of expression—δρῶντων ΚΑΙ ΟΥ ΔΙ' ΑΠ. is familiar to Aristotle.—Here however it may be justified by the necessity of marking clearly the distinction between Dramatic and Epic Poetry. In other instances, as, ἰτερος καὶ μὴ τον αὐτον τροπον. cap. i.—ὡς τον αὐτον και μη μεταβαλλοντα. cap. iii.—εἰδως και μη ἀγνωων. Eth. Nic. v. 8.—it seems hardly to admit of the same excuse. In the Poets we are less surprised to find it frequent. Victorius has pointed out Homer, Il. Z. 333.

— ἔπα με κατ' αἴσαν ἐνεκασας, ἔδ' ὑπερ αἴσαν.

and Sophocles :

- - - γνωτα, κ' εκ ἀγνωτα μοι

Προσηλθεθ' ἡμεροντες. - - - Oed. Tyr. 58.

If any man, in reading the antients, can persuade himself to take such things for beauties, there is certainly no harm in it. The fact I take to be, that composition, even that of Poetry, was not yet so far improved and refined, as perfectly to exclude the inaccuracies and redundancies of popular and familiar speech.

NOTE 45.

P. 116. EFFECTING, THROUGH PITY AND TERROR, THE CORRECTION AND REFINEMENT OF SUCH PASSIONS.

Δι' ἧς καὶ φόβῳ πείρυνται τὴν τῶν τοιῶν παθημάτων καθάρσιν.—A history of the controversies which this obscure passage has excited among critics and commentators, and an exact statement and examination of the various explanations which have been given of it, would almost fill a volume. Among these, however, the opinions, that are worth regarding, or that can, with any shew of probability, be deduced from Aristotle's expression, are, I think, reducible to two. One is, that this purgation, or moderation, of the passions, is merely the effect of having them frequently excited, and of being familiarized with the occasions of them, in Tragic fiction; just as the passions of pity and terror are actually purged, or reduced to moderation, in a surgeon, a physician, or a soldier, by their being accustomed to those terrible or piteous objects that occasion them.—The other interpretation attributes the effect to the moral lesson and example of the drama: Tragedy purges the passions by the striking pictures it sets before us of the dreadful calamities occasioned by the unrestrained indulgence of them; by giving useful warnings, and preparing us to bear the ills of life with patience.—One, or the other, or both, of these meanings, have, I think, been attributed to Aristotle by the best commentators and critics. For the first, the reader may see Mr. Harris's Disc. on Music, Painting, &c. ch. v. note^c.—Heins. De Trag. Const. cap. ii. p. 22, 23, and Castelvetro, p. 117, 118.—For the second, Madius;—D'Alembert in his letter to Rousseau, Mélanges, tom. ii. p. 414.—Dryden. Obs. on the Æneid.—Abbé Du Bos, Refl. sur la Poesie, tom. i. sect. 44. &c.—For an explanation compounded of the two, Robortelli, Piccolomini, and Dacier, who, by the way, after declaring that all the explanations of former commentators “served only to obscure the passage,” and that the true sense was not to be found in any of them, proceeds to give us, as that true sense, and as his own discovery, exactly what had been said before him^a.

Let us first see what Aristotle says. He says, that Tragedy, by the means of pity and terror, effects the purgation (καθάρσις) of such passions: i. e. of pity and terror and other passions of the same kind: for pity and terror seem clearly meant, by the expression, to be included in the effect. And this, in my opinion, is sufficient to overturn the second of the explanations just mentioned; for, according to that, terror and pity are not both the means and the object of the purgation, as Aristotle, I think, asserts them to be, but they are the means only only of purging other passions—those passions, whatever they may be, which are supposed to produce the calamitous events exhibited to our view. Indeed, according to this idea, the object is rather the vice that arises from passion, than the passion itself which is the cause of it. But, besides this objection, I do not see any reason to think, that the moral lesson of the drama, and the effects it might have in moderating our passions through the reflections it excites in us, were at all in Aristotle's thoughts*. The first of the two explanations seems far more admissible. I believe it made a part of his idea, but I doubt whether it was the whole of it. What was precisely his meaning, and the whole of his meaning, will never, I fear, be the subject of a perfect, Stoical κατα-λψις to any man. There is, however, one passage in Aristotle's works, which throws some little light upon this; enough, at least, to keep us from false interpretations, if not to lead us to the true. It is in the seventh chapter of his eighth book De Republicâ. The Abbé Batteux is the only commentator I know of, who has paid a proper attention to this passage; but as I do not perfectly agree with him, either as to the translation he has given, or the use he makes of it, I shall produce so much of the original as appears to be of any importance to our present purpose, and subjoin a translation, with some necessary remarks.

^a See his note 8.

The

* See the concluding NOTE.

The object of Aristotle, in the chapter referred to, is, to examine what kinds of Music (i. e. of melody and rhythm,) are proper to be used in the education of youth. He mentions and approves a division, made by some philosophical writers of that time, of the different kinds of melodies, into Moral, Active, and Enthusiastic: τα μὲν ΗΘΙΚΑ, τα δὲ ΠΡΑΚΤΙΚΑ, τα δ' ΕΝΘΟΥΣΙΑΣΤΙΚΑ. By the first of these we are to understand a manly, grave, and simple melody. The sense of πρακτικά is less clear; but I suppose it means a more complicated and imitative sort of melody, adapted to express human actions; for, in the 49th of the Harmonic Problems [Sect. 19.] it is said of the Hypo-Phrygian mode, that it had ἡθ^ο πρακτικὴ, and was, on that account, used only in the dialogue and action of the drama, never in the choral part^b. And the same epithet, πρακτικόν, is applied, in this treatise, to the Iambic measure^c. As to enthusiastic, it wants no explanation.—Aristotle then proceeds to observe, that “Music was to be “ used,

^b He says too—κατὰ δὲ τὴν ὑποφρυγίαν καὶ ὑποφρυγίαν, ΠΡΑΤΤΟΜΕΝ· ὁ δὲ οἰκεῖον ἐστὶ χορῶν· ἐστὶ γὰρ ὁ χορ^ο κινεούσης ΑΠΡΑΚΤΟΣ. — κ.τ.λ. — The whole Problem, though mutilated, is curious, and throws some little glimmering of light upon the Greek drama, as far as Music is concerned.

^c Cap. xxiv.—το μὲν [i. e. the Trochaic tetrameter,] ὀρχηστικὸν το δὲ, [the Iambic verse,] ΠΡΑΚΤΙΚΟΝ. Whence Horace's,—“natum rebus agendis.” A. P. 83.

“ used, not for one useful purpose only, but for “ several,” which he enumerates; and one of them is — ΚΑΘΑΡΣΕΩΣ ἕνεκα : with respect to which he says — τι δὲ λεγομένην τὴν καθάρσιν, νυν μὲν, ἀπλῶς· παλιν δὲ, ΕΝ ΤΟΙΣ ΠΕΡΙ ΠΟΙΗΤΙΚΗΣ, ἔξεμιν σαφιστερον :—“ What I mean by Καθαρσις, “ or purgation, I shall now explain only in a “ short and general way; but hereafter, in the “ books concerning Poetry, more explicitly and “ clearly.”—And this, I suppose, he had done, in that part of this treatise which is lost.—
 He then proceeds thus :—

—Φανερον, ὅτι χρησέον μὲν πασαις ταις ἀρμονιαῖς, ἔ τὸν αὐτὸν δὲ τροπὴν πασαις χρησέον· ἀλλὰ πρὸς μὲν τὴν παιδείαν, ταις ἠθικωτάταις· πρὸς δὲ ἀκροασιν [f. ΚΑΘΑΡΣΙΝ], ἑτέρων χειρηργημάτων, καὶ ταις πρακτικαῖς, καὶ ταις ἐνθουσιαστικαῖς. ὁ γὰρ περὶ ἑνίας συμβαίνει παθεῖν ψυχᾶς ἰσχυρῶς, τὸτο ἐν πασαις ὑπάρχει· τῷ δὲ ἥττον διαφέρει καὶ τῷ μᾶλλον. οἶον, ΕΛΕΟΣ ΚΑΙ ΦΟΒΟΣ. ἐτι δ’ ἐνθε-σιασμῷ· καὶ γὰρ ὑπὸ ταύτης τῆς κινήσεως κατακωχίμοι τινες εἰσιν. ἐκ δὲ τῶν ἱερῶν μελῶν ὄρωμεν τετῆς, ὅταν χρησῶνται τοῖς ἐξοργιάζεσι τὴν ψυχὴν μελεσι, καθισταμένους, ὥσπερ ΙΑΤΡΕΙΑΣ τυχόντας καὶ ΚΑΘΑΡΣΕΩΣ. ταῦτο δὴ τὸτο ἀναγκαῖον πάσχειν καὶ τῆς ἐλεημονας, καὶ τῆς φοβητικῆς, καὶ τῆς ἰλως παθητικῆς· τῆς δ’ ἄλλης, καθ’ ὅσον ἐπιβάλλει τῶν τοιούτων ἕκαστῳ, καὶ πασι
 B 4 γιγνεσθαι

γυγνισθαι ΤΙΝΑ ΚΑΘΑΡΣΙΝ, και πεφιλισθαι μεθ' ἡδονης. [p. 458. Ed. Duval.]*

In

* This passage may be considered, alone, as a complete refutation of an opinion published some years ago by Professor Moor, of Glasgow, on the subject discussed in this note. He asserts, that by παθήματα Aristotle does not mean passions, but sufferings, or calamities; and that the sense of δι' ἐλεος και φόβου περαινουσα την των τοιςτων παθηματων καθαρσιν, is—effecting, or endeavouring to effect, “the removal of such calamities,” (i. e. as are represented in Tragedy,) “by means of exciting the passions of pity and terror.” But the sense, both of καθαρσις, and of παθήματα, is fixed, beyond dispute, by the passage I have quoted, where pity, terror, and other passions, are clearly mentioned as the objects of the καθαρσις, or purgation. The Professor also asserts, that the word, which Aristotle uniformly uses to express the passions, is πάθος, and that by παθήματα is “always meant sufferings, or calamities.” This is a mistake. Πάθος is continually used by Aristotle in the sense of sufferings; and παθήματα sometimes, though less frequently, in the sense of passions. So Rhet. II. 22. p. 574. C. και περι των ἡθων, και ΠΑΘΗΜΑΤΩΝ—“concerning manners and passions.” See also, Moral. Eudem. II. 2. p. 205. B. where πάθος and παθήματα are used synonymously. Many other instances, I make no doubt, are to be found in Aristotle’s works.

I should add, that I take my account of this explanation, and the arguments by which it is supported, from the Monthly Review, vol. xxx. p. 65; not having been able to procure the pamphlet itself, of which the title is—“On the end of Tragedy, according to Aristotle: an Essay, in two parts, &c.—By James Moor, LL.D. Prof. of Greek in the Univ. of Glasgow.”—It is mentioned again, with approbation, in the 64th vol. of the same Review, p. 556.

In this passage, for ἀχροασιν I have no doubt that we should read καθαρισιν. The similitude of the words is sufficient to account for the mistake of the transcriber; and the purport of the whole passage seems to require the correction. For Aristotle is here shewing, in what manner the three different kinds of melody were to be applied to the different purposes, which he had just enumerated: πρὸς ΜΕΝ τὴν ΠΑΙΔΕΙΑΝ, ταῖς ἡθικ. πρὸς ΔΕ τὴν ΚΑΘΑΡΣΙΝ,—ταῖς πρακτικαῖς, &c. The opposition is clear. And so, afterwards, a third purpose is mentioned—πρὸς ΑΝΑΠΙΑΤΕΙΝ. [p. 459.] The words immediately following, ἐν τῶν χρηρῶντων, probably contributed to this mistake. They allude to his doctrine, in the preceding chapter, that boys should not be allowed to practise or perform, themselves, any but the simplest kind of Music, and upon the simplest and easiest instruments, such as were not διόμενα χρηρῶντος ἐπιστήμης. [p. 457.] But this was not the character either of the active and enthusiastic melodies, of which he here speaks, or of the instrument used in the accompaniment of them^d.

I shall now give what I think a fair and literal version of the passage. - - -

“ It is manifest then, that all the different kinds “ of melodies are to be made use of; not all, “ however,

^d The Am®. See ibid. p. 459 and 457. And the 1st vol. of this Work, p. 225, note^o.

“ however, for the same purpose. For education,
 “ the most moral kind should be used: for “ PURGATION, both the active, and the enthu- “ siastic;—performed, however, by others. For “ those passions, which in some minds are violent, “ exist, more or less, in all; such as PITY, for “ example, and TERROR: and, again, enthusiasm; “ for with this passion some men are subject to “ be possessed: but when the sacred melodies, “ intended to compose the mind after the cele“ bration of the orgic rites, have been performed, “ we see those men become calm and sedate, as “ if they had undergone a kind of purgation, or “ cure. And the case must necessarily be the “ same with those who are particularly liable to “ be moved by PITY, or TERROR, or any other “ passion; and with other men, as far as they “ are under the influence of any such passion;
 “ all of them experiencing a sort of PURGATION,
 “ and PLEASURABLE RELIEF.”

From this passage, though far enough, I am sensible, from being perfectly clear and explicit, two things, at least, may, I think, be confidently deduced.—1. That whatever be the meaning of the term καθαρσις, or purgation, here, must also be its meaning in the treatise on Poetry; since to that work Aristotle refers for a fuller explanation of it. The only difference is, that here, the term is applied to the effect of imitative Music; there, to that of imitative Poetry; of that species of it, however, which depended, we know, upon Music, for a very considerable part of its effect. 2. It is plain, that, according to Aristotle's idea, pity was to be purged by pity, terror by terror, &c.; contrary to the second of the two explanations above-mentioned. For Aristotle is here expressly speaking of the use of enthusiastic Music applied προς καθαρσιν; and he says, that men, agitated by enthusiasm, were purged or relieved from that enthusiasm by the ἱερα μελη, which were plainly enthusiastic melodies; i.e. such as imitated, or expressed, that passion, and were intended to calm the mind, which had been violently agitated and inflamed; not, as M. Batteux understands, by the sudden opposition of Doric, grave, and moral strains, [p. 280, 1.] but by pleasurable indulgence of the same passion in imitative Music: καφιζισθαί μεθ' ἡδονης. These melodies were, probably, such as those of Olympus, which had been mentioned just before [cap. 5.] and of which Aristotle says, that they, Ὁμολογουμένως ΠΟΙΕΙ ΤΑΣ ΨΥΧΑΣ ΕΝΘΟΥΣΙΑΣΤΙΚΑΣ. Indeed, from the manner, in which the Music of Olympus is spoken of by Plato, and Plutarch, there is great reason to suppose, that these "sacred melodies" were no other, than the very melodies of that musician^f.

With

^f — τας νομας τας ἁρμονικας ἐξενεγκεν [sc. Olympus.] εἰς τὴν Ἑλλάδα, οἷς νυν χρῶνται οἱ Ἕλληνες ἐν ταῖς ἐορταῖς τῶν θεῶν. Plut. de Mus. p. 2076. ed. H. S. See also Plato in the Minos, pag. 318.

With respect to this καθαρσις itself, Aristotle by no means gives us in this passage, nor, indeed, professes to give us, a full and satisfactory explanation of it. Some light, however, he has flung upon it by the expressions, ιατρικα, and καφιζεσθαι μεθ' ἡδονης, which he uses as synonymous to καθαρσις: "Purgation, cure, pleasurable relief." The Abbé Batteux understands Aristotle to mean no more by this, than that the passions of terror or pity, which, when excited by real objects, are simply painful, or, at least, have a predominant mixture of pain, are, by imitation, and the consciousness of fiction, purged or purified from this alloy of the disagreeable and painful, and converted, on the whole, into an emotion of delight. His meaning may be clearer in his own words. Aristotle, he says, had established it as a principle—" Que les objets désagréables " plaisent quand ils sont imités, même lorsqu'ils " le sont dans la plus grande vérité". En appliquant ce principe à la Tragedie, il s'ensuit, que c'est l'imitation qui est la cause du plaisir qu'elle produit, et non la nature des objets imités, puisque ces objets sont par eux-mêmes désagréables. C'est donc l'imitation qui ôte à " la

pag. 318. ed. Serr. where he says of the melodies of Marsyas and Olympus, that they are, ΘΕΙΟΤΑΤΑ, καὶ μὲν KINEI.—See Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 359, &c.

* Cap. iv. Transl. Part I. Sect. 5.

" la terreur et à la pitié l'accessoire désagréable
 " qu'elles ont dans la réalité : c'est l'imitation qui " opere la purgation Tragique, en mettant les
 " malheurs imités à la place des malheurs réels,
 " et en séparant par ce moyen ce que la pitié et
 " la terreur ont d'agréable, comme emotions,
 " d'avec ce qu'elles ont de désagréable, quand
 " elles sont jointes à l'idée de malheurs réels ¹."

This account, which is exactly Fontenelle's solution of the pleasure arising from Tragic emotion¹, is liable to a difficulty not easily, I think, surmounted. It confines Aristotle's meaning to the present pleasure of the emotion; it supposes all the purgation to consist merely in rendering the feeling of the passion pleasurable;—not in any good effect which the habit of such emotion may produce, in correcting, refining, or moderating, such passions, when excited by real objects. Now, though it must be confessed, that Aristotle has not, in that short and professedly imperfect explanation given of the καθαρσις in the passage adduced, said any thing directly pointing to such effect, yet, I think, the whole turn and cast of his expression expression is such, as leads one naturally to conclude, that it was his meaning. The phrase, καφιζισθαι μεθ' ἡδονης, does indeed appear to express the present effect only; but I can scarce conceive, that he would have used such a word as καθαρις, and still less, ΙΑΤΡΕΙΑ, without a view to something beyond the pleasurable relief or vent of the moment; especially, in a chapter, where he is professedly enumerating and examining the uses of music^k. Farther, the words, ἱλεημονας, φοβητικας, παθητικας, confirm this idea; being all words expressive of habitual excess, requiring correction and moderation^l.

¹ Principes de la Literature, tom. iii. p. 81.—I refer to that work, because the author appears to me to have explained himself there with more clearness and precision than in the note on his translation of Aristotle in the Quatre Poétiques.

¹ Reflect. sur la Poétique, Sect. 36.—Hume's Essay on Tragedy.

But, what still more strongly opposes the Abbé Batteux's idea, is, that Aristotle is here, as Heinsius and others have well observed, evidently combating the doctrine of Plato, whose great objection to Tragedy, was, that it feeds and inflames the passions^m. It could be no answer to this, to allege, that the feeling of passion excited by Tragic imitation is pleasurable; for this is so far from being called in question by Plato, that it is the very foundation of his objection. The pleasure

^k —ἐ μίας ἐνεκεν ΩΦΕΛΕΙΑΣ τη μεσση χρησθαι δειν.—
Ubi supra.

^l The same thing seems implied in the word καταρχημοι; and in the expression—ὁ γὰρ περὶ ἑνας συμβαίνει παθῶ ψυχας ΙΣΧΥΡΩΣ—.

^m ΤΡΕΦΕΙ γὰρ ταυτα, he says, in his figurative language, ΑΡΔΟΥΣΑ, δειν ΑΥΧΜΕΙΝ.—De Repub. lib. x. p. 606. D.

pleasure afforded by such Poetry is allowed by him in its utmost extent^a. "Let its advocates," he says, "undertake to shew us that it is not merely pleasurable, but USEFUL also, and we will lend a favourable ear to their apology; for we shall surely be gainers by the conviction^b." Now Aristotle, if I understand him rightly, undertakes this apology, and points out the utility required. And no one, I think, can reasonably doubt, that such was his intention, who has attended to the following passage of Plato:—
ἀπολαυὴν ἀνάγκη ἀπο τῶν ἀλλοτριῶν εἰς τὰ οἰκεία·
ΘΡΕΨΑΝΤΑ γὰρ ἐν ἰκάνοις ΙΣΧΥΡΟΝ ΤΟ ΕΛΑΕΙ-ΝΟΝ, ἔραδιον ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις ΠΑΘΕΣΙ ΚΑΤΕΧΕΙΝ^c.
For, to this objection, there cannot well be a more direct and pointed answer, than Aristotle's assertion, as usually understood—that the habit of indulging the emotions of pity, or terror, in the fictitious

^a Ibid. p. 607, C. D. et passim.

^b Δοίμεν δὲ γε πρὸς αὐτὴν καὶ τοὺς προσηγορίας αὐτῆς — λόγον περὶ αὐτῆς εἶπεν, ὡς ἔστι μόνον ἩΔΕΙΑ ἀλλὰ καὶ ΩΦΕΛΙΜΗ πρὸς τὰς πόλεις καὶ τὸν βίον τὸν ἀνθρώπινον ἐστὶ, καὶ εὐμενὲς ἀνυπομονεῖα. κερδανόμεν γὰρ πρὸς αὐτὴν, ἐὰν μὴ μόνον ἡδύα φανῇ, ἀλλὰ ΚΑΙ ΩΦΕΛΙΜΗ.—Ibid.

^c Ibid. 606. B.—"The habit of indulging our passions in the concerns of others, will, of necessity, bring on the same habitual indulgence in those which relate to ourselves: for he, who has nourished and strengthened to excess the passion of pity, for example, by habitual sympathy, in the misfortunes of other men, will not find it easy to restrain the same kind of feelings in his own."

fictitious representations of Tragedy, tends, on the contrary, to moderate and refine those passions, when they occur in real life.

But though the Abbé Batteux's idea of this purgation appears to me by no means to be the whole, it must, I think, be admitted as a part, and an essential part, of Aristotle's meaning. For the effect depends, not merely, as some commentators seem to suppose¹, on the having our passions frequently and habitually excited, but, on the having them so excited by fictitious representation. Pity and terror frequently excited by such objects and such events in real life, as the imitations of the Tragic scene set before us, would rather tend to produce apathy than moderation. Nature would struggle against such violent and painful agitation, and the heart would become callous in its own defence. We must be insensible, that we might not be wretched. It is far otherwise with fictitious passion. There, the emotion, though often violent in spite of the consciousness of fiction, is always, more or less, delightful. We indulge it, as one of the first of pleasures; and the effect of that indulgence, frequently repeated, is perhaps, that, while it moderates real passion by the frequency of similar impressions, it, at the same time, cherishes such sympathetic emotions, in their proper and useful degree, degree, by the delicious feelings which never fail to accompany the indulgence of them in imitative representation.

¹ Heinsius De Trag. Constit. cap. ii. — Harris On Music, &c. ch. v. note ^c.

The passions of savages, or of men in the first rude stages of civilization, are ferocious and painful. They pity, or they fear, either violently, or not at all. With them, there is hardly any medium between ungovernable agitation, and absolute insensibility.—Suppose such a people to have access, like the Athenians, to theatrical representations, and to have their passions kept in frequent and pleasurable exercise by fictitious distress; the consequence, I think, would be, that, by degrees, they would come to have more feeling, and less perturbation. Instead of sympathetic emotions rarely excited, painfully felt, and soon extinguished, they would gradually acquire a calm, lasting, and useful habit of general tenderness and sensibility. In polished society, where the passions are accustomed to be indulged in fiction, either in the theatre, or by reading, and the pain is converted, on the whole, into one strong and delightful feeling, by the charms of imitation, Poetry, Music, aided by the indistinct consciousness of fiction—these passions, even when excited by real objects, seem to retain, (at least, in cases where we are not too closely touched,) some tincture of the same pleasurable emotion, which attended them, when raised by works of imagination; they are more moderately and agreeably felt, more easily governed, and more gentle and polished in their expressions.

Such appears to me, on the whole, to be the most probable explanation of Aristotle's meaning: I must, at least, confess it to be the only reasonable meaning, that I am able to discover. How far it is true, and founded on solid observation, is another question, which I willingly submit to the philosophical and thinking part of my readers.

I cannot omit to observe, that the short explanation given by MILTON, in the introduction to his Samson Agonistes, appears to coincide exactly, as far as it goes, with my idea of the passage.—
 “ Tragedy, as it was anciently composed, hath “ been ever held the gravest, moralest, and most “ profitable of all other Poems: therefore said
 “ by Aristotle to be of power, by raising pity, “ and fear or terror, to purge the mind of those “ and such like passions; that is, to temper and “ reduce them to just measure, with a kind of “ delight, stirred up by reading or seeing those “ passions well imitated.”

One thing should be added. Aristotle's assertion must be considered relatively to his own times, and nation. He speaks of the effects of Tragedy on the people of Athens, who, as reading was then no popular occupation, had scarce any opportunity of indulging fetitious emotion, but at the Theatre, and who, we know, were there accustomed accustomed to indulge it perpetually. With us, the case is widely different. The doctrine, therefore, of Aristotle, that "Tragedy purges the passions," translated, if I may so speak, into modern truth, would perhaps amount only to this—that the habitual exercise of the passions by works of imagination in general, of the serious and pathetic kind, (such as Tragedies, Novels, &c.) has a tendency to soften and refine those passions, when excited by real objects in common life.

† See Diss. I. vol. i. p. 62, &c.

NOTE 46.

P. 116. IN SOME PARTS METRE ALONE IS EMPLOYED, IN OTHERS MELODY.

A passage of very tantalizing brevity. By ~~the~~ ^{metre} MONON, are we to understand, according to the obvious and literal meaning of the expression, that in some parts of Tragedy the verse was merely recited, spoken, as in modern Tragedy?—This contradicts what, by many writers, has been considered as a fact thoroughly established, that the Greek Tragedy was accompanied by musical instruments, and was therefore strictly musical, throughout:—for as to the dreams of the Abbé Du Bos, Rousseau, and others, about a noted declamation, a declamation accompanied by Music, yet not sung—this is too manifest an absurdity to stand in need of confutation. If, as Rousseau says, it is "impossible to understand

.c. 2

" what

“ what the antients have said about their theatrical declamation, without supposing this^a,” would it not be better to say, at once, that we do not understand it, than to explain it into impossibilities? As for the systematic Abbé Du Bos, he was set upon proving his point; and he proves it like a man resolved to prove it, by wresting all sorts of authors to his purpose, and translating them as he pleased^b. All we know clearly, is, that the antient drama was accompanied, (in part, at least,) by musical instruments. I conclude, confidently, that since the instruments could not speak, the actors must sing: that their declamation must certainly have been, strictly speaking, musical, however simple; the chanting of the simplest plain chant, being as truly Music, i.e. as essentially distinct from speech, as the most refined melody of a modern opera^c.

If, then, the Greek Tragedy had a musical accompaniment throughout, it must have been sung throughout. But here, Aristotle says, as plainly as words can say it, that in some parts of Tragedy, “ metre only” was employed:—δια ΜΕΤΡΩΝ ἐν τῷ ΜΟΝΟΝ: that is, as it is necessarily implied, without the two other ἰδυσματα,
OR

^a Dict. de Musique, Art. OPERA.

^b For a refutation of Du Bos, the reader may see Condillac's Essai sur l'orig. des connoiss. humaines— tome iii. ch. 3.

^c See Diss. II. vol. i. p. 78. note ^a.

or seasonings, of Tragic language, just mentioned, melody and rhythm^d.

Some commentators, I know, endeavour to evade the force of this expression, by saying, that Aristotle means, by δια μετρον μονον, only the noted declamation, which, being a sort of recitative, was not regarded as strictly musical, nor denominated μελος^e. And in support of this, it is alleged, that the word λεξις, speech, is applied by him afterwards in a similar manner^f; as λεγισθαι is also by Plutarch, who talks of “ some of the “ Iambics being spoken with an accompaniment, “ and others sung.” as we sometimes say of a singer, that he speaks recitative well. But all this, I confess, does not satisfy me. It is one thing, to apply occasionally the word λεξις or λεγισθαι, in this comparative way, to such kind of singing as most resembles speech, and another, to say roundly, that some parts of Tragedy made use of metre, or verse, only; and that too, immediately after having fixed the exclusive sense of μονον, by enumerating the three ἡδυσματα of Tragic diction, which he asserts to be separately used in different parts,

^d Λεγω δὲ ἡδυσμετον μετ' ῥυθμον, τον ἔχοντα ῥυθμον, καὶ ἁρμονίαν, καὶ μετρον. Το δὲ, χωρὶς τῶν εἰδῶν, τὰ διὰ ΜΕΤΡΩΝ ΕΝΙΑ ΜΟΝΟΝ περαινέσθαι——

^e So M. Batteux.

^f See ch. xii.—ΛΕΞΙΣ ὅλη ΧΟΡΟΣ.

^g Dial. de Mus. p. 2090. ed. H. S. — Τα μὲν λεγέσθαι παρὰ τῶν κρησιν, τὰ δὲ ἀδιδέσθαι.

parts, i. e. $\rho\upsilon\theta\mu\omicron\varsigma$, $\acute{\alpha}\rho\mu\omicron\nu\alpha$, $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\omicron\nu$ ¹,— RHYTHM, MELODY, and METRE. They who dispute this meaning, must at least, I think, allow that if it had been the meaning, Aristotle could not well have expressed it with more precision. How can $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\omicron\nu$ here be taken in the loose and comparative sense contended for, when, in the very words immediately preceding, it is carefully limited to its strict and proper sense, by being expressly discriminated from melody, as well as from rhythm?

But after all, the fact, that the Greek Tragedy was sung throughout, though often asserted, has not yet been proved; nor do I think that it can be proved; at least, by any passage of antient authors, that I have seen adduced to prove it. The Abbé Vatri, in a dissertation, Sur la recitation des Tragedies anciennes, undertook to prove, in form, that the Greek Tragedies were sung, “d’un bout à l’autre,” like our operas. But how does he prove this?—by proving, what indeed is is easily proved¹, that a part of the Iambics, or the dialogue, was sung, and then by taking it for granted, that the antients could not possibly have endured so barbarous a custom, as the mixture of speech and singing in the same piece. “ Il ne “ paroît pas qu’on puisse douter que ces cantiques

¹ The reading in all the MSS. is, $\rho\upsilon\theta\mu\omicron\varsigma$, $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\acute{\alpha}\rho\mu\omicron\nu\alpha$, $\kappa\alpha\iota$ MEΛΟΣ. On comparing this passage with Aristotle’s other enumerations of the three means of imitation in cap. i. especially at the end of it, where Tragedy is mentioned as using all those means, $\kappa\alpha\tau\alpha$ $\mu\epsilon\tau\epsilon\omicron\nu$, i. e. $\rho\upsilon\theta\mu\omicron\varsigma$, $\kappa\alpha\iota$ $\mu\epsilon\lambda\eta$ (which is synonymous to $\acute{\alpha}\rho\mu\omicron\nu\alpha$ elsewhere,) $\kappa\alpha\iota$ METΡΩ, no one, I think, can entertain any degree of doubt, as to the truth of Victorius’s emendation, $\kappa\alpha\iota$ METPON.

 “ ne se chantassent; mais de cela même je crois “ pouvoir conclurre, que tout le reste se chantoit, “ quoique différemment; car le bon sens, et ce “ que les anciens nous disent, nous conduit à “ penser que leur recitation étoit partout de “ même nature, et qu’elle ne se bigarroit point, “ tantôt d’une simple declamation, et tantôt d’un
 “ chant musical². ”

By the same presumptive mode of arguing, the Abbé might also have proved, a priori, that the Greeks could not possibly have been guilty of the modern barbarous bigarrure of serious and ludicrous, in their Tragic drama. But the first Greek Tragedy he had opened would probably have overturned his reasoning¹.

A thorough discussion of all the passages of antient authors, that throw any light upon this question, relative to the dramatic representations of the Greeks, would draw me much too far beyond

¹ The 30th and 49th of Aristotle’s Harmonic Prob. Sect. 19. are, alone, sufficient proofs of this point.

² Mem. de l’Acad. Roy. des Inscriptions, &c. tome II. p. 343, scilicet.

¹ See NOTE 33—in the 1st vol.

beyond my bounds. I must content myself with pointing out (for I think it has not been observed) the stubborn difficulty which this passage of Aristotle appears to me to throw in the way of the common opinion upon this subject; and with hazarding a merely hypothetical conjecture, that, if, as Aristotle seems plainly to say, some part of the Greek Tragedy was spoken, like our Tragic declamation, without any musical accompaniment, it was, most probably, that part of the dialogue, which, as I have before observed, in NOTE 33, is, in every Tragedy, easily distinguished from the rest, by its being carried on in a sort of quick repartee of verse to verse. As, in this part of the dialogue, we almost constantly find the Tragic tone lowered to a more colloquial pitch, and even approaching frequently to the jocular and burlesque, it seems reasonable to think, that here, if anywhere, the musical accompaniment, and the elevation of lengthened and chanting tones, were withdrawn, and common conversation left to common speech.

But what, again, are we to understand by—καὶ πάλιν ἑτέρα δια μέλεις?—Are we to repeat μονον, and understand Melody alone, without the two other ἡδυσματα, Rhythm and Metre? This cannot be. For though we may strip the Tragic language of melody and of rhythm, or, in other words, of Music, we cannot strip it of metre. The ancients most certainly did not admit prose into into their Tragedies; and as little can we conceive them to have set prose to Music^m.

Dacier, and some other commentators, understand by μελ here, Music, including rhythm. This sense of the word is certainly warrantable; but it can hardly be the sense here: for, surely, an instance, in which all the three ἡδυσματα were used, (as they must be, if metre be indispensable, and μελ imply rhythm and melody;) would be but a strange illustration of the ΧΟΡΙΣ ἰκασ των ἰδων κ. τ. αλ.

I do not see what remains, but, that we take μελ here in its most restrained sense, as distinct from rhythm, or time, and synonymous to ἄρμονια; that sense, in which Aristotle had used it before, in his first chapterⁿ. And if we do this, we must necessarily,

^m The reader will observe that Aristotle is expressly speaking of the ἡδυσματα of Tragic speech or language: λεγω δε ἡδυσμενον μεν ΛΟΓΟΝ τον ἔχοντα ῥυθμον, &c.—Words, therefore, are equally implied in all these ἡδυσματα, and, consequently, Music alone—i. e. instrumental Music, is here entirely out of the question.

ⁿ — ῥυθμῳ και ΜΕΛΕΙ και μετρῳ, answering to his first division, ῥυθμῳ και λογῳ και ΑΡΜΟΝΙΑΙ.

The word ΜΕΛΟΣ, it may be useful to observe, occurs in three different musical senses. 1. Sometimes, as here, and in the Greek writers on Music, in the same sense as ἄρμονια—i. e. melody, abstracted from rhythm, or time. Thus, Aristides Quintilianus, p. 32, and see p. 7, his account of μελωδία, &c. 2. Sometimes, for air, or measured melody; as in the definition of Bacchius, p. 19. (Ed. Méib.) 3. Sometimes it is used as equivalent to song, including melody, necessarily, I think, understand, that some parts of the dialogue were sung without rhythm: I mean, without musical rhythm, or time, though certainly not without that poetical or prosodic rhythm, by which in reciting verse, and, indeed, even in the most familiar conversation, the syllabic quantity must have been relatively, at least, observed, though not, I presume, with the inflexibility of musical measure, nor with such a rigorous equality of long to long, and short to short, as is essential to the execution of what is properly called Music, and as I suppose to have been observed in the choral odes*. Thus the dialogue of the Greek Tragedy will appear to have been not improperly compared melody, rhythm, and words. Thus Plato—το ΜΕΛΟΣ ἐκ τριῶν ἐστὶ συγκαείμενον, λόγῳ τε, καὶ ἀρμονίᾳ, καὶ ῥυθμῷ. Rep. iii. p. 398. D. In another place, however, he uses it in the first and narrowest sense, for mere melody: ΜΕΛΟΣ δ' αὖ ΚΑΙ ῥυθμὸν ἀνευ ῥημάτων. De Leg. ii. p. 669.—This third, and fullest sense of the word is what A. Quintil. expresses by melos τελειόν. p. 28.

* This has been well remarked by Dr. Burney, Hist. of Mus. vol. i. p. 161. "The melody of antient declamation," &c.—M. Burette goes so far as to suppose, that no strict rhythm was admitted even in the choral part of the antient Tragedy. His authority is the following passage of Plutarch's Dial. de Mus.—τὸ μὲν χρηματικὸν γένει, καὶ ΠΥΘΜΩ, τραγῳδία μὲν ἔδεικτο καὶ τήμερον πεχρηταί. p. 2084. ed. H. S. But the text here is evidently corrupt. The name of some particular species of rhythm is probably omitted. See Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscript. tome xix. p. 427, octavo.

compared to our recitative; differing from the chorus, as our recitative differs from the airs, both in the absence of strict time, and in the kind of melody, which was also, as mere melody, less musical than the choral melody, and more imitative of speech, as well as of action^p. Whether the monologues, or long speeches—the μακρὰί φρονιμαί, as Plato calls them^q—were performed in the same way, as the rest of the dialogue, or, as it has been imagined, were distinguished by being more measured and musical, is a point not easily cleared up. The passages commonly appealed to for this purpose, from the grammarians Diomedes and Donatus, about the Cantica of the Roman Comedy, I look upon as a very frail foundation of any conclusion with respect to the Greek Tragedy^r. The passage of Plutarch above quoted, note^s, furnishes the strongest support I know of for such a distinction. For, if by “spoken or recited to an instrumental accompaniment,” (τα μεν [sc. των ιαμβειων] λεγεςθαι παρα την χρυσιν) Plutarch meant, as I think he must mean, sung in recitative, not literally spoken, (for how could that admit of a musical accompaniment?) then, ἀδισθι, which is opposed

^p See Aristotle's Problems, Sect. 19. Prob. xv. and xlix.

^q De Rep. x. p. 605.

^r See the Abbé Du Bos, Reflex. sur la Poes. &c. vol. iii. Sect. 11, &c.—This writer's explanation of the passage of Aristotle that we have been considering, is worth the reader's inspection, as a perfect model of misrepresentation, absurdity, and blundering.

opposed to it, must of course imply, not mere singing as opposed to speech, but a more musical and measured melody.

NOTE 47.

P. 117. THE MEANING OF MELOPOEIA IS OBVIOUS - - - .

I have ventured to depart from the common interpretation, by understanding the word δυναμις, here, to mean, not the power, and effect, of the Melopœia itself, but the power, i. e. the meaning of the term. Aristotle is here, as usual, explaining the terms he had made use of. It was directly to his purpose to say, as a reason for omitting a definition in this instance, that the meaning of the word was well known; but not at all to his purpose, to say—"I need not explain the word, because the "power and effect of the thing signified by it, "(that is, of Music,) is well known."

Dacier is amusing here. He wonders what could induce the Greeks to make Music a part of their drama; and at last, "après bien des recherches," he discovers one principal cause to have been this—that they had very musical ears; but he does not discover the cause of his own wonder, which, in all probability, was, that he had not,

NOTE 48.

P. 118. OR DELIVERING A GENERAL SENTIMENT.

In the Rhetoric, Aristotle defines γνωμη by καθολε ἀποφανσις. [Lib. ii. cap. xxi. p. 572.] Thus below, in this chapter, for ἀποφαινονται γνωμη, his first expression, we have, καθολε ἀποφαινονται.—This has been loosely and inaccurately rendered in all the translations I have seen, except those of Castelvetro and Goulston.

NOTE 49.

P. 118. THESE PARTS --- HAVE BEEN EMPLOYED BY MOST POETS.

Locus, as the critics say, conclamatus. Time is too precious to be wasted in the support, or refutation, of random conjectures upon a passage of such desperate corruption.—How can ἐκ ὀλιγοι, “not a few,” be tortured into, “all,” or, “almost all?” Yet so Dacier, Batteux, Goulston, &c. On the other hand, if fairly translated, “not a few Poets have made use of these parts,” how strangely it will follow—“for EVERY Tragedy has ‘them all!’”—And how is the ὡς εἶπεν, to be applied? to ἐκ ὀλιγοι, or, to εἰδισι?

In the midst of these difficulties, all I could do was to make my version consistent with itself;
faithful

faithful to the original, I could not make it, without making it nonsensical.

Those commentators, who apply the ὡς εἶπεν to the word ἰδέσθαι, seem favoured by ch. xii. where, speaking of the same essential parts of Tragedy, Aristotle says—ὅς μιν ὧς εἰάβει δὲ χρῆσθαι.

NOTE 50.

P. 119. THE SUPREME GOOD ITSELF --- IS ACTION, NOT QUALITY.

See Ethic. Nicom. I. 5, 7, 8. ed. Wilk. & Mag. Moral. I. 4. p. 149, 150. ed. Duval.

NOTE 51.

P. 119. THE TRAGEDIES OF MOST MODERN POETS HAVE THIS DEFECT.

This receives illustration from what Aristotle presently after says, of "the rhetorical manner" "prevailing in the Poets of his time:" οἱ δὲ νῦν, ῥητορικῶς. cap. vi: and from his observation, at the close of cap. xxiv. [Transl. Part III. Sect. 6.] that "the manners and sentiments are only obscured by too splendid a diction."

What he has here said of the recent Tragedies of his time, may perhaps be said, in general, of our modern Tragedies, compared with those of Shakespeare. The truth, I believe, is, that the Tragedy of a refined and polished age will always have less more than that of ruder times, because it will have more dignity; more of that uniform and level elevation, which excludes strong traits of character, and the simple, unvarnished delineation of the manners. Indeed, what the Greeks denominated ῥῆμα, is the peculiar province of Comedy, and is seldom to be found in Tragedy, except in that stage of its progress, when it is not yet thoroughly and distinctly separated from Comedy; from the imitation of common life, and natural manners. Such are the Tragedies of Shakspeare; and such, as I have before ventured to suggest, are those of Euripides in particular, which, in proportion as they have less dignity, have more ῥῆμα, than the Tragedies of Sophocles. But in neither of them, nor, probably, even in those very Poets here censured by Aristotle, was the “language of Poets,” substituted for “the language of men,” as it is almost constantly in the French Tragedy, and, too often, in our own Tragedies of the French school.

* Illud (ῥῆμα) Comædiæ, hoc (παρά) Tragædiæ, simile.—Quintil. p. 302, ed. Gib.

^b — ἀπλῶν, says Demetrius, καὶ ἀποσιττον, το ῥῆμα. Sect. 28.—And see Longinus, Sect. 9, where he very justly calls the Odyssey, κωμῳδία τις ἡθολογυμένη.

^c “Addison,” says Dr. Johnson in his admirable preface to Shakspeare, “speaks the language of Poets, and “Shakspeare, of men.—The composition refers us “only to the writer; we pronounce the name of Cato, but “we think on Addison.”

NOTE 52.

P. 119. POLYGNOTUS EXCELS IN THE EXPRESSION OF THE MANNERS.

I see not the smallest reason for the substitution of ἀγαθων, for ἀγαθῶν, which is the reading, we are told, of all the MSS. What Aristotle had said before of Polygnotus, cap. ii.—ὅτι κρητταὶ εἰκάζει—seems not to afford the slightest ground for alteration here. [See Mr. Winstanley's ed. p. 281.] Painters are compared in very different points of view, in these two passages: there, as imitating good or bad, serious or ridiculous, elevated or low, objects: here, only as expressing, or not expressing, manners. It was directly to Aristotle's purpose to say, that Polygnotus was a "good manner-painter;" (ἀγαθῶν ἡθοῦραφῶν)—not at all to his purpose, (besides the awkwardness of the expression itself,) to say, that he was "a manner-painter of good men:" (ἀγαθων ἡθοῦραφῶν).

NOTE 53.

P. 120. JUST AS IN PAINTING, &c.

I hope I shall not much shock even the most conscientious adherents to the established inaccuracy and authentic blunders of antient manuscripts, by having ventured to adopt here the transposition first proposed, I believe, by Castelvetro, Castelvetro *. I can only desire those readers, who may be alarmed at my temerity, to read the passage—παραπλησιον γαρ ἐστὶ—κ.τ.αλλ.—το, εἰκονα,—first, where it stands in all the editions; and then, where I have placed it, immediately after the words—ἔχουσα δὲ μῦθον καὶ συγασιν πραγμάτων.—If this experiment alone be not sufficient to convince them of the propriety, or, rather, the necessity, of the transposition, I despair of the success of any arguments I am able to produce in the support of it. To me, I confess, it is among those things that are too evident for proof.

NOTE 54.

P. 120. ADVENTURERS IN TRAGIC WRITING ARE SOONER ABLE, &c. - - -

Aristotle argues here upon a principle rather rhetorical and popular, than philosophical—that, which infers superior worth from superior difficulty and rarity:—τὸ χαλεπωτερον καὶ σπανιωτερον, μειζον, (sc. αγαθον,) as he lays it down in his Rhetoric, lib. i. cap. vii. p. 529.

Lord

* Poetica d' Aristotele, &c. p. 142. Ed é da sapere, che di sotto si truovano in luogo non convenevole queste parole, παραπλησιον—εικονα. Le quali parole debbono seguire prossimamente dopo πραγμάτων, &c. Heinsius, too, saw the necessity of the transposition, but appears to me to have, in a great measure, destroyed the propriety of it, by inserting the passage, not immediately after πραγμάτων, but after ἀναγνωρισεις, in the next sentence. See his note, in Goulston's ed. or the Ox. ed. 1780.

Lord Bacon, in his Essay On Gardens, uses the same argument, and almost in Aristotle's words, with respect, to the superiority of gardening to architecture: "A man shall ever see, that when "ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to "build stately SOONER than to garden finely; as
 "if gardening were the greater perfection."

The truth, however, of the fact here asserted by Aristotle, appears, not only from the earlier dramatic Poets of every nation, but from the defects of plots in general, whether Dramatic or Epic; and from the rarity of those dramatic fables, for which the Poet has trusted entirely to his own invention, without recourse to history, or novels, or the productions of other dramatists*.—"En general, il y
 "a plus de pieces bien dialoguées, que de pieces
 "bien conduites. Le Génie qui dispose les incidents, paroît plus rare que celui qui trouve les "vrais discours. Combien de belles scenes dans "Moliere!—On compte ses dénouemens heureux.—
 "On seroit tenté de croire qu'une drame devroit
 "être l'ouvrage de deux hommes de génie, l'un qui
 "arrangeât, et l'autre qui fit parler."—Diderot, de la Poes. Dram. p. 288.

NOTE 55.

P. 120. TO THIS PART BELONGS, &c. ---

Aristotle is not here defining Διαποια, as his expression, τὸ τοῦ ΕΣΤΙ, seems, at first view, to imply :

* See Harris's Philol. Inq. p. 160.

imply: he is only explaining the subservience of the sentiments to the manners; he is shewing why they are next in rank and importance to the manners; namely, because manners or characters, are, in great part at least, manifested by the sentiments. Dacier's note here is good. "Aristote suit ici "l'ordre naturel. Les sentimens sont pour les "mœurs, ce que les mœurs sont pour l'action. "Comme un Poete tragique ne peut bien imiter "une action, qu'en employant les mœurs, il ne "peut non plus bien marquer les mœurs, que par "le moyen des sentimens; & par consequent les "sentimens tiennent le troisieme rang dans la "Tragedie."

NOTE 56.

P. 120. WHICH, IN THE DIALOGUE, DEPENDS ON THE POLITICAL AND RHETORICAL ARTS.

—Ὅτι, ἐπὶ τῶν λόγων, τῆς πολιτικῆς καὶ ῥητορικῆς ἔργον ἐστίν.—I have not seen the words, ἐπὶ τῶν λόγων, satisfactorily explained. I cannot agree with those commentators, who by λόγοι, here, understand, oratory, prose eloquence, as opposed to Poetry: a sense, indeed, very common, in Aristotle and other writers; but if we adopt it here, how follows—οἱ γὰρ ἀρχαῖοι πολιτικῶς ἐποίησιν λέγοντας? for here, Aristotle evidently speaks of Poets; not of orators, as Dacier renders it. The passage;

then, fairly translated, would stand thus:—"which, (i. e. the choice of proper sentiments,) in "ORATORY, is the business of the political and "rhetorical arts: FOR the antient Tragic Poets "made their characters speak politically," &c. Nothing can well be more incoherent.

ΕΠΙ ΤΩΝ ΛΟΓΩΝ, means, I think,—in the speeches, discourse, or dialogue part of the drama, as distinguished from the choral or lyric part, which had nothing, or comparatively nothing, to do with πρόσωπον or character, and in which the Poet was, of course, to draw his διανοία, or thoughts, principally at least, from different sources; not from the stores of civil wisdom, or rhetorical art, but from those of Religion, Ethics, Mythology, and Poetry. The word λογοί, is clearly used in the same sense, in a passage that presently follows:—διοπερ ἔκ ἔχουσιν πρόσωπα ἐνίοι τῶν ΛΟΓΩΝ—"some of the "speeches, or the dialogue."

NOTE 57.

P. 120-1. FOR THE ANTIENTS MADE THEIR CHARACTERS SPEAK IN THE STYLE OF POLITICAL AND POPULAR ELOQUENCE; BUT NOW, THE RHETORICAL MANNER PREVAILS.

Οἱ μὲν γὰρ ἀρχαίοι ΠΟΛΙΤΙΚΩΣ ἔποιον λεγοντας, οἱ δὲ νυν, ῥητορικῶς.—So Rhet. lib. ii. cap. xxii. p. 573, ΠΟΛΙΤΙΚῶς συλλογισμῶ—a Civil or Oratorical syllogism, as opposed to the strict dialectic syllogism:

syllogism : a distinction which he presently after expresses by, ἀκριβεστερον, and ΜΑΛΑΚΩΤΕΡΟΝ, συλλογισθαι [ibid.] And thus, here, the same term, πολιτικως, is used, to distinguish the popular, and less laboured, though more solid, eloquence of the Senate or the Forum, from the studied and declamatory composition of the professed rhetoricians. A similar use of the word occurs in the passage quoted in NOTE 229, from the Euagoras of Isocrates, where, ὁνομασι ΠΟΛΙΤΙΚΟΙΣ, is plainly synonymous with ὁνομασι ΚΤΡΙΟΙΣ. See also Dion. Halicarn. De Struct. Orat. p. 4. ed. Upton, and Faber's note.

That Aristotle, however, by Politics (ἡ πολιτικη), means only, as Dacier asserts, "l'usage commun, le langage ordinaire des peuples," cannot, surely, be admitted. The force and extent of the term is well known*. "CIVILIS SCIENTIA," says Quintilian, "idem quod SAPIENTIA est,"^b It comprehended all the necessary knowledge of the πολιτικῶν, the vir civilis, the public man. It included, of course, eloquence, or the faculty of public speaking, but that, of a kind very different from the "umbratile genus," as Cicero calls it, of the rhetorical schools^c. What Aristotle says of the

* See Eth. Nicom. lib. i. cap. ii. and iii. and Mag. Moral. lib. i. cap. i.

^b Lib. ii. cap. xv. p. 106. ed. Gibs.

^c Cic. de Or. ii. 15 to 19. where he traces the separation of eloquence from philosophy. The difference of the

the old Tragic Poets, that they made their personages speak like such a man, not like a Rhetorician, cannot be better illustrated than by Quintilian's character of Euripides. "Illud quidem nemo non fateatur necesse est, iis qui se ad agendum comparent, utiliorem longè Euripidem fore. Namque is, et in sermone——magis accedit oratorio generi, et sententiis densus; et in iis quæ à sapientibus tradita sunt, penè ipsis par, et in dicendo ac respondendo cuilibet eorum qui fuerunt IN FORO DISERTI comparandus." [lib. x. cap. i.]

That Dacier, with so precise and clear an expression before his eyes, as, ΕΠΟΙΟΥΝ λεγοντας, should understand this of the antient orators, and roundly pronounce Victorius to be mistaken in applying it to the Poets, seems perfectly unaccountable.

I do not see in this passage any foundation for the refinement of Castelvetro, Dacier, and other commentators, who refer the ειοντα to the political science, and the αρμοττοντα to rhetoric. The word αρμοττοντα, has, I think, the same sense as in cap. xv. and means, such sentiments, or thoughts, as, being adapted to the person speaking, are expressive political and rhetorical styles may be well illustrated, I think, by a comparison of the style of Cicero, (in his Orations,) with that of Demosthenes: for on this subject, I cannot but agree with the remarks of Lord Monboddo, Orig. and Prog. of Lang. vol. iii. p. 184, and vol. ii. Diss. III.

pressive of the manners: for it is in this view, as I before remarked, that Aristotle is here considering the sentiments, or Διανοία. Τα ἰνόντα, as Victorius has observed, is equivalent to τα ὑπαρχόντα; and it was clearly the business of rhetoric (ῥητορικῆς ἔργον,) to teach both the ὑπαρχόντα and the ἀρμολύγοντα. See Rhet. lib. ii. cap. xxii. p. 573, E. and lib. iii. cap. vii. p. 590, D. ed. Duval.

NOTE 58.

P. 121. THERE ARE SPEECHES, THEREFORE, WHICH ARE WITHOUT MANNERS --- AS NOT CONTAINING, &c.

The reading I have followed is, I think, fully authorised, by MSS. and by common sense.—See Mr. Winstanley's note, p. 282.—The Abbé Batteux has given the passage thus, from a MS. (N° 2117,) in the King of France's library. Εἰς δὲ ἥθη μὲν τοιοῦτον, ὃ δῆλοι τὴν προαίρεσιν, ὅποια τις εἶναι· διόπερ ἐκ ἔχουσιν ἥθη ἐνίοι τῶν λόγων, ἐν οἷς ἐκ εἰς δῆλον ὅτι προαίρεται ἢ φευγεί ὁ λεγών.

The common reading stands thus :—Εἰς δὲ ἥθη μὲν τοιοῦτον, ὃ δῆλοι τὴν προαίρεσιν, ὅποια τις εἶναι, ἐν οἷς ἐκ εἰς δῆλον, ἢ προαίρεται, ἢ φευγεί ὁ λεγών· διόπερ ἐκ ἔχουσιν ἥθη ἐνίοι τῶν λόγων.—Which is thus rendered by Mr. Harris : “ MANNERS OR CHARACTER is that which discovers WHAT THE DETERMINATION [of a speaker] will be, in matters, where IT IS NOT YET MANIFEST, whether

" whether he chuses to do a thing, or to avoid it ^a."

Now if this were true, I do not see how there could be any ^{ἡθ}, in any play, after the first discovery of the speaker's character. In the Avare of Moliere, for instance, it is sufficiently manifest from the very first scene in which Harpagon appears, what his avarice will lead him to chuse or to avoid, in any circumstance of the drama. Is there, for that reason, no ^{ἡθ}, no sentiments that mark his character, in any thing he says during the rest of the play?—Nay, more; according to this reading, there can be no ^{ἡθ} at all in any part of that drama: for the προαίρεσις or propensity of the Miser is completely known to every reader or spectator from the very title of the piece.

I know, indeed, that Le Bossu, and others, have given a meaning to this passage, by making Aristotle say, what he certainly does not say—viz. when it is not yet manifest "ex indicio dicentis," what the will, or choice, of the speaker is^b. But if the common reading were right, we might, surely, expect to find the words, ἐν οἷς ἀκ ἐστὶ δηλον, &c. subjoined in other places where he defines the ^{ἡθ}.

^a The words—τὴν προαίρεσιν ὅπουα τις ἐστίν, are not, I think, rendered with Mr. Harris's usual accuracy,—"what the determination of a speaker will be." Προαίρεσις, here, is not particular determination, but that habitual and general propensity which is the cause of particular determinations.

^b Heinsius De Trag. Const. cap. xiv. Le Bossu, Du Poeme Epique, livre iv. ch. 4.

¶ Yet we have nothing like it in cap. xv. initio; nor in the second book of his Rhetoric, where he says only, ἡ δ' ἔχει λόγους, ἐν ὅσοις δαλὴ ἡ προαιρεσις: nor in other passages of the same work, relative to the same subject.

Piccolomini's translation agrees with mine, and is expressed with his usual accuracy.—“Ma il costume nel parlar' é quello, il quale mostra fuora, è apparir fà il volere, e l'election di chi parla. Peroche alcuni parlari si truovano, li quali non hanno costume; come ch' in essi non appaia, e non si manifesti, quello, che ò elegga, ò fugga, con la sua volontà, chi parla.”

NOTE 59.

P. 122. A BEGINNING, IS THAT, &c.

See Harris, Philol. Inq. Part. II. ch. v. These definitions must be understood wholly to refer to the wants, and expectations, of the spectator. He must want nothing before the beginning, nor expect any thing after the end. Nothing, however, is more common than both these defects; than perplexed beginnings, and unsatisfactory conclusions. Henry Fielding, we are told, used “to execrate the man who invented fifth acts.” The inventor of first acts has not given dramatic Poets much less trouble. Most modern plays have, I think, more or less of this intricacy in their beginnings; but but it is especially the case with Comedy. It seems, indeed, by no means easy for a modern comic writer, of whom invention, novelty, variety of incidents, and ingenuity of contrivance, are required, δειναι, as Aristotle well expresses it, ὥσπερ εἰς τὴν χεῖρα, τὴν ἀρχὴν—i. e. to put the beginning fairly into the spectator's hand^b. The spectator, and even the reader, of a new Comedy, is generally employed, during the first scenes, in guessing an ænigma; and when, at length, he comprehends what is going forward, his attention, interest, and sympathy, are disturbed and distracted, by looking back, to understand what he should have understood at first. Hence the advantage which the Tragic Poet, from the notoriety of his subjects, generally possesses over the Comic; and which is so pleasantly described in the fragment preserved by Athenæus from Antiphanes or Aristophanes^c, that I shall save the reader the trouble of turning to it.

¶ Cap. xxi. p. 572. E. ¶ Harris, Phil. Inq. p. 161.

- - - Μακαριοὶ^a εἰσιν ἡ Τραγωδία
 Ποιήματα κατὰ παντ' εἶγε πρῶτον οἱ λόγοι Ὑπὸ τῶν θεατῶν εἰσὶν ἐγνωρισμένοι
 Πρὶν καὶ τιν' εἰπεῖν, ὥς ὑπομνησάμενοι
 Δειτὸν ποιητὴν. Οἰδίπεν γὰρ ἂν γε φῶ, Τα δ' ἄλλα παντ' ἴσασιν—ὁ πατὴρ Λαίῳ,
 Μήτηρ Ἰοκαστῇ—θυγατέρες, παῖδες, τινες—
 Τι πείσειθ' ἔτι^c, τι πεποίηκεν—ἂν πάλιν

Εἰπη

^b See NOTE 40. ^c Athen. lib. vi. See Casaub. in loc.

Εἶπη τις Ἀλκμαιωνά, καὶ τὰ παῖδια
 Παντ' εὐθύς εἶρηκεν—ὅτι μανεῖς ἀπέκτονε Τὴν μητέρα.— - - - -
 - - - - -
 Ἡμῖν δὲ ταυτ' ἐκ ἔσιν· ἀλλὰ πάντα δεῖ
 Εὐρεῖν, ὀνόματα καίνα, τὰ διηρημένα
 Πρωτερον, τὰ νυν παρόντα, τὴν καταστροφὴν,
 Τὴν ἐσβολὴν· ἂν ἐν τῇ τεττῶν παραλιπῇ
 Χρέμης τις, ἢ Φεῖδων τις, ἐκσυριττεται, ΠΗΛΑΕΙ δὲ ταυτ' ἐξέσται καὶ ΤΕΤΚΡΩΙ ποιεῖν.

Thus rendered by Grotius ^d—

- - - - - Scilicet Tragoedia

Felix poema est : nam principio cognitum
 Argumentum omne spectatori est, antequam
 Verbum hiscat aliquis : nomen tantum dicere
 Poetæ satis est. Oedipum præscripsero,
 Jam reliqua per se norunt ; pater est Laïus,
 Jocasta mater ; tum qui nati et filiæ,
 Quid fecit, quid patietur. Si promiserit Alcmaëona alius, ipsi dicent pueruli, “ Hic ille est qui interfecit matrem insaniens.”—

— — — — —

At nobis ista non licent, sed omnia
 Sunt invenienda, nomina imprimis nova,
 Res antegestæ, res præsentēs, exitus,
 Initia. Ex illis siqua pars defecerit, Exsibilatur Phido, sive ille est Chremes ;
 Illa alia facere Peleo et Teucro licet.

When

^d Excerpta ex Trag. et Com. Græcis, p. 622.

When the middle of a drama is not sufficiently connected with what precedes,—that is, in Aristotle's language, when it is not, αὐτο μετ' ἄλλο,—a new plot seems to begin: a fault not uncommon in double and complicated fables*. If, on the other hand, it wants the μετ' ἑκينو ἑτερον, the piece seems finished before its time. The Sampson Agonistes of Milton, according to Dr. Johnson, is deficient in both requisites of a true, Aristotelic middle. Its " intermediate parts have neither " cause nor consequence, neither hasten nor retard " the catastrophe†." The criticism appears to be just. It is seldom, however, that a beginning, a middle, or an end, is defective in both the conditions required. A beginning, which, strictly speaking, did not naturally require any thing to follow it, (μετ' ἑκينو ἑτερον περιφικειν εἶναι,) would put even the most attentive spectator into the situation of Shakspeare's drowsy tinker:

Sly. A goodly matter, surely.—Comes there any more of it?

Page. My Lord, 'tis but begun‡.

The most usual defects, and which, I suppose, Aristotle had principally in view, are those of beginnings

* Qu'y a-t-il de plus adroit que la manière dont Terrence a entrelacé les amours de Pamphile et de Charinus dans l'Andrienne? Cependant l'a-t-il fait sans inconvénient?—Au commencement du second acte, ne croiroit-on pas entrer dans une autre pièce? Diderot, De la Poés. Dram. p. 283.

† Life of Milton.

‡ Taming of the Shrew.

beginnings which do not properly, in his sense, begin, and of endings which do not end. The first perplex us, by supposing something to have preceded, without clearly telling us what; the other leave us dissatisfied, by disappointing our natural expectations of something more to follow. Of this last fault, instances may be found in abundance; particularly in the conclusions of Shakspeare^b. In Plautus, and even in Terence, we find this imperfection supplied by a very simple and clumsy contrivance, that, of informing the audience that the play was over, and telling them in what manner they were to suppose the catastrophe completed.

Spectatores, Fabula hæc est acta: vos plausum date. Plaut. Mostel.

Spectatores, quod futurum est intus, hic memorabimus.

Hæc Casina hujus reperietur filia esse è proximo;
Eaque nubet Euthynico nostro herili filio.

Id. in fine Casinae.

Ne expectetis dum exeant huc: intus despondebitur;

Intus transigetur, si quid est quod restat.

Ter. And.

^b See Dr. Johnson's Preface to Shakspeare, p. 16. There cannot be a stronger proof of Shakspeare's haste in the conclusion of his plays, than his passing over in total silence the interesting character of old Adam, at the end of As you like it; a defect felt, I believe, by every spectator and every reader of that charming comedy.

The fault opposite to this—that, of prolonging the piece beyond the point of satisfactory conclusion—has been attributed to the Oedipus Tyrannus of Sophocles. The criticism is tasteless, on every account. The reader may see it well confuted by Brumoy. But one of his answers is alone sufficient, on the principles of Aristotle: “Le spectateur en effet seroit-il content s’il ignoroit le sort de Jocaste, d’Oedipe, et de sa famille?” &c.¹ “Oedipus,” says Voltaire, “is fully acquainted with his fate at the end of the fourth act. Voilà donc la piece finie.”—He might have learned better criticism from a writer of far inferior abilities. “Il faut aussi prendre garde que la catastrophe achève pleinement le Poeme dramatique; c’est à dire, qu’il ne reste rien après, ou de ce que les spectateurs doivent sçavoir, ou qu’ils vueillent entendre; car s’ils ont raison de demander, Qu’est devenu quelque personnage intéressé dans les grandes intrigues du Theatre, ou s’ils ont juste sujet de sçavoir, Quels sont les sentimens de quelq’un des principaux acteurs après le dernier evenement qui fait cette catastrophe,—la piece n’est pas finie, il y manque encore un dernier trait¹.” That

is

¹ Theatre des Grecs, i. 376.

² Critique sur l’Oedipe de Sophocle.

¹ D’Aubignac, Pratique du Theatre, tom. i. p. 126.
This author, though neither a good writer, nor a deep scholar, is to say, in Aristotle's language, a drama so concluded, (as the Oedipus Tyrannus would be, if it ended with the fourth act,) would want the true τελευτη, or end—that, after which, ἄλλο ὂν ΠΕΦΤΚΕΝ εἶναι.

NOTE 60.

P. 123. WHETHER IT BE AN ANIMAL, &c.

Ἀλλὰ τοδὲ γε οἶμαι σε φαναι ἂν δεῖν, παντα λογον ὥΣΠΕΡ ΖΩΟΝ συνεσαναι, σωμα τι ἔχοντα αὐτον αὐτε· ὥς μὴτε ΑΚΕΦΑΛΟΝ εἶναι μὴτε ΑΠΟΤΝ, ἀλλὰ ΜΕΣΑ τε ἔχειν, καὶ ΑΚΡΑ, πρεποντα ἀλληλοις καὶ τῷ ὍΛΩι——.

Plato, in Phædro, p. 264, ed. Scr.

NOTE 61.

P. 123. BEAUTY CONSISTS IN MAGNITUDE AND ORDER.

There is something singular, something, at least, not quite consonant to modern ideas, in the great stress which the ancients appear to have laid upon scholar, has collected in this book a good deal of curious theatrical erudition, and made some acute and judicious observations on the rules of dramatic writing. He was unfortunate when he attempted to put his theory into practice by writing a Tragedy. "Je sçais bon gré," said the great Condé, "à l'Abbé D'Aubignac d'avoir suivi les regles d'Aristote, mais je ne pardonne pas aux regles d'Aristote, d'avoir fait une si mauvaise Tragedie à l'Abbé D'Aubignac."

upon size, as a necessary constituent of beauty in the human form. They seem, indeed, to have despised every thing that was not large; and to have estimated beauty, not by measure only, but by weight also. "Magnanimity," says the Philosopher in his Ethics, "consists in greatness of soul, as beauty also consists in greatness of body. "Little men may be called ἀρειοί, and συμμετροί, "pretty, and well-shaped, but not ΚΑΛΟΙ, handsome, or beautiful."

That magnitude should have entered, as essential, into their idea of a handsome man, is not surprising. The utility of strength, and the connection between strength and size, is sufficient to account for this. But what appears most singular is, that they insist no less upon the importance of magnitude to female beauty.—ΘΗΛΕΙΩΝ δὲ ἀρετῇ, σωματὶ μὲν, καλλῷ καὶ ΜΕΓΕΘΟΣ^b. HOMER seldom omits size in his descriptions of this kind.

Εσκε δὲ πατρὶ ἐμοῖο γυνὴ Φοινισσ' ἐνὶ οἴκῳ, Καλὴ τε ΜΕΓΑΛΗ τε, καὶ ἀγλαὰ ἔργ' εἰδυῖα.
Od. O. 416.

Nor let it be objected, that this praise comes from a swine-herd; for Eurymachus, a suitor, and a courtier, compliments Penelope, by telling her, that

^a Ethic. Nicom. lib. iv. cap. 3.

^b Rhet. i. cap. v.—Xenophon, describing Panthea, says—διπρωκε—πρωτον μὲν, τῇ ΜΕΓΕΘΕΙ, ἑωτα δὲ, τῇ ὙΜΝῃ, &c. Cyropæd. lib. v. initio.

that she was more accomplished in mind, handsomer, and LARGER, than other women :

- - - ἔπει περισσι γυναικων

Εἰδ' ὧς τε, ΜΕΓΕΘΟΣ τε, ἰδε φρενας ἐνδον εἴσας.

Od. Σ. 248.

And, indeed, when Minerva, that Penelope might fascinate the suitors, anointed her with the cosmetic wash of Venus, and gave a supernatural heightening to all her charms, at the same time that she made her skin "whiter than ivory," she made her also "taller and stouter."

Ἀμβροτα δῶρα δίδε, ἵνα μιν θησαιοτ' Ἀχαιοί·

Καλλεῖ μιν οἱ πρῶτα πρόσωπα τε καλά καθήρεν

Ἀμβροσίῳ, οἷον περ εὖς-εφαν' Κυθερῖα

Χρῖεται, εὐτ' ἂν ἦ Χαρίτων χορον ἰμεροεντα·

Και μιν ΜΑΚΡΟΤΕΡΗΝ ΚΑΙ ΠΑΣΣΟΝΑ

θήκεν ἰδεσθαι,

Λευκοτέρην δ' ἄρα μιν θήκεν πρὶς-εἰλεφάντ'.

Ibid. 190.

Thus, too, of the daughters of Pandarus :

Ἥρῃ δ' αὐτήσιν περὶ πασέων δῶκε γυναικων

Εἰδ' ὧς και πινυτήν, ΜΗΚΟΣ δ' ἐπόρ' Ἀρτεμῖς ἀγνή.

Od. Φ. 6.

When Penelope, in the beginning of the twenty-first book, goes to fetch the key of the repository, where the bow of Ulysses was kept, Homer describes her as taking hold of the key with her "stout hand:"

Ἐλετο δὲ κληῖδ' εὐκαμπέα ΧΕΙΡΙ ΠΑΧΕΙῃ.

Od. Φ. 6.

—which Ernestus, who allows, that, “manu crassâ, non benè convenit femina pulchrâ et reginâ,” would fain soften down into the main potelée of the French.

Quintilian observes of Zeusis, who drew the heads and limbs of his figures very large, that, in this, he followed HOMER, “cui validissima quæque forma, etiam in fœminis, placet;” and, that he did this, “id amplius atque augustius ratum:” and, indeed, these ideas of the antients relative to beauty, both male and female, seem to have been owing, in part, at least, to their ideas of that majesty and dignity, which they considered as essential attributes of their divinities, and which imply superior size and strength. To tell a lady that she was taller and stouter than most of her sex, was a great compliment: it was comparing her to a goddess.

It seems, then, that Shakspeare, in the quarrel between Helena and Hermia in his Midsummer Night's Dream, has, without knowing it, made Hermia perfectly classical in her resentment, and Lysander, in his reproaches:

Her. Puppet! Why so?—Ay, that way goes the game.

Now I perceive that she hath made compare Between our statures; she hath urged her height,
And with her personage, her tall personage,

Her

Her height, forsooth, she hath prevailed with him.

- - - - -

Her. Little again?—nothing but low and little?

Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?

Let me come to her. - - -

Lys. Get you gone, you dwarf,

You minimus of hind'ring knot-grass made,

You bead, you acorn! - - - Act iii. Scene 8.

NOTE 62.

P. 123. NO VERY MINUTE ANIMAL CAN BE BEAUTIFUL - - - NOR ONE OF A PRODI-GIOUS SIZE.

I am by no means perfectly satisfied of the integrity of this passage; but no better comment can, I think, be given upon it, as it stands, than that of Beni. — “ Non priora [i. e. quæ “ valdè pusilla,] quia eorum spectatio [θωπία] “ momento penè temporis fiat, ac propterea spec“ tatio ipsa confundatur;—quod est, tantâ celeri“ tate comprehendantur ac vcluti absorbeantur “ partes omnes, ut non liceat partem à parte, ut “ caput à thorace, internoscere, atque adeo partes “ conferre mutuo, symmetriamque et proportio- “ nem agnoscere et æstimare.—Non posteriora,
“ [i. e. valdè magna,] quia, è contrario, in tam “ ingenti mole ac magnitudine, partium multitudo

E 2

“ cognitionem

“ cognitionem impediât, quæ non possit simul “ [ἀμα] haberi: dum enim spectatur una, prop- “ ter distantiam deperit et evanescit [οἰχεται] “ cognitio alterius; ita ut unum et totum non “ appareat animal.” [Benii Comm. in Aristot.
Poët. p. 205.]

The reader may, after this, be amused with seeing what strange work Lord Shaftsbury has made with this passage in his explanatory translation of it. Essay on the freedom of Wit and Humour. Part IV. Sect. 3.

NOTE 63.

P. 123. EASILY COMPREHENDED BY THE EYE, &c.

ΕΥΣΤΗΝΟΗΤΟΝ — No words furnish a more striking proof of the richness, compression, force, and convenience, of the Greek language, than those which Aristotle here uses;—εὐστυροπτον, εὐμνημονευτον, συνδηλον. The reader needs only see to what a feeble length of periphrastic wire-drawing a translator is reduced, if he would give their full value: Easily comprehended by the eye.— “ Que l’œil puisse comprendre et mesurer aisément
 “ et tout d’un coup.” [Dacier.] “ Qui puisse
 “ être saisi d’un même coup d’œil.” [Batteux; the most compressed of all Aristotle’s translators.]
 “ Un tout ensemble où la vue ne s’égare point.” [Marmontel, Poétique Fr. Pref.]

Of

Of the same kind are the words, εὐεπακολουθεῖται —“ such as the understanding can easily follow” —“ and keep up with” : ἐναρπνεύει, —of a period, “ that does not put one out of breath” .

NOTE 64.

P. 124. IF A HUNDRED TRAGEDIES, &c.

The supposition of a hundred Tragedies performed in concurrence seems merely to be a sort of hyperbolical fling at the known intemperance of the Athenian people with respect to theatrical exhibitions ; and Dacier has rightly, I think, accounted for this “ exuberantia orationis,” as Victorius calls it^a.

But Dacier, and the Abbé Batteux after him, make Aristotle's expression too hyperbolical for hyperbole itself, when they translate, “ S'il falloit jouer cent Tragedies en un jour.” For if the Tragedies were only half an hour long, and played without intermission, they would have required a day of fifty hours. We must understand, surely, with Beni, “ Si centum Tragœdiæ, verbi gratiâ, totis illis spectaculorum diebus recitandæ proponerentur”^d ; which will still leave hyperbole enough.

✓ Dacier

^a Rhet. I. ii. p. 517. ^b Ibid. III. ix. p. 592.

^c Quis enim non intelligit hanc (i. e. ἐνατον τραγῳδίας) exuberantiam orationis esse? Vict. in locum.

^d Comment. p. 211.

Dacier is also mistaken, I believe, in concluding, from what Aristotle says, that it was once an established custom with the Greeks to regulate the length of Tragedies by the clepsydra, or hour-glass. His expression seems to imply at least, that it had been rarely practised, if it does not, as M. Batteux thinks, imply some doubt, whether it had been done at all:—ὥςπερ ποτε καὶ ἄλλοτε ΦΑΣΙ.

Thus much, however, as to the limited length of these performances, we may easily conceive; that when, to gratify the immoderate fondness of the Athenians for the drama, an uncommon number of Tragedies were exhibited in concurrence, and the contending Poets were apt to encroach upon the patience of the audience, by lengthening out their pieces in order to shew off themselves, or their *actors, the Lord Chamberlain of these exhibitions might be obliged, in compliance with the clamours of the people, to confine the representation of each drama to some limited time.

NOTE 65.

P. 124. A FABLE IS NOT ONE - - - MERELY BECAUSE THE HERO OF IT IS ONE.

Mr. Hume, in his Essay on the association of ideas, represents this passage of Aristotle as contrary to the doctrine he there lays down, and which is unquestionably true—that “in all pro“ ductions,

* See cap. ix. Transl. Part II. Sect. 7.

“ductions, as well as in the Epic and Tragic, a “certain unity is required,” &c.—and, “that the “unity of action which is to be found in biography “or history, differs from that of Epic Poetry, not “in kind, but in degree.” I see here no contrariety at all. Aristotle certainly did not mean to say, that a biographical Poem, if I may so term it, (a Poem περι ινα,) has no unity, no relation of cause and effect, &c. to connect the incidents; but only, that it has not that degree of unity, which is requisite for the purpose of Tragic, or even Epic, Poetry. Mr. Hume himself allows, that Poetry “requires a stricter and closer unity in the fable;” and this is all that Aristotle appears to mean. The persons censured by him for concluding, that, “because Hercules was one, so also “must be the fable, of which he was the subject,” were right enough, as philosophers, but as poets, certainly wrong.

This chapter, in which Aristotle considers so particularly the unity of fable, as distinct from its totality, led me once to think it probable, that the word μίας was originally in the definition of Tragedy, cap. vi. as we find it afterwards in cap. xxiii.—περι ΜΙΑΝ πράξιν ὅλην καὶ τελειαν. But perhaps the supposition is unnecessary, and unity may be sufficiently implied in the words τελειας καὶ ὅλης: ὈΛΟΤΗΤΟΣ, as he elsewhere says, ἘΝΟΤΗΤΟΣ ΤΙΝΟΣ ὈΥΣΗΣ. Metaph. lib. v. cap. 26.

NOTE 66.

P. 125. EITHER FROM ART, OR GENIUS.

ΗΤΕΡ: ΔΙΑ ΤΕΧΝΗΝ, Η ΔΙΑ ΦΥΣΙΝ.—It appears from this, as well as from other passages of Aristotle's treatise, that in the midst of all the coldness of philosophical investigation and analysis, he never lost sight of the difference between that spontaneous operation of genius and feeling in the Poet, which produces poetic beauty, and the slow and cautious process of calm examination and inquiry in the Critic, whose business it is to discover its principles. It is not every philosophical critic that avoids this error. Nothing is more common, than to suppose that to have been produced by art and reflection, about which, when produced, art and reflection have been employed*. Thus languages, we are told, must have been originally formed by art, because they cannot be analysed without art: Grammarians and Philosophers must have formed language, because language has formed Grammarians and Philosophers.

NOTE 67.

P. 125. BUT HE COMPREHENDED THOSE ONLY WHICH HAVE RELATION TO ONE ACTION, &c.

Οδυσσειαν γὰρ ποιῶν, ἐκ ἐποίησιν ἅπαντα ὅσα αὐτῷ συνέβη.—ΑΛΛ' Ἄ περὶ μιᾶς πράξεως, ὅταν λεγομένη τὴν Οδυσσειαν,

* See Diss. I. vol. i. p. 8. note ^b.

Οδυσειαν, ΣΥΝΕΣΤΗΣΑΝ. So the text stands. "Non cecinit omnia - - - sed quæ circa unam solam actionem, qualem Odysseam dicimus, constiterunt." [Goulston.] Victorius reads, ΑΛΛΑ, and ΣΥΝΕΣΤΗΣΕΝ; but does injustice, I think, to his own reading, by his construction and his version: περι μίαν πράξιν—συνεστησεν: "circa unam actionem—MANSIT." This is, surely, very harsh. I should punctuate, and translate, thus:—ἀλλὰ περι μίαν πράξιν, ὅαν λεγομεν, την Οδυσειαν συνεστησιν· ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ την Ιλιάδα. [sc. συνεστησιν]. "Sed circa unam actionem, qualem dicimus, Odysseam constituit; pariterque Iliadem."—"But he planned his Odyssey, as he also did his Iliad, upon an action, that is one, in the sense here explained."—And that this is the true reading, and the true sense, of the passage, I was once thoroughly persuaded. The construction of the whole is, thus, clear and natural. The circumstance of the plural verb συνεστησαν with the plural neuter, α', is avoided; and the word συνεστησιν retains its proper and usual sense, as applied, throughout, by Aristotle, to the composition, or construction, of the Fable.—So, cap. ix. συζησαντες τον μυθον. cap. xvii. and xxiii.—τες μυθας συζησαι—et passim. I will not, however, dissemble what is against me. The reading ἀλλ' α', besides its support from MSS. answers better to the ἀπαντα ὅσα, which precedes:—οὐκ ἵποισιν ΑΠΑΝΤΑ ὅσα αὐτῷ συνεβη—ΑΛΛ' Ἄ περι μ. π. &c. But, if ἀλλ' α' be retained, the passage,

sage, I think, should stand thus :—ἀλλ' αὖ περι μίαν πράξιν, [sc. ἑστῆς] οἷαν λεγόμεν την Οδυσσεϊαν, ΣΤΝΕΣ-ΤΗΣΕΝ^{*}. According to the construction of Piccolomini :—quelle cose accolse, ch' al corpo d'una attione, la qual chiamiamo Odissea, servissero :—and the Abbé Batteux—" Il a rapproché tout ce qui tenoit à une seule action."—συνεστησεν αὖ περι μίαν πράξιν : i. e. composed his fable of those circumstances only, which relate to one action. Thus, immediately after—τα ΜΕΡΗ ΣΤΝΙΣΤΑΝΑΙ των πραγμάτων.

Unwilling to make alterations that do not appear absolutely necessary, I have followed this last reading; though with some remaining partiality to my first conjecture. That the sense would be clearer, and the construction less elliptical and embarrassed, is certain. But I am afraid this is but a questionable

* I cannot reconcile the commentary of Victorius on this passage with his text and his version. His text stands thus: ἀλλὰ περι μίαν πράξιν, οἷαν λεγόμεν την Οδυσσεϊαν, συνεστησεν. His version is—" Verum circa unam actionem, qualem dicimus Odysseam mansit."—But, in his remarks, he translates exactly as if he had read and understood the passage in the way here proposed. " Verum quæ circa unam actionem, qualem Odysseam vocamus, constituit."—And, " Quæ circa unam, autem, actionem coagmentasse inquit Homerum."—Again—" Quare verè dici potest, ipsum complexum fuisse, quæ circa illam actionem." Nor does he give, in his commentary, any other version, or explanation, or mention a word about the change of ἀλλ' αὖ into ἀλλὰ, which he had adopted in his text.

a questionable proof of corruption in the writings of Aristotle.

NOTE 68.

P. 126. THE WHOLE WILL BE DESTROYED, OR CHANGED.

Destroyed, if any part be taken away, (ἀφαιρέμιν)—disturbed or changed, if it be transposed (μετατίθεμιν). In the first case it will be no longer a whole; in the last, not the same whole. This seems the meaning, as it is well rendered by M. Batteux: "Que les parties en soient tellement liées entre elles, qu'une seule transposée, ou retranchée, ce ne soit plus un tout, ou le même tout."—But I cannot think διαφρασθαι right. It is rendered by Goulston, "diversum reddatur, et moveatur, totum." So Piccolomini, "diverso . . . e mutato," &c. But, besides the manifest tautology, I doubt whether there be any good authority for this sense of the verb διαφρασθαι—i. e. to be made different, or changed. At least I have not found any instance of it in Aristotle's writings. If we retain διαφρασθαι, it must, I think, be taken in the sense of discerpi, distrahi, &c. But I am almost persuaded, that Aristotle wrote ΔΙΑΦΘΕΙΡΕΣΘΑΙ, spoiled, or destroyed. So in his Topics, ΦΘΕΙΡΕΣΘΑΙ το ὅλον. vol. i. p. 258. B. ed. Dual.

NOTE 69.

P. 127. POSSIBLE, ACCORDING TO PROBABLE, OR NECESSARY, CONSEQUENCE.

Compare cap. xv. Χρη δε και εν τοις ηθεσιν. κ.τ.αλ.— [Transl. Part II. Sect. 15. p. 144*.] The expression, δυνατα κατα—το αναγκαιον, “possible --- according to necessity,” appears strange at the first glance: but in fiction, events may be supposed to happen, as in real life they do happen, not only probably, but necessarily; that is, not only as they were likely to happen, but as, morally speaking, they could not but happen.—“Puisque la fonction “du vraisemblable dans la Tragedie, est d’empêcher l’esprit de s’appercevoir de la feinte, le “vraisemblable qui le trompe le mieux est le plus “parfait, et c’est celui qui devient nécessaire. Un “caractere etant supposé, il y a des effets qu’il doit “nécessairement produire, et d’autres qu’il peut “produire, ou ne produire pas.” Again —“La “perfection est de faire agir les personnages, de “maniere qu’ils n’ayent pas pu agir autrement, “leur caractere supposé,” &c. Thus Fontenelle, in his excellent Reflexions sur la Poetique; in several parts of which, that clear and philosophical writer has, I believe without any such intention, coincided with, and illustrated, the positions of Aristotle.—See particularly, Sect. 58, to 65, inclusively.

NOTE 70.

P. 127. A SPECIES OF HISTORY—.

Ἱστορία ΤΙΣ—"a sort of history." It is singular, that almost all the translators should have neglected a word so important as the pronoun is in this passage. May we not infer from this expression, that if Aristotle had been asked, whether an Epic imitation in prose would be a Poem, or not, he would have allowed it to be, ποιήματα ΤΙ, a kind of Poem, as having the essence of Poetry, invention and imitation? See NOTE 5. p. 232, &c. of the 1st volume.

NOTE 71.

P. 127. A MORE EXCELLENT THING THAN HISTORY.

Σπευδαιότερον. It means no more than, in plain English, a better thing. The word occurs frequently in Aristotle's works, in this general sense. So, Rhet. I. vii. p. 528, B. και ὡν αἱ ἐπισημαι καλλίαις ἢ σπευδαιότεραι, και τα πραγματα καλλίω και σπευδαιότερα. And, ibid. I. ix. p. 531, E. Και αἱ των φυσαι σπευδαιότερων (superior by nature) ἀρεται καλλίαις, και τα ἔργα ὅιον ἀνδρῶν [sc. σπευδαιότεραι αἱ ἀρεται, &c.] ἢ γυναικῶν.—See, also, Ethic. Nicom. lib. vi. cap. vii. p. 78, C. ἀτοπον γαρ εἰ τις την ἐπισημην πολιτικην — ΣΠΟΥΔΑΙΟΤΑΤΗΝ οἶεται εἶναι, εἰ μὴ το ΑΡΙΣΤΟΝ των ἐν τῷ κόσμῳ ἀνθρωπῶν εἶναι.

Dacier

Dacier translates the word, "morale;" Batteux, "instructive;" but this is rather giving the reason why it is σπουδαιότερον, or, a superior thing.

NOTE 72.

P. 127. IS NOT, LIKE THE IAMBIC POETS, PARTICULAR AND PERSONAL.

Ιαμβοποιῶσι.—Strictly, the writers of the ψογοί or satirical invectives that preceded Comedy. [See cap. iv. Transl. Part I. Sect. 6.] But I believe Aristotle meant here to include, at least, the authors of the first rude Comedy, "of the Iambic form—" της ιαμβικης ιδιας. See cap. v. Transl. Part I. Sect. 8.

It appears, that the Poem called Ιαμβός, whatever it was, was represented, or acted, as well as Tragedy and the Epic: for, in his seventh book De Rep. cap. xvii. the philosopher forbids boys to be spectators of Iambi and Comedies:—τις δε νεώτερος εἴτ' ΙΑΜΒΩΝ, εἴτε κωμῳδίας ΘΕΑΤΑΣ νομοθετητέον, πρὶν ἢ—κ. τ. ἀλ. p. 448, E.

NOTE 73.

P. 128. WHAT HAS NEVER ACTUALLY HAPPENED, WE ARE NOT APT TO REGARD AS POSSIBLE.

This must be restricted to those extraordinary actions and events, of public and elevated personages, which usually make the subject of Tragedy.

Tragedy. The best comment I have seen, or that, I think, can be given, on this passage, is that of Piccolomini; but it is so long, that I can only refer to it*. We have, however, the substance of it in the following observation of Brumoy.—“ La “ Tragedie ne s’est point sous-divisée” (as Comedy, he observes, had been,) “ en Tragedie réelle, et “ Tragedie de pure imagination. Je crois en trouver la raison dans la nature de l’esprit humain. “ Il n’y a que la vraisemblance dont il puisse “ être touché. Or il n’est pas vraisemblable que “ des faits aussi grands que ceux de la Tragedie, “ des faits qui n’arrivent que dans les maisons des “ rois, ou dans le sein des empires, soient absolument inconnus. Si donc le Poete invente “ tout son sujet, jusqu’ aux noms, l’esprit du “ spectateur se revolte; tout lui paroît incroyable, “ et la piece manque son effet, faute de vraisemblance. Mais comme la Comedie ne “ touche que la vie commune et ses ridicules, le “ spectateur peut supposer et suppose en effet, “ en se laissant aller à l’enchantement du spectacle, que le sujet qu’on lui présente est un fait “ réel, quoiqu’ il ne le connoisse pas. Il n’en seroit pas de même, si le sujet comique avoit du “ merveilleux.”

* Annotationi, &c. p. 141, &c.

† Theatre des Grecs, i. p. 207.

NOTE 74.

P. 128. A POET SHOULD BE A POET OR MAKER OF FABLES, RATHER THAN OF VERSES.

So Plato, almost in the same words:—ἐννοήσας
ὅτι τον ποιητην δεοι, εἴπερ μέλλοι ποιητης εἶναι, ποιῶν ΜΥΘΟΥΣ, ἀλλ' ἔ ΛΟΓΟΥΣ.—Phædon, p. 61,
ed. Serr.

NOTE 75.

P. 128-9. NOR IS HE THE LESS A POET, THOUGH THE INCIDENTS OF HIS FABLE SHOULD CHANCE TO BE SUCH AS HAVE REALLY HAP-PENED, &c.

The original, as it stands, (for I doubt of its integrity,) is. very ambiguous and obscure. The sense I wished to give it, is this: “Nor will he “ be the less a Poet, though he should found his “ Poem upon fact: for nothing hinders, but that “ some real events may be such, as to admit of “ Poetic probability; and he who gives them “ this probability, and makes them such, as “ Poetry requires, is so far entitled to the name
“ of Poet, or Inventor.”

And thus, indeed, the passage is explained by Robortelli and some other commentators: and • Casaubon seems to have so understood it; for, quoting the words κ' ἂν ἄρα συμβῇ γενομένα ποιῶν, κ.τ.αλ.—he says, “ad ea solum dramata refe“ rendum,

"rendum, quorum hypothesis ab historiâ est; ut
 "Persarum Æschyli: fabulæ verò totius συνθεσις
 "ab ingenio Poetæ^a." I do not, however, see how this sense can be fairly extracted from the words; as they now stand. That which I have given in my translation, and which was first suggested to me by the word συμβη, I was afterwards glad to find supported by the opinion of Vic-torius.

The expression—ἀν ΣΥΜΒΗΙ ΓΕΝΟΜΕΝΑ ΠΟΙΗΝ,—
 "if he should happen," &c. is very strong, and hardly applicable to a Poet chusing a true story for the outline of his fable. It indicates accidental coincidence with truth. The word εἶναι, also, is on the same side:—"may be," does not suit the sense above given, which requires, "may become"—may be made such by the Poet; not,
 "may be such," in themselves, which is the obvious meaning of τοιαυτὰ ΕΙΝΑΙ. Farther; Aristotle has just told us, that probability is the Poet's province, and yet, at the same time, that Tragedies were usually founded, and should, in general, be founded, on historical fact. Now it would, surely, be rather strange, after all this, to say,
 "nothing hinders, but that some real events may
 "be made to have poetic probability:"—ἐδυν
ΚΩΛΕΙ ΤΟΙΑΥΤΑ ΕΙΝΑΙ ΔΙΑ ἂν ΕΙΧΘΗ ΓΕΝΕΣΘΑΙ, κ.τ.αλ.—

But,

^a De Satyricâ, &c. p. 345.

But, to the interpretation which I have preferred, these expressions are all exactly suitable, and the meaning and connection of the whole seems to be this:—Aristotle had been opposing Poetry to fact: he had said expressly, that the γινόμενα were the peculiar province of the historian; the διὰ τὸ γινέσθαι, and the εἰς, of the Poet. An objector, misapprehending, or misrepresenting, his meaning, might have urged—"the incidents of this or that Poet have actually happened; they are γινόμενα; and therefore, according to your own doctrine, not proper for Poetry, nor the work of a Poet."—To this Aristotle answers, that, though the object of the Poet be not truth, yet his invented probabilities may coincide with truth: and real events, even of the Tragic and extraordinary kind, may have happened as probably and naturally as he has supposed them to happen. He is still, therefore, no less a Poet; not only as having actually invented the incidents, but as having invented them with true Poetic probability.—And thus Victorius:—"Non omnes eos—qui fortuitò incident in res quæ exitum jam habuerint, in culpâ esse; quia fieri possit, ut res aliquæ factæ, ita factæ sint, ut verisimile sit illas factas esse; et esse denique ejusmodi, ut effici potuerint; quo nomine (inquit,) ille Poeta eorum aliquo modo est: officium enim Poetæ est, verisimile sectari, et ea quæ effici possunt sumere: quod in illis rebus illo modo “ modo factis non desideratur. Retinet igitur, “ hâc de causâ, nomen Poetæ.” I confess, indeed, that the passage is, in this way, nothing more than an answer to a senseless cavil. But such cavils, we know, the sophists of those times^b did not disdain to make, nor Aristotle always disdain to answer. See cap. xxv. Transl. Part IV.

NOTE 76.

P. 129. OF SIMPLE FABLES, THE EPISODIC ARE THE WORST.

Why, of simple fables—ἀπλῶν μυθῶν? as if the fault here noticed were peculiar to the simple fable; that is, as the term is defined in the following chapter, the fable that is without revolution or discovery. But surely this could not be Aristotle's meaning. Something, I am persuaded, is wrong: but I have no probable conjecture to offer; unless it may be thought probable, that ΑΠΑΝΤΩΝ, abbreviated perhaps by the transcriber, might be mistaken for ΑΠΛΩΝ. What Dacier says in his note is ingenious and true; but by no means, I think, fully accounts for Aristotle's expression, which implies more, than that these unconnected Episodes, “ se rencontrent plus ordinairement dans les fables simples.”

Victorius

^b Such as Protagoras, Euclid, Ariphrades, mentioned hereafter in this treatise.

Victorius states the difficulty fairly, and only asks, with a modesty which inferior critics often want, "An valet quicquam ad eum (scrupulum) evellendum, quod Tragœdia simplex suâ sponte non valdè elegans est; cui si accesserit hoc vitium, meritò deterrima vocari potest?"—For my own part, I must answer in the negative. This idea has been adopted by Goulston, and Le Bossu. They make Aristotle say—"Simple fables are not so good as complex, and simple fables that are Episodic, are the worst of all."—This is to supply a meaning, not to find one.

For the sense of Episodes here, see NOTE 37, in the 1st volume.

NOTE/ 77.

P. 129. IN ORDER TO ACCOMMODATE THEIR PIECES TO THE PURPOSES OF RIVAL PERFORMERS, &c.

That actors, as well as Poets, contended for the prize in these Tragic games, or ἀγωνες, might be sufficiently proved by a single passage in the Ethics of Aristotle, where, explaining the difference between προαιρεσις, and βελησις, he says, "we may will, or desire, things not at all in our own power to effect; as, that such a particular actor may gain the prize:"—ὅποκριτην τινα νικᾶν, ἢ ἀθλητην*.

The

* Ethic. Nicom. III. iv. ed. Duval. p. 30.

Ἀγωνισαί—οἱ ὑποκριταί. Hesych.

The reader may also see a passage in the Rhetoric, lib. iii. cap. i. which throws some illustration upon this passage, by shewing the great importance of the players at that time, and the dependance of the Poets upon them: for Aristotle there says of these dramatic contests, that, ἐκ μᾶλλον δυνανταὶ ΝΥΝ ΤΩΝ ΠΟΙΗΤΩΝ αἱ ὑποκριταί: “the actors, now, “have greater power—are more regarded, and “of more importance to the success of the “dramas—than the Poets.” A revolution somewhat similar is recorded by Plutarch to have happened between the later Dithyrambic Poets and their αὐληταί, or flute-players: — το γὰρ παλαιόν, ἕως εἰς Μελανίπιδην τὸν τῶν διθυράμβων ποιητὴν, συμβεβηκει, τὰς ΑΥΛΗΤΑΣ παρὰ τῶν ποιητῶν λαμβάνειν τὰς μισθούς, ΠΡΩΤΑΓΩΝΙΣΤΟΤΗΣΗΣ δηλονοῦσι ΤΗΣ ΠΟΙΗΣΕΩΣ, τῶν δ’ αὐλητῶν ΤΠΗΡΕ-ΤΟΤΝΤΩΝ τοῖς διδασκαλοῖς· ὕστερον δέ, [i. e. when, as he says, the music of the flute became more complicated, refined, and difficult,] καὶ ταῦτο διεφθαρῆν^b. But all this is nothing, to what we have heard of the modern despotism sometimes exercised by great opera singers over the composers.

The effect which this influence of the players might have, in lengthening and disuniting the action, according to Aristotle’s complaint here, may be easily imagined. Castelvetro observes, with great probability, of these ill-connected ἰσχυροδία,—

“ E, per

^b De Musicá. ed. H. St. p. 2991.

“ E, peravventura, queste digressioni fatte per “ compiacere i rappresentanti, riguardavano più “ à quello che i rappresentanti sapevano bene “ contrafare, che alla materia naturale della “ favola; accioche essi mostrassero quello che “ valessero, in quello dove erano piu essercitati, “ e perciò piu agevolmente ottenessero la vit“ toria “.” Here, too, the musical reader, will be again reminded of the privilege so intemperately exercised by modern Italian singers—the lineal descendants, according to some, of the ὑποκριται of the Greek Opera—that of setting aside, whenever they please, both the Poet, and the composer, by the introduction of such songs, from other operas, as they think most favourable to the display of their peculiar talents.

The influence of modern actors upon the productions of the Poet, is, perhaps, not less than that of the antient; but it seems to be exerted most frequently in a contrary way, though one full as likely to spoil the τέχνη of the piece—that
 of

“ Poet. d' Arist. p. 220.—“ Suum igitur quisque,” says Cicero, “ noscat ingenium, acremque se et bonorum et “ vitiorum suorum judicem præbeat; ne scenici plus “ quàm nos videantur habere prudentiæ: illi enim, non “ optimas, sed sibi accommodatissimas fabulas eligunt;
 “ qui voce freti sunt, Epigonos, Medumque; qui gestu, “ Menalippam, Clytæmnestram; semper Rutilius, quem “ ego memini, Antiopam; non sæpe Æsopus Ajacem.
 “ Ergo histrio hæc videbit in scænâ, non videbit vir sa“ piens in vitâ?”—De Offic. I. 31.

of lopping. The distress of a Poet on such occasions is represented with true comic force by Mr. Sheridan in his Critic:

UND. PROMPTER.

Sir, the carpenter says it is impossible you can go to the park scene yet.

PUFF.

The park scene! no—I mean the description scene here, in the wood.

UND. PROMPT.

Sir, the performers have cut it out, &c.

End of Act II.

NOTE 78.

P. 129. BEYOND THEIR POWERS - - -.

I cannot agree with the commentators, who render παρα την δυνάμιν, “supra id quod ferat :” —referring δυνάμιν to the fable itself. I think it means ultra vires, beyond the powers of the Poets. And so the Abbé Batteux—“au-delà de sa portée.”

The greater the length of the fable, the greater, evidently, is the difficulty of filling it up with consistent probability; without violating that close connection of incidents, and unity of action, which the rules of Aristotle, and the nature of the drama, require.

NOTE 79.

P. 130. THAT PURPOSE IS BEST ANSWERED BY SUCH EVENTS AS ARE NOT ONLY UNEXPECTED, BUT UNEXPECTED CONSEQUENCES OF EACH OTHER.

Ταυτα δε γινεται μαλιστα τοιαυτα, και μαλλον οταν γινηται παρα την δοξαν δι' αλληλα.—This is certainly corrupt; nor does it seem easy to form any probable conjecture, how it stood, as Aristotle left it. Whether the words, και μαλλον, be right or not, they serve, as the text at present stands, only to embarrass a passage, which, if we omit them, seems clear enough, both in construction and meaning. In this I perfectly agree with the last Oxford editor; though I think they should not be hastily ejected from the text*.

The connection and drift of the whole passage seems to me to be this. Aristotle is here recommending the close connection of incidents, arising probably or necessarily from each other, in a new point of view—as being of great importance, not only to the unity of fable, but to the principal object of Tragedy, the production of terror and pity. For events are best adapted to this purpose, most striking and affecting, when they happen, not only παρα την δοξαν, but παρα την δοξαν δι' ΑΛΛΗΛΑ: when the wonder arises, not only only from their happening unexpectedly, but from their being the consequences of events from which no one could have expected them to follow. Thus connected, as cause and effect, they will be more surprising, and consequently more affecting, more terrible or piteous *, than if they appear to happen by chance—ἀπο τῶν αὐτομάτων καὶ τῆς τύχης—εἰκη—ΜΕΤ' ἄλληλα only, not ΔΙ' ἄλληλα, according to the distinction in the next chapter^b. To illustrate this, Aristotle observes, that even events merely fortuitous, are more wonderful and striking, when they are such, as in any degree suggest to the spectator an idea of purpose and design; like the accident he mentions of the statue that fell upon the murderer of the person represented by it.—And all this is connected with what follows, as well as with what precedes; evidently pointing to his doctrine about the περιπέτεια in the next chapters.

* Mr. Winstanley's edit. p. 287.

NOTE 80.

P. 130. THE STATUE OF MITYS, &c.

In Plutarch, thus :—καὶ τὸ Μίτις τῶν Ἀργείων, κατὰ τὰς ἀναιρέσεις, ἀνδριάντα χαλκῶν ἐν ἀγορᾷ, θεᾶς ἑστῆς, ἐμπέσειν τῷ κτείναντι τὸν Μίτιον, καὶ ἀνελεῖν.
[Περὶ τῶν βραδείων. &c. p. 980. ed. H. St.]

* The effect of surprise, when combined with pity or terror, is, to add force to these latter passions, which necessarily predominate in the combination, and to raise the whole feeling to a higher pitch. See Hume's Essay on Tragedy.

^b Cap. x. Διαφέρει πολὺ. κ.τ.αλ.

NOTE 81.

P. 130. FABLES — SIMPLE, AND COMPLICATED.

It is high time to discard the technical jargon of implex fables, used by Addison *, and others, after the French writers. If any authority were requisite for speaking English, I have that of Mr. Harris, who renders Aristotle's ἀπλοι, and πιπλεγμένοι, by simple, and complicated.—Phil. Inq. p. 146.

NOTE 82.

P. 130. WHEN ITS CATASTROPHE IS PRODUCED WITHOUT EITHER REVOLUTION OR DISCOVERY.

Αὐτὴ περιπετῖα ἢ ἀναγνωρισμὸς ἢ μεταβάσις γινέται.—Μεταβάσις, is the change of fortune which constitutes the catastrophe of the piece. This, which is common to all Tragedy, must not be confounded with the Περιπετῖα, which, however important, is not essential. Le Bossu, Dacier, and others, by not attending to this distinction, have introduced much confusion into one of the clearest parts of Aristotle's work. Thus, Dacier says—“ Il appelle fable simple, celle ou il n'y a ni change-ment d'état, ni reconnaissance, et dont le denouement n'est qu'un simple passage de l'agitation et du trouble au repos et à la tranquillité.”
 —He

* Spectator, N° 297.

—He adopts the language of Le Bossu^a.—Undoubtedly, there are Tragedies without a sudden and unexpected reverse of fortune; but where is the Tragedy, antient or modern, in which there is no “changement d’etat?” This would be no other than a Tragedy without a catastrophe. Thus, these writers take μεταβασις to signify the mere passage, progress, or suite, of the piece^b: whereas it clearly signifies a change; a transition from prosperous to adverse, or at least from adverse to more adverse, fortune, or the contrary; as Beni has well observed^c. The sense of the word is clearly fixed by other passages; and in cap. xviii. he expressly makes the μεταβασις, such a change of fortune as is common to every Tragedy. Εστὶ δὲ ΠΑΣΗΣ τραγωδίας, το μὲν, δέσις, το δὲ, λύσις.—λέγω δὲ δέσιν μὲν εἶναι τὴν ἀπ’ ἀρχῆς μέχρι τῶν τε μερῶν ὁ ἰσχυατον ἔστιν, ἐξ ἧς ΜΕΤΑΒΑΙΝΕΙ εἰς εὐτυχίαν· λύσιν δὲ, τὴν ἀπὸ τῆς ἀρχῆς ΤΗΣ ΜΕΤΑΒΑΣΕΩΣ μέχρι τέλους.

Mr. Harris, in his Philol. Inquiries, p. 145, &c. seems to have deserted Aristotle for Le Bossu, who, with little reason, in my opinion, passed with him, as well as with Lord Shaftsbury, for “Aristotle’s best interpreter”^d. Throughout his chapter on
this

^a Du Poeme, Ep. II. 16.

^b “Non si prende μεταβασις in questo luogo per mutazione, come credono alcuni, ma per lo processo dell’azione dal principio al fine.” Castelvetro, p. 242.

^c Comment. p. 255.

^d Treatise On Music, Painting, &c. p. 83, Note.

this subject, above referred to, he appears to me to confound the μεταβασις, or change, which Aristotle makes essential to all Tragedy, with that particular kind of change which he denominates περιωτεία : for he uses, repeatedly, the word revolution, (his translation of περιωτεία,) to express what Aristotle means by μεταβασις, μεταβαινειν, μεταβαλλειν. He speaks of Othello, and Lear, as complicated fables, and having revolutions. And so, indeed, they have, if we take the word in Aristotle's sense of μεταβασις ; I do not see that they have, in his sense of περιωτεία. In neither of those Tragedies can it, I think, be said, that the catastrophe is produced by a sudden change, to the reverse of what is expected, by the spectator, from the circumstances of the action. At least, with respect to Othello, this seems to admit of no dispute. [See the next NOTE.]

The Abbé Batteux gives, I think very properly, the Polieucte of Corneille, as an example of the simple fable. “ La fable simple, qui n'a ni révolution subite, ni reconnoissance ; qui commence, continue, s'acheve, sans secousses, ni retours inattendus. Ainsi Polieucte reçoit le baptême, son zele lui fait renverser les autels des payens, il est arrêté, jugé, mis à mort : c'est une fable simple.”

Victorius, Beni, Piccolomini, and Goulston, agree with me in my idea of this passage, where the words, words, συνεχες και μιας, are not put to characterize the simple fable, as Victorius well observes, but refer merely to that unity and continuity of action, which had been established as necessary to Tragedy in general.

NOTE 83.

P. 131. A REVOLUTION IS - - - A CHANGE INTO THE REVERSE OF WHAT IS EXPECTED FROM THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE ACTION.

Εἰς δὲ περιπετεία μὲν, ἢ εἰς τὸ ἐναντίον τῶν πραττομένων μεταβολή, καθάπερ εἴρηται.

The sense of these words has not, I think, been exactly given in any translation I have yet seen, except that of the accurate and judicious Piccolomini: "La Peripetia intendo io essere una "mutation di fortuna, che (fatta nel modo che "si é detto,) accaschi al contrario di quello che "dalle cose ordite aspettar si potesse." In literal English—"When the things that are doing (τὰ "πραττομένα) have an effect the very reverse of "what is expected from them." That this is the meaning, appears plainly from the instance immediately subjoined: ὥσπερ ἐν τῷ Οἰδιποδὶ, ἐλθὼν ΩΣ ΕΥΦΡΑΝΩΝ τον Ὀιδίπῳ, καὶ ἀπαλλάξων τε πρὸς τὴν μητέρα φοβῶ, δηλώσας ὅτις ἦν Τ'ΟΥΝΑΝΤΙΟΝ ΕΠΟΙΗΣΕ. As the words—ἢ εἰς τὸ ἐναντίον τῶν πρατ. μετ. are rendered by Dacier, and others—" changement de fortune en une fortune con- "traire"—they express nothing but what is common

mon to Tragedy in general; and περιπετεια is confounded with μεταβασις. [See last NOTE.] But, it is well observed by Piccolomini, "Non s'hà, parimente, da intendere, quando diciamo la peripetia esser mutation di fortuna, ogni sorte di mutatione da una conditione e stato di fortuna ad un' altro; non potendo esser Tragedia alcuna in cui qualche così fatta mutatione non si ritrovi." [p. 167.] In the usual way of translating the passage, a circumstance essential to the περιπετεια is entirely omitted in the definition; its being surprising, and contrary to expectation *. This, it is true, Dacier has expressed in his version, by the words, "contre ce qu'on avoit attendu." But this is, professedly, his own supplement of Aristotle's text. And indeed I once thought the text defective, and that Aristotle had probably written it—μεταβολη, ΠΑΡΑ ΤΗΝ ΔΟΞΑΝ, καθάπερ εἴρηται: alluding to the latter part of cap. ix. But, as I now understand the passage, this idea is sufficiently implied. The words, καθάπερ εἴρηται, have puzzled and divided the commentators, by their obscurity of reference. Upon the whole I am inclined to think, they point to what he had said cap. ix. [Transl. Part II. Sect. 7.] which, as I before observed, [NOTE 80.] seems manifestly to be a preparation for this chapter; and in which the

* Περιπετεια δὲ λεγεται τα ΠΑΡ' ΕΛΠΙΔΑ συμβεβηκота πάντα, και οὕτως παρα ΤΡΑΓΙΚΟΙΣ ἐτι καλενται.—Schol. Nicand. quoted by Robortelli, p. 106.

the words, παρὰ τὴν δόξαν δι' ἀλλήλα—events that are “unexpected consequences of each other”—answer to the definition of περιπετεια, as here explained.

That this is the meaning of Aristotle's words, I have no doubt. But, perhaps, even the words themselves have been inaccurately rendered, and πραττομένων should be constructed, not with μεταβολῇ, but with ἐναντίον:—εἰς τὸ ἐναντίον τῶν πραττομένων: i. e. in contrarium eorum quæ aguntur. This was suggested to me by the literal version which the accurate Mr. Harris has given of the words in his Philol. Inq. p. 148.—“A REVO-“LUTION is, as has been already said, a change
“into the reverse of what is doing.” The definition, I think, though its sense be the same in either way, would thus be more clear, and would answer more exactly to what follows.

NOTE 84.

P. 131. THUS IN THE OEDIPUS, THE MESSENGER, &c.

—Ἐλθὼν ὡς εὐφρανῶν τῶν Οἰδίπῳ, καὶ ἀπαλλαξὼν τε πρὸς τὴν μητέρα φόβῳ. Alluding, probably, to the very words of the messenger in Sophocles :

Τι δὴτ' ἐγὼγ' εἰ ΤΟΥΤΑΕ ΤΟΥ ΦΟΒΟΥ Σ', ἀνάξ',

Ἐπειπερ ἔγνοτε ἡλθόν, ἐξελτσαμένη;

v. 1012.

NOTE 85.

P. 133. THESE THEN ARE TWO PARTS OF THE FABLE—REVOLUTION AND DISCOVERY.

Δυο μὲν ἐν τῇ μυθῷ μερὴ ΠΕΡΙ ΤΑΥΤΑ ἐστὶ, περιπίτεια καὶ ἀνὰ γνῶρισις. “Circa hæc.” About what? What are we to understand by ταυτα?— Victorius says, τα πραττομενα; and Dacier, after him, “Qui regardent le sujet.” I cannot be satisfied with this. Τα πραττομενα, the subject, the action, are sufficiently expressed by the word μυθῷ.
 Would Aristotle have said, “These are two parts “of the fable relative to the fable?” I have, therefore, neglected the word περὶ in my translation, in conformity to the probable conjecture of Madius. Every reader sees how easily it might get into the text from the word περιπίτεια which presently follows. I rather think, however, that, retaining περὶ, we should read, περὶ Τ’ ΑΥΤΑ:— “circa easdem res ;”—to point out the close connection of these two parts of the fable, as things of the same kind, and counterparts, as it were, to each other, co-operating to the same effect—the production of terror, pity, surprise, &c. And thus, they are afterwards mentioned together, as constituting one species of Tragedy: ἡ μὲν γὰρ, πεπωλεγμένη, ἥς το ὅλον ἐστὶ ΠΕΡΙΠΙΤΕΙΑ ΚΑΙ ΑΝΑΓ-ΝΩΡΙΣΙΣ. [cap. xviii. Transl. Part II. Sect. 19.]
 The same mode of expression occurs in the Ethics ad Nicom. lib. iv. cap. 13. ΠΕΡΙ ΤΑ ΑΥΤΑ δε σχεδόν

σχεδόν ΕΣΤΙ καὶ ἡ ἀλαζονείας μεσοῦς: “in iisdem vertitur.” That is, as appears from the context, the virtue, of which he is there speaking, was of the same kind, or class, with that, which was the subject of the foregoing chapter. Both were among the ἀρεταὶ ὁμιλητικαί. So, in the conclusion of the subsequent chapter—τρεις ἐν αἰ εἰρημεναὶ ἐν τῷ βίῳ μεσοῦς Εἰσι δὲ πᾶσαι περὶ λόγων τινῶν καὶ πράξεων κοινωνίαν.

NOTE 86.

P. 133. DISASTERS, COMPREHEND ALL PAINFUL OR DESTRUCTIVE ACTIONS, &c.

It seems hardly reconcilable with philosophical accuracy, to use such an expression as ΠΑΘΟΣ ἰσὶ ΠΡΑΞΕΙΣ—defining the suffering to BE the action that causes the suffering.

In his Metaphysics he puts it thus:—τα μεγίστη των συμφορων καὶ λυπηρων ΠΑΘΗ λεγεται*.

This word, παθῶ, in the sense here used, is very embarrassing to a translator. The word passion, in this sense, of suffering, is, with us, appropriated to a subject, from which it cannot, without a sort of profanation, be transferred to any other. The French, however, have done this without scruple, though the word, when so applied, must be explained before it can be understood. Upon the whole, I could find no single words that seemed seemed to me to answer so nearly to παθος, and its adjective, παθητικη, in the sense in which they are used here, and in cap. xviii. as disaster, and its correspondent adjective, disastrous. Their original, desastre, is explained in the Dict. of the French Academy, by "accident funeste."

* V. 21.

"Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents [παθη] by flood, and field."

Othello, Act I. Sc. III.

NOTE 87.

P. 133. THE EXHIBITION OF DEATH, &c.

Εν τῷ φανερῷ θανάτῳ.—A plain passage, which the commentators seem to have taken great pains to perplex with difficulties of their own invention. The plain meaning of the expression is, exhibited on the stage: ἐν ὀφθαλμοῖς φαινόμενῳ ΤΟΥ ΠΑΘΟΥΣ, as it is expressed in the Rhetoric, lib. ii. cap. viii. p. 560.

Aristotle is here only explaining the term παθος; not laying down a rule, nor deciding concerning the propriety, or impropriety, of such exhibitions. Nothing is more evidently absurd, than the attempts of Dacier and other French critics to transfer the delicacy of their theatre to that of the ancients. The scrupulous delicacy of French Tragedy was, I believe, as unknown to the Athenian stage, as its rigid and strutting dignity. A single passage, and that, from the most polished of the three Greek Tragic Poets whose works are extant, may sufficiently prove this; I mean the description of Oedipus tearing out his own eyes, in Sophocles.

Τοιαυτ' ἐφύμνων, πολλακίς τε κ' οὐχ' ἀπαξ
 Ηρασ', ἐπαιρων βλεφαρα· φοινίαι δ' ὄμυ
 Γληραι γενεὶ ἐτεγγον· ἐδ' ἀνίσταν
 Φονε μυδῶσας σαγόνας· ἀλλ' ὄμυ μελας
 Ομβρε^ς χαλαζης αἵματος ἐτεγγετο*.

Oed. Tyr. v. 1284.

"Thus oft exclaiming, he his eyelids raised,

"And rent the orbs of sight; the bleeding balls

"Imbath'd his cheeks, nor ceased the gushing
 "drops,

"But rain'd a shower of black and streaming
 "gore."

Potter's Translation.

But Sophocles did not confine himself to description. Oedipus himself immediately appears upon the stage, and exhibits the shocking spectacle of his bloody eyes to the audience. Certainly, the French rule, "de ne pas ensanglanter le Theatre," was not much more strictly observed here by Sophocles, than it was by Shakspeare in his LEAR, where Gloster's eyes are trodden out, ἐν φανερῷ, upon the stage.

I cannot quit this instance from Sophocles, without diverting the reader, (for I am persuaded
 it

* This line is, undoubtedly, faulty. The best emendation I have seen proposed appears to me to be that of Mr. Heath, who would read, αἵματους—i. e. contracted, αἵματος.

it will divert him,) with Pere Brumoy's apology, or, rather, with the joint apology of him, M. Dacier, and Boileau. "Le grand CORNEILLE et ses successeurs Tragiques, ont crû que ce seroit une chose horrible d'exposer Oedipe aveugle et sanglant aux yeux des spectateurs. M. Dacier leur repond trés-bien par ces vers de DES-PREAUX, Art Poet. chant ii.

"Il n'est point de serpent, ni de monstre odieux,
 "Qui par l'art imité ne puisse plaire aux yeux.
 "D'un pinceau delicat l'artifice agréable
 "Du plus affreux objet fait un objet AIMABLE !
 "Ainsi pour nous CHARMER, la Tragédie en pleurs
 "D'Oedipe tout sanglant fit parler les douleurs *."

This is pushing Aristotle's principle, of the pleasure we receive from the imitation even of disagreeable objects^b, rather farther than, I believe, he thought of. A critic of much more taste and much less prejudice, speaking of the Philoctetes of Sophocles^c, has observed, "that the antients thought bodily pains and wounds, &c." (περιωδυνιας και τραυματος) proper objects to be re-presented on the stage. See also the Trachiniae
 " of

* Theatre des Grecs, i. 345.

^b Above, cap. iv. Transl. Part I. Sect. 5.

^c See v. 749, &c. particularly, 796, 7 : and the description of the bleeding wound, v. 845.

Μελαινα τ' αἷμα τις παρεργαγεν ποδῶ Αἰμορραγῆς φλεψ. ----

" of Sophocles, and the lamentations of Hercules
" in it⁴."

Hippolytus, after having been dragged over the rocks, and almost torn to pieces, by his fiery coursers, appears upon the stage with his mangled and bleeding limbs⁵.—But, according to Boileau, Dacier, &c. these are all "objets aimables."

NOTE 88.

P. 133. THE COMMOTI ARE FOUND IN SOME ONLY.

The Greek says—ἰδία δὲ, τὰ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς ΚΑΙ κομμοί. Here, the κομμοί, and the τὰ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς, are represented as distinct things. But in the definition afterwards, Κομμοί appears to be the name given to the joint lamentation of the chorus and the actors. Κομμοί δὲ, θρηνῶ κοινῶ χορῶ καὶ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς. Victorius states this difficulty, but without giving any satisfactory solution. And indeed I see no way of reconciling these passages, unless we suppose Aristotle to have expressed himself very loosely and inaccurately, and to have meant, that κομμοί was the name appropriated to that part of the Χοροίκον which joined or alternated with one or more of the ἀπὸ σκηνῆς—i. e. the actors; so that by, Κομμοί δὲ, θρηνῶ κοινῶ χορῶ

κκλ

⁴ Dr. Warton's Essay on Pope, vol. i. 73, Note.

⁵ Hippol. Eurip. v. 1236, &c.—and 1348. In Mr. Potter's translation, v. 1318, 19, 20; and 1438, &c.

καὶ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς, we are to understand only, that Κομμοῦ was that θρηῖ or lamentation of the chorus, in which the actors, alternately, took part; as if the Greek had been thus:—θρηῖ χορῶν ὅτι ΚΟΙΝΩΝΟΥΣΙΝ οἱ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς. And so, τὰ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς ΚΑΙ κομμοὶ would only mean, the κομμοὶ of the chorus with the ἀπὸ σκηνῆς—that is, mixed with the lamentation of the actors, or persons of the drama.

But it seems more for the credit of our philosophical critic, to give up the first of these passages as corrupt, and to adhere to the plain sense of the definition. I have, therefore, taken no notice of the words, τὰ ἀπὸ σκηνῆς, in my version. Nothing is lost by the suppression. The sense of the word κομμοῦ is left, like that of the other terms, to be fixed by its definition.

NOTE '89.

P. 134. BETWEEN ENTIRE CHORAL ODES.

I confess myself not satisfied as to the meaning of this expression, ὍΛΩΝ χορικῶν μελῶν. I have therefore adhered to the fair and literal translation of the words.—But what is an entire choral ode or song? Is it that, which is in the regular lyric form, in strophe and antistrophe? So it seems most natural to understand it. But a difficulty meets us. For when the Παρῶδῶν, as it often, and indeed almost always, happens, is not such a regular gular Antistrophic Ode, what name is to be given to that part of the Tragedy, which lies between the παρόδῳ and the first Antistrophic Ode? It cannot make a part of the Πρόλογος, for that ends with the Παρόδῳ. The Exode is out of the question. There remains only the Episode; and to that it cannot belong, consistently with Aristotle's definition of ἑπιστρώδιον, because it will not be, according to this sense of ἴλων, "between entire choral Odes." If we take entire to mean, all choral, i.e. not broken and interrupted by the ἀποσκήνης, or the persons of the drama, we shall still be embarrassed with the same difficulty: for, whenever the παρόδῳ is not, in this sense, entire, which is frequently the case*, the part between that and the first entire Ode, will be without a name.

Shall we, then, with some commentators, suppose Aristotle by ἴλων χορικών μελῶν, to have meant only, ὅλας χορῆς μελῶν—i.e. melodies sung by the whole chorus†? This removes the difficulty. Yet I can hardly conceive, that he would have expressed himself in a manner so wantonly ambiguous, when

* As in the Παρόδῳ of the Orestes of Euripides, the Electra of Sophocles, &c.

† So Goulston—"Inter plenos chóricos cantus; qui scil. ab universo fiebant choro." Vict. "Pleni integrique cantus." So Piccol. "Intieri canti." Heinsius, Dacier, and Batteux, avoid the difficulty by omitting the word ἴλων in their translations.

when the clear and decisive expression—ὅλα χορὰ, which he presently after uses, was so obvious.

From an accurate and philosophical writer, one would naturally expect a chapter of definitions to be clear. But whoever expects it here will certainly be disappointed. Almost every definition, to be perfectly intelligible, wants other definitions, which are not given, and which the obscure and imperfect information to be found in other antient authors will not enable us to supply.

NOTE 90.

P. 134. THE PARODE IS THE FIRST SPEECH OF THE WHOLE CHORUS.

Παρόδος μιν ἡ πρώτη ΛΕΞΙΣ ὅλα χορὰ.—Though λεξίς, in its proper signification, is mere speech, yet it appears to have been occasionally extended to such melody as imitated speech, and to have answered nearly to the modern term recitative. [See NOTE 46, and particularly the passage from Plutarch at the end of it.] And such, I have no doubt, is the sense in which it is here used, to distinguish the melody of the Parodos from that of the regular choral odes; which I suppose to have been a more varied, measured, and, as we may, not improperly, term it, a more musical melody. For want of understanding this distinction, the commentators have made strange confusion, by taking λεξίς, either in its literal sense of mere speaking, or in a sense absolutely synonymous with μελῳ, as Dacier does. But it is hardly to be imagined, that Aristotle would use the word λεξις without any reason; and, that the Παρῳδῳ could not be mere speech, or declamation, such as that of our stage, seems evident enough from the expression, λεξις Ὀλοῦ χορῳ. A number may sing together, in a kind of measured recitative, or simple chanting; but they cannot well speak together, without intolerable confusion. This would be that very χορῳ διαλεκτικῳ, which Demetrius mentions as a thing absurd and unheard of *.
of

There is a singular passage in Dionysius of Halicarnassus, which affords, I think, a strong confirmation, both of the sense which I have here given to the word λεξις, and of the propriety of its

* Demet. περὶ Ερμ. Sect. 168, where speaking of some poems of Sappho, that descended beneath the Lyric dignity and elegance, both in subject and style, he says, "they were fitter to be recited, than sung, and were ill adapted to be performed by a chorus, or accompanied by the lyre; unless," says he, "there were such a thing as a speaking chorus:"—εἰ μὴ τις εἴη χορῳ διαλεκτικῳ.

Choral recitative, indeed, judiciously introduced, and not continued too long, I have often thought, might occasionally be so managed as to produce a striking effect. An example of it, and a very fine one, is to be found in an Oratorio of that admirable composer, Eman. Bach, of which the title, in English, is, The Israelites in the Wilderness.

its application in that sense to the choral Παροῖον. In the 11th section of his treatise De Struct. Orat. in order to shew, how little prosody was regarded by the composers of the Tragic melodies, he criticises the melody of the following lines from the Orestes of Euripides :

Σιγα, σιγα, λευκον ἵχνος ἀρβυλης

Τίθατε, μη κτυπεῖτε—

Ἀποπροβατ' ἐκείσ', ἀποπροβι κοίτας. v. 140.

Now it is remarkable, 1. that he calls this, ΜΕΛΟΣ, and yet represents it as said by Electra : Εὐριπίδης ΜΕΛΩΝ, ἃ πεποίηκε τῇ Ηλεκτρᾷ ΛΕΓΟΥΣΑΝ—πρὸς τὸν χορὸν.—2. That the melody, to which these words were set, was the simplest possible; a kind of chanting recitative. The three first words, for instance, were set to one note^b.

Σιγα, σιγα, λευκον—

—and in other words too, the same tone, as this author clearly informs us, was frequently repeated. This may be regarded as somewhat of a musical curiosity. For it is an authentic, though indeed a very scanty and imperfect specimen, of one part of the dramatic choral music of the Greeks. 3dly, This very melody was probably that of the Παροῖον of this Tragedy. Dionysius, indeed, gives gives these words to Electra^c; but in all the editions of Euripides which I have seen, the two first lines are given to the chorus; with more propriety, I think, if we attend to what goes before. Electra had just said to the chorus, on their coming in while Orestes was sleeping;

^b Ἐν γὰρ δὴ ταῦτοις, το, Σιγα, σιγα, λευκον, ἐφ' ἑΝΟΣ ΦΘΟΓΓΟΥ ΜΕΛΩΔΕΙΤΑΙ.

Ω φιλτάται γυναικες, ἡσυχῶ ποδὶ

Χωρεῖτε, μὴ ψοφεῖτε, μὴδ' ἐς κτυπῶ——

v. 134.

The words, therefore, which Dionysius, quoting probably by memory, attributes to Electra, would seem to come more naturally from the mouths of the choral virgins, repeating to each other the caution she had given them. But whether this be so or not, yet, that this was the first entry of the chorus upon the stage, is clear from the preceding speech of Electra: and the Lyric part, which follows that speech, if it does not begin with, probably contains, at least, the πρωτὴν λείξιν ὅλα χορῶν; being all in the regular choral form of Strophe and Antistrophe, and, in all probability, set throughout to melody of the same kind. Perhaps the whole chorus might not begin to sing, till the third Strophe, Ποτνια, ποτνια νύξ.—If, as Victorius contends, this be not the Parodos, it cannot begin before, v. 316.

Αἰ, Αἰ,

Δρομαδες ὥς—κ.τ.αλ.—

But, the very application of the word παροδῶν, which

^c So does the author of one of the arguments prefixed to the Tragedy: ὡς φησιν Ἑλέκτρα τῇ χορῶν.

which properly signifies the entry, or arrival of the chorus^d, to the πρωτη λεξις, or first speech of the whole chorus, shews, I think, sufficiently, the close connection of the two things; and that we are never to look for that first speech, at such a distance from the first entrance, of the chorus.

But, it may, perhaps, be objected to the distinction I understand here between λεξις and μελῶς, that it will expose us to the very difficulty mentioned in the last Note: it will make Aristotle's enumeration of the parts into which Tragedy is divided, incomplete; because, if we admit it, the part between the Παροδῶς and the first Στασιμον or regular Ode, will want a name. For, if any thing, it must be Επεισοδιον; but this, it may be said, it cannot be, because it will not be, according to Aristotle's definition, μεταξὺ χορικῶν ΜΕΛΩΝ; the Parode being not μελῶς, but λεξις. —It seems a sufficient answer to this objection, to observe, that λεξις, here, is not opposed to μελῶς in general, but only to a particular species of μελῶς. Strictly speaking, the simplest chant, or even such recitative, as approaches the nearest to common speech, is yet as much μελῶς, melody, music, as the most refined Opera song^e. It is called ^d — ἡ μὲν Εἰσοδος τῶν χορῶν, Παροδος. Jul. Poll.— And so the scholiast on Hephæstion: ἔτι καλεῖται ἡ πρωτὴ τῶν χορῶν ἐπὶ τὴν σκηνὴν εἰσοδῶς. Ed. de Pauw. p. 74.

^e See the 1st vol. Diss. II. p. 78, note ², and the passage of Aristoxenus, concerning the essential distinction between called λεξις, only comparatively. Nay, the word μελῳ is sometimes, in a wider sense, applied even to speech itself^f. And so, above, we have λεκτικὴ ἈΡΜΟΝΙΑ^g. Aristotle, therefore, in the expression χορικῶν ΜΕΛΩΝ, may be supposed, without any inconsistency, to include, what, afterwards, in the particular definition of παροδῳ, where distinction was necessary, he denominates λεξις.

It must be owned, that Aristotle's parsimonious brevity has left some confusion in this subject; but, in the illustrations of his commentators, it is "confusion worse confounded." And this has arisen from their applying to the Greek drama, without the slightest foundation, the Roman division into five acts. It is now, I believe, pretty well understood, that such an idea is totally inapplicable to the Greek Tragedy^h. If we must talk of acts, it would be more proper to say they had three; forming our division upon the three parts, which, according to Aristotle, were essential to every drama, the Πρόλογῳ, the Επισοδιον, and the Εξοδῳ; between all speech, and all singing; i.e. that in the one, the voice moves by slides, in the other, by intervals, or skips.

^f Vol. i. Dissert. II. p. 77. note^u: and Dion. Hal. Sect. XI.

^g Cap. 4.

^h This was proved long ago in a dissertation by the Abbé Vatri, in the 11th vol. of the Mem. de l'Acad. Roy, &c.—See also the preface to Franklin's Sophocles.—Yet Lord Kaim says, positively, of the Greek Tragedies—"there are five acts in each."—El of Crit. ii. 414.

Ἐξοδ.; not upon the number of choral odes, which is different in different dramas. In the Trachiniæ, for example, there are not fewer than six choral odes. If these are to determine the number of acts, as Dacier contends, this Tragedy will consist of seven. Brumoy, to divide this piece into five acts, is reduced to admit an entire ode in the middle of his first act; so that the Episode, which Aristotle defines to be that part which is μεταξὺ ὅλων χορικῶν μέλων, begins in the Πρόλογ., and before the Παρόδ., which, according to Brumoy, must be the second ode. Another ode he is obliged to admit in the middle of his last act; contrary to Aristotle's definition of Ἐξοδ.—Dacier makes the prologue of the Oedipus Coloneus consist of 700 verses¹. Nothing can be more improbable, or more inconsistent with Aristotle's idea of its purpose. [See NOTE 40 *.] But he was forced into this absurdity, only by the supposed necessity of reducing the intervals between the odes to three, and, consequently, the acts, (adding the prologue and exode,) to five. For if the true parode be at v. 118, (Ὄρα· τις αἶψ' ἦν; κ.τ.αλ.) as I doubt not it is, there will then be four such intervals, and, consequently, six acts. He repeats the same mistakes in dividing the Phænissæ, in which there are five regular odes, as in many other of the Greek Tragedies. In the Oedipus Tyrannus he makes the odè, Ἐπεὶ ἰγώ
μαντις

¹ Note on Aristot. p. 177.

* In the 1st volume.

παντες εἰμι, (v. 1096,) come in the middle of an act; and then, because he chose to place it so, is forced to deny that it was sung, though it is in the most regular Lyric form ^k.

The expression, ΠΡΩΤΗ λῆξις ὅλα χορῶν, seems to imply, that other choral parts, beside the Parode, were also λῆξις; i.e. were sung by the whole chorus in the same sort of chanting and simple melody. But who will undertake to distinguish these parts, and to tell us, exactly, what was Air, and what Recitative? what was sung by the whole choir, and what was, à voce sola^l?—I will not bewilder my reader and myself in a labyrinth without a clue.

The scholiast upon the Phœniœ (v. 212.) says, that the Παροδία was sung by the chorus, “as they entered upon the stage.”—Παροδία δὲ, ἵστω ὡδὴ χορῶν βαδίζοντες, ῥιθμοῖσι αἶμα τῇ εἰσοδῇ, ὡς το—Σιγα, σιγα, &c. And, indeed, in the example he here gives from the Orestes, the entrance of the choral ^k Remarques sur l'Oedipe, at the end of his translation of that Tragedy.

^l The learned reader knows that this cannot be determined by their speaking of themselves in the singular number, for this they do almost constantly, in all the Odes. So, Εἴπαρ ΕΓΩ μωρὸς εἰμι, just referred to, &c.—Neither can we say, what at first view, indeed, seems probable, that whatever appears in the regular Lyric form of Strophe and Antistrophe, was air, as opposed to recitative, or mere chant: for in some Tragedies the Παροδία itself is in this regular Lyric form; as, in the Trachinæ and Electra of Sophocles; Iphig. in Aul. of Euripides, &c.

choral troop is clearly marked by what precedes. Electra says - - -

Ἄιδ' αὖ ΠΑΡΕΙΣΙ τοῖς ἑμοῖς θρηνημασι

Φίλαι συνῶδοι. - - -

v. 132.

And this is frequently the case. Thus, in the Phænissæ, that the Τυρίον οἶδμα λιπυρ'—v. 212, (not Καδμῶ ἑμολε—v. 651, as Dacier makes it,) is the true Parode, as, indeed, it is expressly called by the author of the Greek argument prefixed to the Persæ of Æschylus, is confirmed by this passage, announcing the entry of the choral virgins, in the preceding Iambics, where the old attendant desires Antigone to retire:—

Ὅχλῳ γὰρ, ὡς ταραγμῶ, εἰσῆλθεν πολιν,

ΧΩΠΕΙ [is coming] γυναικῶν πρὸς δόμους τυραννικῆς.

v. 206.

Thus too, in the Oedipus Coloneus, the first appearance of the chorus is thus announced by Antigone:

Σίγα· ΠΟΡΕΥΟΝΤΑΙ γὰρ ὦΔΕ δὴ τινες

Χρόνῳ παλαιοῖ - - -

v. 111.

And the Parode immediately follows, v. 117.

In the Iphigenia in Tauris, the arrival of the choral women is marked by themselves:

Χο.—ΕΜΟΛΟΝ· τί νεον; &c.

v. 137.

See also, v. 65. Ὅυπω - - - παρῆσιν - - -

The Parode is not less distinctly marked in the Medea, v. 131. Χο. Ἐκλυον φωνῶν—κ. τ. ἀλ. — in the the Heracida, where the chorus is called in by Iolaus, v. 69:—in the Helena, v. 179:—in the Hercules, v. 107, &c.

When the attendant spirit, in Comus, “opens the business of the drama to a solitary forest, “without an audience,” he does no more than Venus^a, and the ghost of Polydorus^b, and Iphigenia^c, and many others, in the Tragedies of Euripides, had done before him. The learned and ingenious editor of Milton’s Occasional Poems says, that, “in a Greek Tragedy, this “objection would have been obviated by the “chorus, which was always present ;” but I am afraid the want of “recollection” must be transferred from Milton to himself^d. There are not, I think, more than three or four Greek Tragedies, in which the chorus is present from the beginning^e.

This Ἰαποδο, or entry of the chorus, probably made one of the most splendid and popular parts of the Ὀΐς, or shew, of the antient Tragedy. It is mentioned by Aristotle, in his Nicomachean Ethics, as a custom of the Megarians, who were a luxurious and ostentatious people, to be at the expence

^a In the Hippolytus. ^b Hecuba. ^c Iphig. in Aul.

^d Mr. Warton’s edit. of Milton’s Occ. Poems, p. 129.

^e Milton did not recollect, that the Spirit was opening the business of the drama to a solitary forest, without an audience.”

^f See Dacier, p. 170, note 5.

expend of furnishing purple dresses for the Παροδῶν even of their comic stage'. It appears, however, from a curious fragment of Menander, to have been a practice, not uncommon with the Greek Managers, to place mutes among their choral singers, in order to complete the visible number requisite :

- - - - - ὥσπερ τῶν χορῶν
Οὐ πάντες ἀδῶσ', ἀλλ' ἀφῶνοι δυο τινες
Ἦ τρεῖς παρεσηκασί, ΠΑΝΤΩΝ ΕΣΧΑΤΟΙ,
Εἰς τὸν ἀριθμὸν—καὶ τεθ' ὁμοίως πῶς ἔχει
Χῶραν κατεχομέν, ζῶσι δ' οἷς ἐσὶν βίῳ[Ⓢ].

- - - - - As in a chorus
All do not sing, but, in the hindmost ranks,
Some two or three stand mute to make a num-
So is it here;—we serve to fill a place; [ber,
They only live, who have the means of living.

NOTE 91.

P. 134. THE STASIMON INCLUDES ALL THOSE CHORAL ODES THAT ARE WITHOUT ANAPÆSTS AND TROCHEES.

Στασιμον δὲ, μελῶν χορῶν το ἀνευ ἀναπαισῶν καὶ τροχαίων.—If we are to understand this strictly, as expressing the exclusion of those feet from the regular

* καὶ κωμῳδοῖς χορηγῶν, ἐν τῇ ΠΑΡΟΔΩΙ πορφύραν εἰσφερόν, ὥσπερ οἱ Μεγαρεῖς. IV. 2. ed. Ox. Wilk.

* Menand. and Philem. Reliq. ed. Clerici, p. 221.

gular odes, I cannot perceive it to be true. Dacier, therefore, understands only, that those feet were very rarely used in those Odes, compared with the Παροδῶν, which he calls, “premier chant du chœur;” in which, he says, and very truly, that they prevail.—“Ces deux pieds - - - regnent,” &c. p. 179.—It is possible that Aristotle might mean this; but it is not what he says. He says, “that μῆλον—that lyric part, of the chorus, which is “without anapæsts and trochees.” I rather think, he means only those Odes, the regular stanzas of which are not broken and interrupted by an intermixture of anapæstic or trochaic verses κατὰ συνημα, (according to the metrical language,) like the Parodos, as I take it to be, of the Antigone,—Ακτις αἰλιν — v. 100.—that of the Philoctetes—Τὴ χρεη—v. 136, and of the Prometheus of Æschylus. And this, I believe, will, in general, be found true of the regular Odes subsequent to the Παροδῶν. For, in the Παροδῶν itself, the general prevalence of the anapæstic measure must be evident to every one who turns over the Greek Tragedians.

NOTE 92.

P. 134. THE COMMOS, &c.

Κομμῶν——“Ἦγατο γυναικῶν μυρία πλῆθος, μετὰ ΚΟΜΜΟΥ ΚΑΙ ὈΛΟΛΥΓΗΣ” τῆτεςι, γοῦ καὶ ὀδυρμα.—Suidas.

H 2

The

The phrase, ἀπο σκηνης, is commonly used by Aristotle to denote the actors, as distinguished from the chorus; because, as Jul. Pollux tells us, ΣΚΗΝΗ μὲν ΤΠΟΚΡΙΤΩΝ ἰδίων, ἡ δὲ ὄρχηστρα τῆς χορῆς^a. Thus, Prob. xlix. of Sect. 19, speaking of the Dorian and Hypophrygian modes, he says, they were both, χορῶ μὲν ἀναρμύσα, τοῖς δὲ ἀπο σκηνης οἰκιστοῖρα — So, Prob. xxx. and Prob. xv. τὰ ἀπο σκηνης, (the dialogue,) is opposed to τὰ τῆς χορῆς—the chorus. I was much surprised, therefore, to find the meaning of this phrase so widely mistaken, in the late Camb. edit. where ἀπο σκηνης is thus explained: “id est, ἀτεχνῶ—ad choragi munus, non Poetæ, pertinens^b.”

An example of the Κομμῶ, pointed out by Victorius, may be found in the Andromache of Euripides, v. 1197.

I know not why some of the commentators confine these joint lamentations of chorus and actors to the Exode, or what they call the last act. They are often, I think, to be found in other parts of the drama; “dans le cours des actes,” as Dacier rightly observes. We have an example of this between Tecmessa and the chorus, in the Ajax, v. 901. Ἰω, μοι μοι - - -. Another occurs very early in the Iphigenia in Tauris, v. 143, &c. where Iphigenia, assisted by the choral virgins, her attendants, performs the funereal libation to the manes

^a IV. 19.

^b Ed. Cantab. 1785, p. 125.

manes of her brother, whom she supposes to be dead, and sings a funereal dirge. The chorus, indeed, have so small a part in this lamentation, that it may be thought hardly to answer Aristotle's definition of θρηνη κοιν &c. But this, in fact, seems no objection, because the lamentation of Iphigenia is broken off abruptly, as Mr. Markland has well observed, at v. 235, by the arrival of the shepherd. I consider it, therefore, only as an unfinished Κομμη. But, that it answers to that idea, appears, I think, from the whole cast of it; from the frequent occurrence of the interjections, φεν, φεν—ι, ι—αι, αι—οι μοι, &c.—and of the very word, θρηνη, throughout, and, from the answer of the chorus:

Χορ.—ΑΝΤΙΨΑΛΜΟΤΣ ᾠδας

Τμνον τ' Ασιηταν σοι

Βαρβαρον ιαχαν

Δεσποινα γ' ἐξαυδασω,

Ταν ἐν ΘΡΗΝΟΙΣΙ μυσαν

Νεκυσι μελεον^d.

v. 178.

To thee thy faithful train
The Asiatic hymn will raise,
A doleful, a barbaric strain,
Responsive to thy lays,

And

^c Ω δμωαι, δυσθρηνητοις

Ως θρηνοις ἐγκειμαι.

v. 143.

^d "Mortuis miseram." "Quid hoc sit, nescio," says Mr. Markland. But, perhaps, it should be rendered,

And steep in tears the mournful song,
 Notes which to the dead belong;
 Dismal notes attun'd to woe
 By Pluto in the realms below.—

Potter's Eurip. v. 206.

NOTE 93.

P. 135. THIS RAISES DISGUST, RATHER THAN TERROR OR COMPASSION.

Literally,—“for this is neither terrible, nor piteous, but shocking.” εἰ γὰρ φοβερον, ἔδε ἰλεεινον τατο, ἀλλὰ μιᾶρον εἰν.—But we certainly must not understand Aristotle to assert, that no pity is excited by the sufferings of an exemplary character. This would be directly contrary to his own account of pity: Ελεῖ μιν, περὶ τοῦ ἀναξίου². He must mean only, that they are rather shocking, than affecting; as it is well rendered by Piccolomini; “un così fatto caso non hà, nè del terribile, (per dir così,) “nè del compassionevole; ma più tosto hà dell’ “abominevole, e dello scellerato.” That is, as this “Mortuis vanam, inutilem,” in the Homeric sense of μελεῖ. See Il. Ψ. 795—μελεῖ αἶν—useless, unavailing praise. So, in Virgil—“inani munere.” Æn. vi. 886.—And, Æn. xi. 51.

Nos juvenem exanimum - - -

- - - vano mœs'i comitamur honore.

Μελεῖ—ΜΑΤΑΙΟΣ. Suid. and Hesych.—So, Apoll. Rhod. i. 1249. ΜΕΛΕΗ δὲ οἱ ἐπλετο φων.—“Vanus ei erat clamor.”

² And see Rhet. II. 8.

this clear and exact, though prolix, writer has explained it in his subsequent annotation, — “ quello affetto dell’ odio e dell’ abominazione, “ sopravvanza in modo l’ affetto del timore, e quel “ della compassione, che gli ricuopre, e gli asconde,
 “ e supera, in modo che quasi non si fan sentire.”

Μισογον—shocking, disgusting, &c. because contrary to our established ideas of justice, and to every moral sentiment of our nature. History, indeed, must represent facts as they are; without any regard to the sentiments they may excite. But the case is far otherwise with the fictions of the Poet. We think he ought not to make such a representation of things^b. We consider it as discouraging to virtue, as immoral,—even, in some degree, as irreligious. What reader of CLARISSA does not find the pity, the pleasurable pity, at least, which it is the object of such a work to excite, frequently counteracted, and diminished, to say no more, by some indignant feelings of this kind? The story of Sidney Biddulph, though a work of considerable merit in the execution, is liable to the same objection. The mind of a reader is harrassed and revolted throughout by the most improbable and determined perverseness of unfortunate

^b “ Cum historia vera successus rerum minime pro “ meritis virtutum et scelerum narret; corrigat eam “ Poesis, et exitus et fortunas, secundum merita, et ex
 “ lege Nemeseos, exhibet.”

Bacon, De Aug. Sc. lib. ii. c. 13.

unfortunate combinations; and shocked, at last, by the wanton production of misery, neither deserved, nor likely, — Ου φοβερὸν, εἴτε ἱλαστικὸν τῷ, ἀλλὰ μισερὸν. Fontenelle says, in perfect conformity with Aristotle, “ Plus le heros est aimé, plus “ il est convenable de le rendre heureux à la fin. “ Il ne faut point renvoyer le spectateur avec la “ douleur de plaindre la destinée d’un homme “ vertueux.” Reflex. sur la Poet. Sect. 52.

To do justice to the author’s meaning, two other things should be kept in mind: 1. That, by his εὐτυχίας, he here means a character of consummate virtue, whose misfortunes were not drawn upon him by any fault of his own. This is evident from what follows. The sense of the word is sufficiently fixed by its opposite, ΣΦΟΔΡΑ πονηρὸν, as well as by the equivalent expression, ἀρετὴ ΔΙΑΦΕΡΩΝ καὶ δικαιοσύνη, in his description of the proper character for Tragedy*. 2. That he presently afterwards softens a little the rigour of his precept as here delivered, by saying, that the character should be either such as he had prescribed, “ or better rather than worse :” βέλτιον ἢ μᾶλλον ἢ χεῖρον.

NOTE 94.

P. 135. FOR IT IS NEITHER GRATIFYING IN A MORAL VIEW, &c.

Οὐτε γὰρ ΦΙΛΑΝΘΡΩΠΟΝ —. Without entering into a long discussion of all that has been urged by

* For Aristotle’s account of εὐτυχία, the reader may consult Eth. Nicom. V. 10. ed. Wilk.

by the commentators in favour of the different senses they have assigned to the word φιλανθρωπον here, I shall only say, that, upon the most attentive comparison of this passage with another, in cap. xviii. where the term again occurs, it appears to me, that the full meaning of it is, gratifying to philanthropy; pleasing by its conformity to our natural sense of justice, by its moral tendency. Indeed this seems to follow from the word μισαρων, to which φιλανθρωπον is opposed. The representation of a good man (επισηκης) made miserable is μισαρων—disgusting, shocking. Why? Plainly, on account of its evident injustice, and immoral tendency. The representation of a very bad man (σφοδρα πονηρος) punished by calamity, is φιλανθρωπον;—that is, pleasing to the spectator, on the same principle, from its opposite tendency.

A singular, but somewhat similar, use is made of the same word in Plutarch's dialogue περι Μυσικης; where, speaking of the wicked innovations of the more modern musicians, Timotheus, Philoxenus, &c. he says of them—φιλοκαινοι γεγονασι, τον ΦΙΛΑΝΘΡΩΠΟΝ και θεματικον ΝΥΝ 'ΟΝΟΜΑΖΟΜΕΝΟΝ διωξαντες. M. Burette's note upon this is perfectly unsatisfactory*. I believe we should read—ΤΟ φιλανθρωπον και ΘΕΑΤΡΙΚΟΝ—κ. τ. αλ.—i. e. "being lovers of novelty, they affect what is "now termed the pleasing and theatrical style."

The

* Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscript. vol. xix. p. 325, oct. ed.
—In H. Stephens's ed. of Plut. p. 2080.

The Theatre, we know, was considered by the purists of that time, as the great source of corruption in Music. The reader may see how Plutarch rails, on this subject, p. 2081, and 2089; where he laments—παντας της μουσικης ἀπτομενους προς την ΘΕΑΤΡΙΚΗΝ προσκεχωρηκεναι μεσαν.—It appears; from his expression, NTN ὀνομαζομενον, that this was a new and fashionable use of the word φιανθρωπον; which, from the sense of pleasing to natural benevolence, (as in the passage of Aristotle), seems to have been extended to signify, what was pleasing, and grateful, to the popular taste, in general; in opposition to those more chaste and severe productions of the artist, which aimed only at the gratification of the critical, and the learned. And, indeed, no sort of philanthropy is more common, in all times, and in every art, than that of accommodation to the public taste.

NOTE 95.

P. 136. OUR TERROR, BY SOME RESEMBLANCE BETWEEN THE SUFFERER AND OURSELVES.

Thus, in the Rhetoric, it is recommended to the Orator, as one method of exciting terror in his hearers, της ὁμοιοτης δεικνυναι πασχοντας, ἢ πεπονθοτας *. Aristotle's doctrine concerning the importance of this resemblance to ourselves in the object

* II. 5.

object of the passion to be excited, and the extent he gives to the word ὁμοιος, may be seen in the passages of his Rhetoric referred to in the margin^b. The resemblance, however, here particularly meant, is undoubtedly resemblance of character. This is well explained by M. Batteux in few words: "Un crime atroce, un horreur de scekrat, revolte le spectateur, et par cette revolte même, le rassure contre la crainte; parcequ'il se sent aussi éloigné du malheur, qu'il l'est du crime." [Quatre Poétiques, tom. i. p. 307.] Or, as it is more fully developed by Piccolomini, "Riputando, per il più, gl' uomini se stessi buoni, o almeno non cattivi, ed in somma, non degni di male; e, per conseguente, dissimili à quelle persône inique, in cui veggon' il male, e in questo differenti da esse, che elle lo meritano, ed essi non lo meritano: non vengon' à dubitar di cadere in tai mali, e, conseguentemente, non ne nasce timore in loro." p. 194.

NOTE 96.

P. 136. NOR YET INVOLVED IN MISFORTUNE BY DELIBERATE VICE, OR VILLANY; BUT BY SOME ERROR OF HUMAN FRAILTY.

Μητε δια κακίαν και μοχθηρίαν μεταβαλλων εις την δυστυχίαν, αλλά δι' αμαρτιαν τινα - - - . Thus, in the Ethic. Nicom. V. 10. p. 69. he uses μοχθηρία, and κακία,

^b Ubi supra. Cap. viii. p. 559, E.—Cap. x. init.

κακία, as synonymous : and, VII. 9 ; where he says of μοχθηρία, that it is ΣΤΝΕΧΗΣ πονηρία— a vicious character, disposition, habit, &c.—It also implies deliberate choice and intention, (— ὅταν δὲ ἐκ προαίρεσιως, μοχθηρία, V. 8.) in opposition to ἀμαρτία, which excludes προαίρεσις, and is ἀνευ ΚΑΚΙΑΣ. (ibid.)

To understand rightly what the philosopher says in this part of his work on Poetry, and especially his application of his doctrine to such characters as Oedipus and Thyestes, we ought carefully to take his own sense of his own words. For want of this, Dacier* confounds himself and his readers in his note about Thyestes. He mistakes Aristotle's sense of ἀμαρτία. Dacier's "involontaire" includes

* A fine writer, M. Marmontel, has fallen into this and several other mistakes, by following Dacier and other translators, (for we are none of us to be depended on,) instead of taking the meaning of Aristotle from Aristotle himself.—See his Poétique Française, tom. ii. p. 109, where he adopts Dacier's "involontaire." In another place he says, " Dans Sophocle, Oedipe voyant arriver les " enfans qu'il a eu de sa mere, il leur tend les bras et leur " dit : approchez, embrassez votre — Il n'acheve pas, et " le sublime est dans la reticence." Now the fact is, that this reticence is solely the property of the good father Brumoy, with respect to whom we may apply to M. Marmontel the words of Aristotle, quoted below,—ἀδικῶ μὲν ἐκ ἐστὶ, ἀδικεῖ δὲ. Brumoy translates—" approchez, et embrassez votre - - - frere," &c.—Sophocles wrote—

- - - - - δευρ' ἰτ', ἰλθετε
Ὡς τὰς ἀδελφὰς τασδε τὰς ἑμὰς χερας.

cludes both ἀκυσιον, and ἀπροβλεπτον, which Aristotle distinguishes; his αἰμαρτηματα being not involuntary, but only, not ἐκ προαιρέσεως. See the whole cap. x. of lib. 5, as above. One passage, in cap. ix. of lib. 7, will particularly illustrate Aristotle's examples. Ὅι ΑΚΡΑΤΕΙΣ (such were Oedipus and Thyestes, men of ungovernable passion,) ΑΔΙΚΟΙ μιν ἐκ εἰσι, (i. e. are not unjust men—not κακοί, μοχθηροί, of bad dispositions, &c.) ΑΔΙΚΟΥΣΙ δὲ—yet they commit transient and occasional wrong, δια παθῶ, as he says elsewhere ^b.

The objections made by Corneille, Fontenelle, and other critics, to such subjects as that of the Oedipus, which they hold to be improper for Tragedy on account of the supposed fatality of the crimes committed, are well and solidly answered in an excellent note of the Abbé Batteux upon this passage.

NOTE 97.

P. 137. UPON THE STAGE AND IN THE DRAMATIC CONTESTS.

—Επι των σκηνων και των ἀγωνων—i. e. merely, in the representation. There seems to be no more foundation for the distinction which Dacier here supposes, between σκηνη, and ἀγων, than for the same distinction between ἀγων, and ὑποκριται, in the similar expression, ἀγωνῶ και ὑποκριτων, in cap. vi.

^b Ὅ μιν ἀκρατῆς, εἰδως ὅτι φαντα, πραττει δια παθῶ.
VII. 2. p. 86.

NOTE 98.

P. 137. EURIPIDES - - - THE MOST TRAGIC OF ALL POETS.

—More, however, it has been observed, with respect to the emotion of pity, than that of terror. And so, Quintilian: “In affectibus cum omnibus mirus, tum in iis qui MISERATIONE constant, facile præcipuus.” [lib. x. c. 1.] Yet the powers of this admirable, though unequal, genius, were by no means confined to emotions of tenderness and pity. He, too, as one of “Nature’s darlings,” possessed that “golden key,” which can not only “ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears,” but can “unlock” also, and at the same time, the “gates of horror,” and of “thrilling fears.” As proofs of this, I am tempted to produce two passages of this Poet, which I could never read without shuddering.

In that scene between Medea and Jason, in which, previous to the execution of her horrid vengeance, she deludes him with feigned reconciliation and submission, when Jason, addressing the children, says,

Ἰδοίμι δ' ὑμᾶς εὐτραφῆς ἤβης τελευ-Μολοντάς, ἐχθρῶν τῶν ἐμῶν ὑπερτερὰς*.

—Medea

-
- * “O may I see you blooming in the prime “Of manhood, and to every virtue train’d, “Superior to my foes!”

[Mr. Potter’s Transl. v. 989.]

—Medea turns away her face and weeps: and when Jason asks the reason of her tears, she answers,

Οὐδέν.—ΤΕΚΝΩΝ ΤΩΝΔ' ἔννοχμενη περὶ^b.

“ And why,” says Jason again, “ lament thus “ over these children?”—Medea, then, knowing, but veiling in ambiguity, her dreadful purpose of destroying them, replies,

ΕΤΙΚΤΟΝ ΑὐΤΗΣ.—ΖΗΝ Δ' ὅΤ' ἔΞΗΤΧΟΤ ΤΕΚΝΑ,

ΕΙΣΗΛΘΕ Μ' ΟΙΚΤΟΣ, ΕΙ ΓΕΝΗΣΕΤΑΙ ΤΑΔΕ!

v. 930.

“ I am their mother:—when thy wish was breath'd
“ That they might live, a piteous thought arose, “ If that might be!” - - -

Potter's Eurip. v. 1000.

The other passage is in the Electra. In the fine scene between Orestes and Electra, immediately after the murder of their mother, Orestes asks his sister,

Κατιδὲς οἷον αἱ ταλαίν' ἔων πεπλων

Εβαλεν, ἔδειξε, μασὸν ἐν φοναίς;— v. 1206.

Mark'd you not, how my mother, ere I struck her,
Withdrew her robe, and to our view expos'd
The breast that nourish'd us^c! - - -

I know

^b “ Nothing:—I was but thinking of my sons.”

^c The excellent translator of Euripides will pardon my having recourse here to a version of my own, merely
for

I know not what more can be said to the praise of Euripides, than, that no one, I believe, can read this scene without being reminded of the MACBETH of SHAKSPEARE.

NOTE 99.

P. 137. THAT WHICH IS OF A DOUBLE CONSTRUCTION, AND ALSO ENDS IN TWO OPPOSITE EVENTS, TO THE GOOD, AND TO THE BAD, CHARACTERS.

ΣΥΣΤΑΞΙΣ, ἡ - - - ΣΥΣΤΑΞΙΝ ἔχουσα—i. e. "That construction which has a double construction."—Can this be as the author left it? I cannot but suspect the first συστασις to be an interpolation. Without it, all will go on well.—Ἡ μὲν γὰρ καλλιῆ Τραγωδία ἐκ ταύτης τῆς συστάσεως ἐστίν. - - - Δευτέρα δέ, [sc. Τραγωδία,] ἡ πρώτη λεγόμενη ὑπο τινῶν ἐστίν· ἡ δὲ διπλὴ τε τὴν συστασιν ἔχουσα, καὶ τελευτῶσα, &c.

The particle, TE, here, is neglected by most of the commentators and translators, who, accordingly, of two distinct things make one only; understanding Aristotle, by his διπλὴ συστασις, to mean only a fable that has a double catastrophe, ending oppositely to opposite characters. But the expression for the sake of pointing out more distinctly to the English reader that particular circumstance of the original, which strikes me most. Mr. Potter's lines are,

" Didst thou see her, when she drew
 " Her vests aside, and bared her breasts— v. 1338.

pression is, "that has both a double construction, "and a double catastrophe." διπλην ΤΕ ΤΗΝ ΨΥΧΑΣΙΝ. ΚΑΙ ΤΙΛΕΥΤΩΣΑ—κ. τ. αλ. We must not, however, confound this double construction with duplicity of action, and what we call double plots. I believe Castelvetro, who did not let the τ escape him, has explained it rightly. "Dice, che questa "constitutione di favola è doppia, perciocche ha "due maniere di persone, l'una di buone, o di "mezzane, e l'altra di scelerate." (p. 293.) An explanation that will come still better recommended to the reader by the coincident opinion of the learned and accurate author of Critical Observations on Books, antient and modern; who has given the following explanatory version of this passage*: "That constitution of an Epic tale", "which is reckoned the first by some, is in reality "but the second in point of excellence, namely, "that which, like the Odyssey, has a double set of "characters, one virtuous, and one vitious, and "wherein the action also ends contrarywise to the "virtuous and vitious agents, so that the former "terminate in prosperity, and the latter in adversity."—These two things, though closely connected, are evidently distinct. There may be a double double set of characters, where yet there is no contrariety of catastrophe, but all ends well to all. —Such a fable, as Aristotle describes, though a very different thing from our plot and under-plot, yet, as it consists of opposite characters, opposite interests, and opposite events, may well enough be considered as of a double construction—διπλῆς συσκευῆς. Unity of action, indeed, upon Aristotle's principles, was essential both to the single and to the double fable; yet that unity admits of degrees, and the double fable was less strictly one action than the single. The single fable might be compared to a single stream: the plot and under-plot, to two separate, though contiguous, and now and then intermingling, streams: Aristotle's fable of double construction, to two opposite collateral currents, (if such a thing may be imagined,) in the same channel.

* Number I. p. 3.

† I do not see the learned writer's reason for inserting the word Epic. Aristotle is here plainly speaking of the Tragic fable, though he draws his illustration, indeed, from an Epic Poem.

NOTE 100.

P. 138. THIS KIND OF PLEASURE IS NOT THE PROPER PLEASURE OF TRAGEDY, BUT BELONGS RATHER TO COMEDY, &c.

What is the proper pleasure to be expected from Tragedy, we have already been told, and we are told again, more plainly, if possible, in the next chapter. It is—ἡ ἀπὸ ἐλεος καὶ φόβου ἡδονή: “the pleasure that arises from pity and terror*.”

The

* Transl. Sect. 13.

The double fable Aristotle seems to have considered as not giving this pleasure, or at least, as giving it weakly and imperfectly, because all the unhappiness of the catastrophe falls on the odious characters, the σφοδρα πονηρας. In the room of this pleasure, which Tragedy ought to give, the double fable substitutes that of a satisfactory conclusion; a catastrophe accommodated to the wishes of the spectator. But this, says Aristotle, is a pleasure that rather belongs to Comedy than to Tragedy: ΜΑΛΛΟΝ της κωμωδίας οίκετα. For he is not here rejecting this double plan, but only shewing why it is not, as some held it to be, the best, πρωτη. Such Tragedies, he says, afford a pleasure of the same kind, at least, with that which Comedy affords; though Comedy indeed goes farther; for there, all must end well; enemies, as inveterate as Orestes and Ægisthus, must shake hands at last, and the spectator must be dismissed with no impression upon his mind, but that of pure and unmingled pleasure.

If we understand the passage in this way, it will not, I think, be necessary to suppose, what, I own, I was once much inclined to suppose with Heinsius, that the text is defective; and that, after the word θεαταις, Aristotle had, originally, mentioned the third and worst kind of fable, terminating in a happy event to all the characters; to which, and not to the second species, what follows about Comedy was meant to be applied. Very specious reasons might certainly be produced in support of such a conjecture, if it were necessary. But we have no encouragement from MSS. to suspect any omission, and the passage, as here explained, seems to have little, or no, difficulty. The chief objection is, that what is here said of Comedy is not applicable to the double Tragic fable, in which there is no reconciliation of enemies^b, &c. But it was not, I think, intended to be so closely applicable. All that Aristotle meant must have been, to shew, that the pleasure arising from his second species of fable, differed only in degree from that of Comedy; that the circumstance of ending satisfactorily was common to both*.

Chaucer's Monk had the true Aristotelic idea of Tragedy:—

Tragedie is to sayn a certain storie,
As olde bookes maken us memorie,
Of him that stood in gret prosperitee,
And is yfallen out of high degree
In to miserie, and endeth wretchedly^c. But ^b See the note of Heinsius.—Castelvetro supposes Aristotle to be answering a tacit objection—"Why not a happy termination for all the characters, good and bad?" p. 294.

* The author of one of the arguments to the Orestes of Euripides, says, το δὲ δράμα ΚΩΜΙΚΩΤΕΡΑΝ ἔχει τὴν καταστροφὴν.

^c Canterbury Tales, v. 13979. Mr. Tyrwhitt's ed.—Chaucer, however, uses the word Tragedy in a loose sense

But the knight, and the host, were among the θιαται ΑΣΘΕΝΕΙΣ:

Ho! quod the knight, good sire, no more of this:
 That ye han said is right ynough ywis,
 And mochel more; for litel hevinesse
 Is right ynough to mochel folk, I gesse.
 I say for me, it is a gret disece, [uneasiness]
 Wher as men have ben in gret welth and ese,
 To heren of hir soden fall, alas!
 And the contrary is joye and gret solas,
 As whan a man hath ben in poure estat,
 And climbeth up, and wexeth fortunat,
 And ther abideth in prosperitee:
Swiche thing is gladsom, as it thinketh me,
 And of swiche thing were goodly for to telle^d.

NOTE 101.

P. 139. WHO MAKE USE OF THE DECORA-TION TO PRODUCE, NOT THE TERRIBLE, BUT THE MARVELLOUS ONLY—.

One would think, that commentators on Aristotle might find enough in this work to satisfy the keenest sense, (as Dr. Burney has observed, Hist. of Mus. vol. ii.

 p. 320.) for a tragic story. And for this he seems to have Plato's authority:—της τε ΤΡΑΓΙΚΗΣ ποιησεως αποτομης, εν ιαμβειοις, και εν επεσι. Rep. x.—And so presently after,—ΟΜΗΡΟΥ, η και αλλα των ΤΩΝ ΤΡΑ- ΓΩΔΙΟΠΟΙΩΝ: and he calls Homer πρωτον των τραγω- διοποιων. See, also, p. 152, E. ed. Scr. vol. i.

^d. v. 14773, δcc.

keenest appetite for difficulties, without any assistance from their own invention. Yet here, they have contrived to perplex one of the plainest passages that can be found. Nothing can well be clearer than Aristotle's expression:—ὁ δὲ ΜΗΤΟ ΦΟΒΕΡΟΝ, δια τῆς ὀψέως, ἀλλὰ ΤΟ ΤΕΡΑΤΩΔΕΣ ΜΟΝΟΝ, παρασκευάζοντες.—He is not, as some critics have supposed^a, examining here three different ways of raising terror, but two only;—by the plot itself, which he justly pronounces to be the best way, and by the ὀψις, the spectacle, scenes, dresses, &c. As for those Poets, he continues, who make use of the ὀψις, for the purpose of exciting, not terror, but wonder only, they are out of the question; this “has nothing to do with Tragedy,” &c. If Aristotle, by τερατῶδες, had meant only, as has been understood, a monstrous degree of the terrible—“mostruoso,” “soprano spavento,” as Castelvetro calls it^b, he surely would not have used so strong an expression as—ΟΥΔΕΝ τῇ Τραγωδίᾳ ΚΟΙΝΩΝΟΥΣΙΝ. He does not here exclude even the τερατῶδες, absolutely, and in general; but the mere τερατῶδες; τερατῶδες ΜΟΝΟΝ—“only the wonderful,” and that, δια τῆς ὀψέως. The marvellous and supernatural, may, we know, in the hands of a Poet of genius, be made a powerful instrument of Tragic terror.

^a Robortelli, Castelvetro, Piccolomini, Beni.

^b P. 298. M. Batteux follows this interpretation. He translates τερατῶδες, “effrayant.”

terror. Aristotle would hardly, I imagine, have censured a drama like that of Macbeth, as having "nothing in common with Tragedy."

The difficulty, indeed, of managing the visible πειραται, so as to produce any serious effect, is sufficiently great. We have, I think, but one dramatic Poet who could walk, though others may have dared to walk, "within that circle." The decoration of the Eumenides of Æschylus, and his chorus of fifty furies, with their μυγμοί, and their ὤγμοι^c, their snorings, their screams, and their torches, may very well be conceived to have put women and children in a real fright; but whether it produced any sympathetic, illusive, and pleasurable, terror—the only terror in question^d—I should much doubt. Yet Dacier, very gravely, produces this story of children fainting away, and women miscarrying, with the fright, as an example of Tragic terror excited by the ὄψις^e. According to Dacier's account, the allegorical personage of Λύσσα, or Madness, in the Hercules Furens of Euripides, appears in her aerial car, "*with a hundred heads, round which hiss a thousand sand serpents!" It is rather difficult to conceive

^c See v. 116, &c.

^d See Dr. Campbell's Philos. of Rhetoric, book I, ch. ii. p. 323.

^e P. 213, and 47, note 36.—The story is told by the anonymous writer of the life of Æschylus:—ὥς τε τα μὲν νηπία ἐπὶ βύλαι, τα δὲ ἰμβρυα ἐξαμβλωθῆναι.

* P. 215.

conceive how this could have been managed. These hundred heads, in the passage of the chorus alluded to, v. 884, certainly belong to the serpents, not to Λυσσα herself; and the emendation of Reiske seems probable;—ἰκατογκεφαλοῖς Ὀφίων ἰαχημασι.—"centicipitibus serpentum sibilis". Even so, I can scarce imagine an Athenian audience to have received this exhibition with countenances perfectly Tragic. The arrival of old OCEAN mounted upon his Griffin, in the Prometheus of Æschylus, must, one would suppose, have had as ridiculous an effect, as I remember the entrance of the Minotaur to have had upon the audience, some years ago, in the opera of Teseo.

If such a dramatic entertainment as our Pantomime had existed in the days of Aristotle, he would probably have represented the Tragic Poets, whom he here censures, as encroaching on that province: for, indeed, the τετρατῶδες μόνον δια τῆς ὀψίως παρασκευαζόμενον, would accurately enough express the ἡδονὴν οἰκίαν of the pantomime.—But, what would the philosopher have said to a species of the drama, of which the Ὀψις, which he places at the very bottom of his scale [cap. vi.], is the very soul—ἀρχὴ καὶ οἶον ψυχὴ: and where the σκευοποιὸς, or the carpenter, takes the lead of the Poet?—To do it justice, however, it has its Mut, its fable, such as it is, with its beginning, its middle, and its end; though a spectator may be often puzzled

: See the Ox. Euripides.

puzzled to make, as we commonly say, head or tail of its plot. It has also its δεσεις and its λυσεις, its nœuds and its denouemens, in great abundance; being, indeed, from beginning to end, a continued series of knots, tied by love, and cut by magic. Here are also περιπέτειαι and ἀναγνωρίσεις, revolutions, and discoveries, in plenty; though the chief revolution, indeed, be in the scenery;—ἡ εἰς τὸ ἐναντίον τῶν ὀφθόμενων μεταβολή. And with respect to discoveries, the pantomime may be characterized as Aristotle characterizes the Odyssey,—ἀναγνωρίσεις γὰρ διολε—“it abounds throughout with discoveries^d,” for the poor hero is perpetually discovered, and very seldom εἰς φίλιαν^e. Then there are Παθὴ too, disasters—the πραξις ὀδυνηραὶ^f at least, which, to the upper gallery, make the merriest part of the entertainment. An essential character, the clown, is even appropriated to this purpose of suffering, and his clothes well wadded for the reception of blows, kicks, and falls^g. But Aristotle little foresaw, I suppose, when ^d Cap. xxiv. Transl. Part III. Sect. 1.

^e Cap. xi. ^f Cap. xii. init.

^g The Germans, not many years ago, were, it seems, so fond of this sort of humour, that Dr. Burney tells us, “bills were regularly brought in to the managers at the end of each week, in which the comic actors used to charge; “So much for a slap on the face,”—“So much for a broken head,” &c.—See vol. i. of Dr. Burney’s entertaining Journal of a Tour through Germany, &c. p. 223.

when he wrote his first chapter, that a species of drama without words would one day be invented : still less, probably, could he have imagined, what to the antients would have appeared the strangest part of this business, that, though accompanied throughout by MUSIC, yet it would not imitate "by gesticulated rhythm" — δια σχηματιζομένων ΠΡΟΜΩΝ; the gestures of the actors in pantomime, being not at all regulated by the measures of the music, or only occasionally, and accidentally, according to the ear, and inclination, of the performer ^b.

NOTE 102.

P. 139. MOST TERRIBLE, OR PITEOUS - - - .

After having established, that the terrible and piteous should arise from the circumstances of the action itself, Aristotle proceeds to examine what are the circumstances that will produce the highest degree of terror and pity, within the proper limits ; that is, so as to avoid what he calls the μιασρον, the shocking, and disgusting. And this, perhaps, led him here to use the words δυνα, and οικτρα, as being, if I mistake not, rather stronger than φοβερα, and ^b The pantomimic exhibitions of the Romans, spoken of in NOTE 4, and described pretty fully by Lucian, De Salt. were widely different. They were a species of dance, and the gestures of the performers were strictly governed by the rhythm of the music ; the words, which it was the business of the dancer to express by those gestures, being sung, at the same time, by a chorus.

and ἔλπεινα. For the subject of this chapter seems, in short, to be, the proper management of the Πάθη or disastrous incidents: "Comment," as Dacier has rightly observed, "on doit se conduire dans les actions atroces," p. 236. Without this leading idea it would be difficult to explain satisfactorily some passages that follow.

NOTE 103.

P. 140. BETWEEN FRIENDS.

Εν ταῖς φιλίαις.—For the wide sense in which Aristotle here uses the word φιλία, see Ethic. Nicom. VIII. 1, and 7, ed. Ox. 1716, and the passage quoted in NOTE 276.

NOTE 104.

P. 140. BUT IT IS HIS PROVINCE TO INVENT OTHER SUBJECTS, AND TO MAKE A SKILFUL USE OF THOSE WHICH HE FINDS ALREADY ESTABLISHED.

Αὐτον δε εὐρισκειν δει, και τοις παραδεδομένοις χρῆσθαι καλως. The expression is too short and general to be clear. It is fairly capable of not less than three different meanings. Εὐρισκειν, may mean, to invent a subject from pure imagination, as Agatho invented his ΑΝΘΟΣ^a: or it may mean only, to find out a new historical subject; or, lastly, to invent, not a subject, but only circumstances and incidents, by which the old subjects may be varied;
which

^a Cap. ix. Transl. Part II. Sect. 6.

which is Dacier's idea:—"Le Poete doit inventer
 " lui-même, en se seroant comme il faut des fables
 " receuës."—I shall only say, that, on the whole,
 I prefer the second of these explanations. Aristotle, it is true, had allowed^b, that a Poet ought not to be chained down to the old traditional stories; and even, that it would be ridiculous (γέλοιοις) to suppose subjects of pure invention absolutely prohibited. But this is delivered as a permission, not as a precept; and he would hardly have enforced a permission by such an expression as he here uses—ὑπέρσκειν ΔΕΙ. Again—αὐτὸν ΕΥΡΙΣ- ΚΕΙΝ, (against Dacier's explanation,) seems plainly opposed to τοῖς παραδιδόμενοις ΧΡΗΣΘΑΙ—"to use
 " old subjects properly, and to invent or find out
 " new subjects: not new incidents for an old sub" ject." This may, perhaps, receive some illustration and support from a similar passage in the Rhetoric^c. In the second chapter of the first book, he divides the proofs of the orator into two kinds—the ἀτεχνοί, and the ἱτεχνοί. The ἀτεχνοί are the external proofs; witnesses, the torture, writings, and all such proofs as are ready provided to the pleader's hand—ὅσα μὴ δι' ἡμῶν πιστοῖσιν, ἀλλὰ προῦπηρχεν. The ἱτεχνοί he defines to be those argumentative proofs which depend on the art and invention of the orator himself. He then concludes—ὥς δὲ τῶν, τοῖς μὲν ΧΡΗΣΑΣΘΑΙ, τὰ
δὲ

^b Cap. ix. Transl. Part. II. Sect. 6.

^c It is quoted, I see, by Robortelli.

ΔΕΥΤΕΙΝ :—" of these proofs, the first sort we " have only to make a proper use of; the other
" we must invent."

NOTE 105.

P. 142. BUT OF ALL THESE WAYS, &c.

All this is not a little embrouillé.—Aristotle describes three ways only. Then he says, or seems to say,— " There is no other way :"—παρα ταυτα εν ἑνι ἄλλῳ. And to prove this, he enumerates all the ways possible; which, at last, turn out to be four. Hence the text has been supposed defective. [See Castelvetro; and Goulston's supplemental translation.] Perhaps there is no occasion to suppose this. That, at least, there is no accidental omission of a fourth case, (that of purposing without executing,) seems pretty clear from the expression ΕΤΙ ΔΕ ΤΡΙΤΟΝ ΠΑΡΑ ΤΑΥΤΑ : " there is still a third way beside these." It would have been rather strange, if, immediately after this, he had proceeded to mention a fourth way.—Taking then the passage as perfect, we must understand, I think, by εν ἑνι ἄλλῳ, not—there is no other way possible—but, there is no other proper, admissible way : non licet aliter—it must not be done in any other way. For, he proceeds, there are but four ways possible; but of all these, (ταυτων δε—i. e. these four possible ways,) that of being " ready to execute, knowingly, and yet not executing," is the worst, and not to be enumerated by

by a critic among those ways which a Poet may be allowed to use.

Thus Dacier appears to have understood the passage, by his translation, which, I think, is right, as to the sense. But I thought Aristotle's meaning might be clearly enough expressed without periphrasis, or supplement.

NOTE 106.

P. 142. BUT THE BEST OF ALL THESE WAYS IS THE LAST.

In the 13th chapter (Transl. Sect. 12.) Aristotle had pronounced that to be the best constituted Tragedy, which terminates unhappily; and had represented that species, which gratifies, by its catastrophe, the sympathetic wishes of the audience, as inferior, and affording a kind of pleasure rather appropriated to Comedy. Yet here, he appears to give the preference to a plan calculated to afford that very pleasure in the highest degree. This seeming inconsistency has given the commentators much trouble. It is rather surprising, that Dacier should have perceived what had escaped the superior acuteness of the Italian annotators, viz. that Aristotle is not, in this chapter, inquiring what is the best constitution of a Tragic fable in general, but, what is the best method of managing the most disastrous and atrocious incidents of Tragic story, so as to produce the highest possible degree of Tragical emotion in the spectator, without producing horror and disgust *. With this view of the subject, the reader, perhaps, will not see much difficulty in reconciling Aristotle to himself. He might surely say, without inconstance, "Tragedy, " to be perfect, should terminate unhappily. " Yet there may be particular exceptions to this " general rule. The end of Tragedy is, to excite " terror and pity; and that end is most effectually " answered, when those emotions are not only ex- " cited in the course of the drama, (as they un- " doubtedly may be, and to a high degree, even " in such pieces as end fortunately,) but are left " impressed upon the mind of the spectator by the " catastrophe itself. Yet this Tragic terror is not " to be pushed to absolute horror, nor the τραγικόν " to be confounded with the μίαιρα: and I allow, " that where the circumstances of the traditional " story, from which the Poet takes his plot, are " such, as leave him only the alternative, either of " disgusting and shocking the spectator, or of gra- " tifying his wishes, the latter is clearly to be " preferred; and the διπλη συζασις, the double " fable, to which I assigned only the second " place †, will, in that particular case, deserve the " first."

Nothing seems more just, or more accurately expressed, than Aristotle's idea of the end of Tra- gedy; that it is, " to give that pleasure which arises

* See NOTE 102.

† Transl. vol. i. p. 137.

arises from pity and terror through imitation:—

την ἀπο εἰλες καὶ φοβὴ διὰ μιμησεως ἡδονὴν παρασκευαζειν—cap. xiv. (Transl. Part II. Sect. 13.) But the Greek Tragedians will be thought, I believe, by most modern readers, to have sometimes pushed this principle rather too far, and to have excited a degree of horror, which even the charms of imitation cannot well be conceived to have softened into pleasurable emotion; and it appears to me, that Aristotle himself inclined to this opinion, and that he intended this chapter as a lesson of caution to the Poets against this excess. He seems plainly to have considered the actual murder of a mother, a son, a brother, and the like, as incidents rather too horrible to be exhibited in any way. If the deed must be done, let it, he says, if possible—if the story will permit it—be done ignorantly.
But it will be still better, if you can avoid doing it, entirely; if you can contrive to make the expectation, combined with the atrociousness of the event expected, answer your purpose, by raising as much anxiety, commiseration, and terror in the spectator, as may consist with that pleasure which is the end of Tragedy, and then relieving him at last,
by prevention at the very moment of execution.
That Aristotle thought the end of Tragedy might be sufficiently answered by the mere expectation of such events, properly managed, appears from his expression above:—εἰ ἀδελφὸν ἀδελφον, ἢ υἱὸν πατέρα, ἢ μητὴρ υἱον, ἢ υἱὸν μητέρα, ἀποκτείνῃ, H MEA-

Η ΜΕΛΛΗ—ταυτα ζήτησις. "When a brother kills, or is going to kill," &c.

For this purpose, not only the expectation must be such, that the action shall appear imminent and inevitable, but the action itself expected must be such, as, had it taken place, would have been dreadful, "intolerable," &c.—τι των ΑΝΗΚΕΣΤΩΝ^a, as Aristotle expresses himself in describing these prevented παθῶν. By these means, the emotion of terror is brought as near as possible to that which would arise from the actual perpetration^b.

If the purport of this chapter has been here rightly explained, the reader will see how Aristotle has been misrepresented by many modern critics, who have understood him to recommend the Cresphontes of Euripides as a model of the best possible

^a I find the same thing observed by Robortelli, whose short comment is worth transcribing. "Addit verò Aristoteles—τι των ἀνήμερων: grave enim atroxque factum illud in Tragœdiis esse oportet, quod aliquis patraturus ferre fuerit, quia maximum affert auditoribus terrorem, qui proprius Tragœdiæ est, et admirationem incredibilem. Aiunt enim, Quid si mactasset?—quàm parum abfuit à cade!" p. 160.

^b This is well observed, and well expressed, by Piccolomini, (p. 215, &c.) who, with Victorius and other commentators, confesses himself embarrassed by the seeming inconsistency of the author in this passage, and gives the imminence of the perpetration as the only solution that occurs to him. His comment is excellent, but too long for transcription. I had not seen it when my remarks were written; but I was glad to find them so supported, possible construction of a Tragic fable in general. Thus Maffei, in the dedication of his Merope— “ Parla di essa Aristotele nella Poetica, dove “ trattando de’ modi di ben comporre la favola, dà “ per esempio dell’ ottimo il Cresfonte d’ Euripide,

 “ in cui l’ atrocità veniva dalla ricognizione im“ pedita.”—And Voltaire, in his letter to Maffei, prefixed to the French Merope: “ Aristote, dans “ sa Poetique immortelle, ne balance pas à dire, “ que la reconnoissance de Merope et de son fils, “ etoit le moment le plus interessant de toute la “ scene Grecque. Il donnoit à ce coup de Thea“ tre la preference sur tous les autres.”

NOTE 107.

P. 142. MEROPÉ, &c.

Plutarch’s account of the effect of this coup de Theatre upon the audience, is worth transcribing, though apparently incorrect.

Σκοπεῖ δὲ τὴν ἐν τῇ Τραγωδίᾳ ΜΕΡΟΠΗΝ, ἐπὶ τὸν υἱὸν αὐτοῦ, ὡς φονεὰ τε υἱε, πελεκυν ἀράμενην, καὶ λεγούσαν—

Ὅσιωτεράν δὲ τὴνδ’ ἐγὼ δίδωμι σοι

Πληγὴν - - - - -

ὅσον ἐν τῷ θεατρῷ κίνημα ποιεῖ, συνεξορθαίξασα φονεῖ [an, φοβῶ?] καὶ δεῖ μὴ φθασῇ τὸν ἐπιλαμβανόμενον γέροντα, καὶ τρώσῃ τὸ μείρακιον.—
 [Περὶ Σαρκοφ. p. 1837, ed. H. St.]

For other fragments of this Tragedy, the reader may see the Qx. Euripides,

NOTE 108.

P. 143. THE MANNERS SHOULD BE GOOD.

Good, in the usual sense of moral goodness ; the only sense which χρῆσα, applied to manners, will bear, and which, even though the word would admit of other senses, would here be fixed, beyond a doubt, by the plain, unequivocal expression of the whole passage. Dacier admires and follows the nonsense of Le Bossu, who makes χρῆσα ἰδῆν mean poetically good ; that is, well marked by the Poet ; in which sense, the rule is equally well observed by Milton in his Satan, and by Richardson in his Grandison. "There are," according to this "best interpreter of Aristotle," "deux sortes de bonté dans les mœurs ; l'une que l'on peut appeler morale, et qui est propre à la vertu : et l'autre est la poetique, à laquelle les hommes les plus vicieux ont autant de part que les gens de bien." How could Mr. Harris, with his thorough knowledge of the Greek language, and his clear and exact turn of thinking in general, recommend all this, as "a fine and copious commentary on this part of Aristotle's Poetics?" I shall not waste time in confuting, what has been sufficiently

* Harris, On Music, &c. p. 83, note.

† Traité du Poème Ep. lib. iv. c. 4.

‡ See Philol. Inquiries, p. 166 ; and Le Bossu, lib. iv. c. 4, 5, &c. to which he refers.

sufficiently confuted long ago^d. — Τίς ἄλλη, τοῦ θανόντ' ἐπικταίνειν;—Dacier's note is a curious specimen of absurd interpretation supported by false translation^e.

The best comment I have seen on this passage is that of Hcinsius; which I shall therefore give entire.

“ Cæterum, in moribus, quatuor tenenda esse “ docet Aristoteles; quorum primum est, ut sint “ boni. Quod est exponendum pluribus.—Inter “ ea quæ quam maximè in Tragœdiâ reprehē-“ debat PLATO^f, vel præcipuum hoc erat;—quod “ nimirum varia, non uniformis, sit illius imitatio; “ et occasione oblatâ, probos juxta improbosque “ imitetur; nonnunquam autem improbos tan-“ tum: quo facillimè animum, quod supra mo“ nebamus, decipi humanum, qui dum solum “ respicit decorum, quod propositum est illi, bono- “ rum sæpe, et malorum, discrimen non agnoscit, “ et,

^d By Mr. De la Barre. See Mem. de l'Acad. &c. his second Diss. Sur le Poeme Epique. See also M. Batteux's satisfactory note on this passage.

^e Aristotle says plainly, the ἥθος will be χρηστον, if the προαίρεσις is χρηστὴ, and the contrary:—φᾶλλον μὲν, [sc. ἥθος ἐξεί,] ἰὰν φᾶλῃν [sc. προαίρεσιν ποιη φανεραν,] χρηστον δὲ, ἰὰν χρηστῃ. See, now, Dacier's version of this: “ Il y a des mœurs “ dans un discours, ou dans une action, lorsque l'un et l'autre “ font connoître l'inclination ou la resolution telle qu'elle “ est, mauvaise si elle est mauvaise, bonne si elle est bonne.”

^f See De Rep. iii. p. 394, 395, &c. (Ed. Serr.)—the passages here alluded to.

“ et, ut ipse Poeta, utrosque mores imitatur; quo “ nihil magis in republicâ perniciosum excogitari “ potest. Quippe ratione istâ scholam vitiorum, “ non virtutum, fieri theatrum; et quidem quanto “ magis hanc in partem inclinamus omnes. Præ“ terea, interpretes Platonis—aliud admittere ab eo “ negant Poetam, quam qui omni varietate “ sublata, Deum et bonorum virorum actiones “ imitatur*; cætera enim delectare quidem, non “ autem docere; plerumque vero mores vitare ac “ corrumpere, ideoque nocere magis quam pro“ desse. Huic ut occurreret Philosophus, primum “ hoc de moribus præceptum esse voluit, probi ut
 “ essent; tales enim esse in Tragœdiâ non modo “ posse, quod negabat Plato, sed et, quantum “ ratio poematis permetteret, debere. Confirmant “ hoc exempla tragicorum; qui sine ullâ lege “ hanc tamen legem sunt secuti. Etiam poste“ riores critici, qui nonnullas veterum hoc nomine “ notârunt, quod aut omnes, aut plerasque, pessime “ moratas haberent personas. Qualis est, ex.
 “ grat. Euripidæ Orestes; in quo, præter Pyladen, “ improbi omnium sunt mores*. Neque enim “ hæc

* Plato says, the Poets should be obliged, την τε ἀγαθὴν εἰκόνα ἢ καὶ ἐμποιεῖν τοῖς ποιήμασιν, ἢ μὴ παρ’ ἡμῶν ποιεῖν—“to imitate good characters, or not to imitate at all.”—Rep. iii. p. 401. B.

§ He alludes, I suppose, to the censure passed upon that Tragedy in one of the arguments prefixed: το δράμα τῶν ἐπὶ σκηνῆς εὐδοκίμουντων, χειρίστητον δὲ τοῖς ἡθροῖς· πλὴν γὰρ Πυλάδης, πάντες φαυλοὶ ἦσαν.

“ hæc mens Aristotelis, aut non alios quam optimè “ moratos, esse inducendos, aut, si alii inducantur, “ quos fuisse improbos constat, probos iis tribu“ endos esse mores : sed, ut, quantum ratio per- “ mittit, plures optimè morati in eodem inducantur “ dramate. Quamvis enim et utrique requiruntur, “ et tam horum quam illorum ratione constet de- “ corum, probos tanto esse præferendos, quanto
 “ plus conducunt cum spectantur ^h.”

To do full justice to Aristotle's meaning, it must be observed, 1. That what he says should be understood chiefly, though by no means solely, as some have explained it¹, of the principal characters. 2. That the word $\chi\epsilon\tau\alpha$ does not imply a character of high and exemplary virtue. It seems to answer to our popular expression, a good sort of man; and it excludes absolutely, only habitual vice, bad disposition, $\pi\omicron\upsilon\nu\eta\sigma\iota\alpha$, $\mu\omicron\chi\omicron\theta\eta\pi\iota\alpha$, as it is expressed in a passage that should be compared with this^k. 3. That the rule, even with respect

^h De Trag. Constit. cap. xiv.

¹ So M. Batteux; and Marmontel, Poet. Française, ii. 181, who defends the true sense of $\chi\epsilon\tau\alpha$ ἦδη, but says, that “the interesting personage of the piece is the only one whom Aristotle had in view.” But, Aristotle instances in Menelaus, who certainly is not “le personnage intéressant,” in the Orestes. His instance of slaves, too, shews the precept to be general.

^k Cap. xxv. at the end, where this fault in the manners is expressed thus— $\text{Ὅρῃ δὲ ἐντυμῶν} \text{---} \mu\omicron\chi\omicron\theta\eta\pi\iota\alpha \cdot \epsilon\tau\alpha\upsilon\upsilon \mu\eta\iota \alpha\upsilon\alpha\rho\eta\kappa\eta\varsigma \epsilon\omicron\tau\eta\varsigma, \kappa. \tau. \alpha\lambda.$ —See, Transl. Part IV. Sect. 7.

respect to such characters, is not absolute ; as is evident from Aristotle's expression, when he gives an example of the violation of it, παραδειγμα πονηρίας ΜΗ ΑΝΑΓΚΑΙΟΝ : and, again, in cap. xxv. ὅταν ΜΗ ΑΝΑΓΚΗΣ ὍΤΕΗΣ, κ. τ. αλ.—4. That what he presently adds, ἐστὶ δὲ ἐν ἑκάστῳ γενεῇ¹, is a necessary modification of the precept, and shews, that he did not mean, as Heinsius well observes, to exclude comparative badness of manners, but meant only—as good as may be, consistently with the observance of the other requisites mentioned—the ἀρμοττον, and the ὅμοιον.

The reason of the precept, Aristotle has not given us. But, it appears, I think, clearly, from his substituting the word ΒΑΛΕΡΑ (hurtful, pernicious,) for μοχθηρά, or πονηρά, in his enumeration of the greatest faults of Poetry at the end of cap. xxv^a. that, however he might differ from Plato as to the hurtful tendency of Tragedy, and of imitative Poetry in general, he so far at least agreed with him, as to admit the danger of those poetical, embellished, and flattering, exhibitions of vice, in which, as one of the most eloquent, and I might add, the most Platonic^a, of modern writers

¹ What he means by γενεῇ, is explained in the Rhet. II. 7.—λέγει δὲ, ΓΕΝΟΣ ΜΕΝ, καθ' ἡλικίαν· ὁ δὲ παῖς ἢ ἄνθρωπος, ἢ γέρων.—καὶ γυνὴ καὶ ἄνθρωπος.—καὶ Λακων, ἢ Θετταλός, &c.

^a Transl. Part IV. Sect. 7.—See, NOTE 260.

^a On this subject especially. See his whole letter to M. D'Alembert against the establishment of a Theatre at Geneva.

writers expresses it,—“ L’auteur, pour faire parler “ chacun selon son caractere, est forcé de mettre “ dans la bouche des mechants leurs maximes, et “ leurs principes, revetus de tout l’éclat des beaux “ vers, et débités d’un ton imposant et sententieux, “ pour l’instruction du parterre °.” With respect to characters of atrocious villany, such as that of Glenalvon in Douglas, which can excite only pure detestation, I believe the ideas of Plato, and perhaps of Aristotle, were very nearly, if not exactly, the same, which this admirable writer has expressed in the concluding note of his Nouvelle Eloise.—
 “ En achevant de relire ce recueil, je crois voir “ pourquoi l’interêt, tout foible qu’il est, m’en est “ si agréable, et le sera, je pense, à tout lecteur “ d’un bon naturel. C’est qu’au moins ce foible “ interêt est pur et sans melange de peine ; qu’il “ n’est point excité par des noirceurs, par des “ crimes, ni melé du tourment de hair. Je ne “ sçaurois concevoir quel plaisir on peut prendre “ à imaginer et composer le personnage d’un sce-“ lerat, à se mettre à sa place tandis qu’on le “ représente °, a lui prêter l’éclat le plus imposant.
 “ Je

° Lettre à D’Alembert, p. 54.—Plato, after citing some verses of Homer which he conceived to have a pernicious tendency, says, that he reprobates them—ἐχ’ ὡς ἔ ποιητικὰς καὶ ἡδὲα τοῖς πολλοῖς ἀκρεῖν, ἀλλ’ ὅς Ω, ΠΟΙΗΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΑ, ΤΟΣΟΤΤΩ, ΗΤΤΟΝ ἈΚΟΤΣΤΕΟΝ παῖσι καὶ ἀνδράσι,
 &c.—De Repub. iii. circ. init.

° In Plato’s figurative and expressive language—ἑαυτοῦ ἐμμάττειν τε καὶ ἐνίστασθαι εἰς τὴν τῶν κακίωνων τύπην. . Rep. iii.
 p. 396.—And see before, p. 395, C. D.

" Jé plains beaucoup les auteurs de tant de Tragédies pleines d'horreurs, lesquels passent leur vie à faire agir et parler des gens qu'on ne peut écouter ni voir sans souffrir," &c.

NOTE 109.

P. 143-44. IN GENERAL, WOMEN ARE, PERHAPS, RATHER BAD THAN GOOD.

" Aristote," says M. Batteux, " ne parle pas ici des femmes en général, mais seulement de celles que les Poètes ont mises sur le Théâtre, telles que Médée, Clytemnestre," &c. This is polite; but it will not make Aristotle polite. He speaks plainly; and what he says is, I fear, but too conformable to the manner in which the ancients usually speak of the sex in general. At least, he is certainly consistent with himself: witness the following very curious character of women in his History of Animals, which I give the reader, by no means for his assent, but for his wonder, or his diversion.

Γυνή, ἀνδρὶ ἐλεημονεσέρον καὶ ἀριδακρυ μᾶλλον· ἔτι δὲ φθονερώτερον τε καὶ μεμψιμοιροτέρον, καὶ ΦΙΛΟΛΟΙΔΟΡΟΝ μᾶλλον, καὶ ΠΛΗΚΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΟΝ*. ἔτι δὲ καὶ δυσθυμὸν μᾶλλον — καὶ δυσέλπι,

* Πληκτικώτερον (i. e.) ΤΒΡΙΣΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΟΝ, says Hesychius. I am afraid the word means what it says. Jul. Pollux gives it as one of the epithets of a boxer. We might translate it, with well-bred ambiguity—" more striking."

δυσελπί, και ΑΝΑΙΔΕΣΤΕΡΟΝ ΚΑΙ ΨΕΤΔΕΣ-ΤΕΡΟΝ, εὐαπατητοτερον τε, και μνημονικωτερον·
ἔτι δέ, ΑΓΡΥΠΝΟΤΕΡΟΝ ^b ΚΑΙ ὈΚΝΗΡΟ-ΤΕΡΟΝ και ὅλως ἀκνητοτερον—κ.τ.αλ.—[De Hist. Animal. lib. ix. cap. 1.]

To make the reader amends for the pain which this cool and serious invective of the philosopher and the naturalist may have given him, I cannot resist the temptation of presenting him with a specimen of more sportive satire on this subject, in a very pleasant fragment, preserved by Athenæus, from a Comedy of Eubulus.

Ω Ζευ πολυτιμητ', εἰ κακῶς ἔγω ποτε
Εργ γυναικας, νη Δι' ἀπολοιμην ἄρα.—
Παντων ἄρισον κτημάτων. εἶδ' ἐγενετο
Κακη γυνη Μηδεία, Πηνελοπεία δε
Μεγα πρᾶγμα.—ἔρει τις ὡς Κλυταιμνήστρα κακη ;—
Αλκῆσιν ἀντεθήκα χρῆσιν.—ἀλλ' ἴσως
Φαιδραν ἔρει κακῶς τις—ἀλλὰ, νη Δία,
Χρῆσιν τις ἦν μέντοι - - - τις ;—οἶμοι, δειλαί—
Ταχέως γε μ' αἱ ΧΡΗΣΤΑΙ ΓΥΝΑΙΚΕΣ ἐπέλιπον.
Τωνδ' αὖ ΠΟΝΗΡΩΝ ἔτι λεγέιν πολλας ἔχω.

If ever against woman-kind I rail,
Great Jupiter confound me!—for of all
The good things of this world, they are the best.
Medea, you will say, was bad :—agreed ;
But, what a jewel was Penelope !

Urge

^b i. e.—“ more able to keep late hours, and, at the same “ time, more lazy, than men.”

Urge you the wicked Clytemnestra?—I, Oppose the good Alcestis.—If you tell me
Of Phædra,—I remind you of the good,
—Stay, let me see—the good——Alas! how soon
My memory fails me there; while, of the bad,
Examples in abundance still occur. - - -

See Athen. p. 559, or the Excerpta ex
Trag. &c. of Grotius, p. 657.

NOTE 110.

P. 144. RESEMBLANCE - - - A DIFFERENT THING, &c.

The words, ὥςπερ εἰρηται, are embarrassing; for the difference here spoken of had not been mentioned before, as the expression, in its most obvious sense, implies. The only meaning I can find is this. The two requisites, the ἀρμοτον and the ὁμοιον, propriety, and resemblance, might easily be confounded; the ὁμοιον being indeed only the ἀρμοτον in another point of view. The violence and fierceness of Medea, for example, which form her historical or traditional character, and, therefore, the likeness of the Poet's picture, may be said to be ἀρμοττοντα, proper or suitable, with respect to the individual, though ἀπρην και μη ἀρμοττοντα, improper and unsuitable, to the general character of the sex.—And thus Piccolomini:—"la terza condizione che assegna Aristotele à i costumi, la qual consiste in esser simile, non differisce della
" seconda,

“ seconda, posta nell’esser convenevoli, in altro,
 “ se non che la conditione del convenevole ri-“ guarda l’universale; com’ à dire, che quel “ costume convenga ad un principe, quello ad un “ suddito, quello à l’uomo, &c.—senza considerar “ questa particolar persona, ò quella: e la con-“ ditione del simile riguarda il particolare; come “ à dire, qual costume convenga di porre in uno “ che habbia da rappresentar’ Achille; qual in “ quello che habbia da representare Oreste,” &c.
 (p. 220.)

Indeed, Aristotle would hardly have thought of admonishing the reader not to confound the two things, had he not seen that they were liable to be confounded. He would not have remarked, that they were different, had they been perfectly, and obviously, distinct. I think then, that the words, ὡςπερ εἰρηται, must refer only to the ἀμωρτον, and the meaning must be, that, to make the manners like, is a different thing not only from making them good, but even from making them proper, in such a way as had been said—in that sense, in which the word ἀμωρτοτητα had just been used, and explained by his instance. But if we understand the passage thus, there should be no stop after ποιησαι*.

But,

* By Piccolomini’s version, (for he says nothing about this difficulty in his commentary,) it appears that he understood

But, why does Aristotle mention at all, a difference so very obvious as that between resemblance, and goodness, of manners?—These two requisites could not easily be confounded, any more than likeness and beauty in a portrait. There was more danger of a reader's thinking the ὁμοίον too different from the χρεῖον, and, as a general precept, incompatible with it. And so indeed he seems to have apprehended himself, by what he presently after says^b about the μιμησις βελτιονων, and his rule, that the Poet, in imitation of the painter, should exhibit his characters as much better than they were, or are supposed to have been, as is consistent with the preservation of the likeness.

NOTE 111.

P. 144. THOUGH THE MODEL OF THE POET'S IMITATION BE SOME PERSON OF UNUNIFORM MANNERS, STILL THAT PERSON MUST BE REPRESENTED AS UNIFORMLY UNUNIFORM.

Τεταρτον δε, το ὁμαλον· κ'αν γαρ ἀνωμαλὸς τις ᾖ, ὃ τὴν μίμησιν παρίχων καὶ τριτον ἡθὺς ὑποτιθεῖς, ὁμως ὁμαλως ἀνωμαλον δεῖ εἶναι. — — — “which last words,” says an eminent writer, “having been not at all “ understood, understood the passage as I do: “ — essendo così fatta “ conditione diversa dall' esser' i costumi formati buoni, “ e ancora convenevoli nel modo che già si è detto.”

^b At the end of this Sect. of the translation; and of cap. xv. of the original.

“ understood, have kept his interpreters from “ seeing the true sense and scope of the précept.
 “ For they have been explained of such characters
 “ as that of Tigellius in Horace; which, how“ ever proper for satyr, or for farcical Comedy, “ are of too fantastic and whimsical nature to “ be admitted into Tragedy; of which Aristotle “ must there be chiefly understood to speak, and “ to which Horace, in this place, alone confines “ himself. ’Tis true, indeed, it may be said,
 “ that ‘ though a whimsical or fantastic character “ be improper for Tragedy, an irresolute one is “ not. Nothing is finer than a struggle between “ different passions; and it is perfectly natural,
 “ that in such a circumstance, each should prevail
 “ by turns.’—But then there is the widest differ“ ence between the two cases. Tigellius, with “ all his fantastic irresolution, is as uniform a “ character, as that of Mitio. If the expression “ may be allowed, its very inconsistency is of the “ essence of its uniformity. On the other hand, “ Electra, torn with sundry conflicting passions,
 “ is most apparently, and in the properest notion “ of the word, ununiform. One of the strongest “ touches in her character is that of a high, heroic “ spirit, sensible to her own, and her family’s “ injuries, and determined, at any rate, to revenge “ them. Yet no sooner is this revenge perpe“ trated, than she softens, relents, and pities.
 “ Here is a manifest ununiformity, which can, in

“ no proper sense of the expression, lay claim to “ the critic’s ὁμαλον, but may be so managed, by “ the Poet’s skill, as to become consistent with “ the basis or foundation of her character, that “ is, to be ὁμαλως ἀνωμαλον. And that this, in “ fact, was the meaning of the critic, is plain “ from the similar example to his own rule, given “ in the case of Iphigenia: which he specifies “ (how justly, will be considered hereafter) as an “ instance of the ἀνωμαλῃ, irregular, or ununi- “ form, character, ill-expressed, or made incon- “ sistent. So that the genuine sense of the “ precept is, ‘ Let the manners be uniform; or,
 “ if ununiform, yet consistently so, or uniformly “ ununiform:’ exactly copied, according to the “ reading here given, by Horace. Whereas in the “ other way, it stands thus: ‘ Let your characters “ be uniform, or unchanged; or, if you paint an “ ununiform character (such as Tigellius) let it be “ ununiform all the way; i.e. such an irregular “ character to the end of the play, as it was at “ the beginning; which is, in effect, to say, let it “ be uniform:’ which apparently destroys the “ latter part of the precept, and makes it an un-“ meaning tautology with the former*.”

I have given this passage entire, that the reader may have it fully in his power to judge, for himself, whether I mistake or misrepresent the meaning

* Comment. on the Ep. to the Pisos, &c. vol. i.
 p. 104, &c.

ing of any part of it. I should be sorry to be thought capable of a perfect confidence in my own opinion, however carefully and deliberately formed, when it is opposed by that of such a writer. But, after having repeatedly considered this comment, as it certainly deserves to be considered, with all the attention in my power, I am obliged to confess, that it does not satisfy me, and that the common interpretation still appears to me to stand its ground.—My reasons are these :

1. I cannot think, that such change, irresolution, and temporary inconsistency as arises from “ conflicting passions,” comes under the meaning of Aristotle’s ἩΘΟΣ ἀνωμαλόν.—ἩΘΟΣ, is the prevailing disposition, the habitual προαιρεσις, or settled character. “ Electra,” it is said, “ torn with “ sundry conflicting passions, is most apparently, “ and in the properest sense of the word, ununiform. “ form.” Not so, I think, in Aristotle’s sense of the word ἀνωμαλόν, as expressly applied by him here to ἦθος, or manners. The irregularities of conduct, or of sentiment and speech, arising from passion, seem to be a distinct thing from such as imply a change of the fixed, prevailing ἦθος, or characteristic manners of the person. When such passionate ununiformity as that above described in Electra, is so managed by the Poet’s skill, “ as “ to become consistent with the basis or foundation of her character,” that character is not, then, I think, as the ingenious critic considers it to

to be, ὁμαλως ἀνωμαλον, i.e. (as it is expressed in the beginning of the following note, p. 127.) “an ununiform character justly sustained, or, uniformly ununiform:” it is not, if I understand Aristotle rightly, ἀνωμαλον at all, in his sense; for he speaks only of anomalous manners; and anomalous manners, plainly, cannot be made “consistent with the basis or foundation of a character,” in any other sense, than as that very anomaly itself constitutes the character. And this I take to be Aristotle’s meaning: for he is speaking of that anomaly, in which different characters, not, in which “different passions, prevail by turns.”

2. The very expression,—κ’ ἂν γὰρ ΑΝΩΜΑΛΟΣ ΤΙΣ ἢ ὁ τὴν μιμησιν παρεχων, καὶ ΤΟΙΟΥΤΟΝ ΗΘΟΣ ὑποτιθεις, seems plainly to indicate an ununiform character, such as he explains by the ὁμαλως ἀνωμαλον that follows.—ἀνωμαλὸς ΤΙΣ—an anomalous PERSON: i.e. a person of inconsistent manners, or character. This expression seems hardly applicable, without violence, to such casual and merely apparent inconsistency, as arises from conflicting passions, and is reconcilable with “the basis or foundation of a character.”

3. “The genuine sense of the precept,” we are told, “is, Let the manners be uniform; or, if ununiform, yet consistently so, or uniformly ununiform.” But, consistently, and uniformly, seem to present different ideas. Aristotle’s word, ὁμαλως, presents only the latter of these:—uniformly—that is, more literally, *equally, evenly, &c. it does not, I think, answer at all to consistently, in the sense in which it is evidently applied, in this explanation, to what is not incongruous—not unaccountable, &c.^b. Had this, therefore, been Aristotle's meaning, he would, probably, have used, either εἰκοτως, or εὐλογως, or some other such word appropriated to that meaning; not ὁμαλως, which is never, as far as I know, used in the sense of consistently.

4. But it is objected, that if we take ὁμαλως ἀνωμαλον to mean "uniform all the way, i.e. such "an irregular character to the end of the play, "as it was at the beginning," this, "is, in effect "to say, let it be uniform; which apparently "destroys the latter part of the precept, and "makes it an unmeaning tautology with the "former."—The first part of the precept, I think, is, Let the manners be uniform; or, as we say, of a piece. Now to this an objector might say,—

* In Horace's character of Tigellius, lib. i. sat. 3. "Nil "ÆQUALE," is, εἶδεν ὈΜΑΛΟΝ. And so, "Vixit in- "ÆQUALIS"—ἀνωμαλῶς, in sat. 7. lib. ii. of PRISCUS, another character of the same stamp, "VERTUMNIS, "quotquot sunt, natus iniquis." v. 14.

^b Thus, in the next note—"All these considerations "put together, Electra might assist at the assassination "of her mother, consistently with the strongest feelings "of piety and affection." Notes on the Ep. to the Pisos, p. 112.

say,—“ This cannot be an indispensable rule ; “ uniformity cannot be essentially requisite to the “ manners: for, what, if the Poet should take “ for the subject of his imitation a person whose “ manners are not uniform?”—The answer, or “ second part of the precept,” is,—“ then, that “ want of uniformity must be such as constitutes “ the very character itself; for this falls within “ the rule; the ‘ very inconsistency’ of the cha“ racter (to use the ingenious critic’s own words,)”
 “ being, in this case, ‘ of the essence of its uni“ formity.’” I confess I do not here perceive any thing that can properly be called tautology; for though the philosopher says, indeed, in the second part of the precept no more than he meant to say in the first; yet he plainly apprehended it was more than he might be understood to say, and therefore he subjoined this necessary explanation.
 What he says is, in short, only this—“ Let the “ manners be uniform: an ununiform character “ is no exception to this rule.”

The

* Le Bossu observes, very well, in explaining this rule, that whenever the Poet admits this inequality of manners, “ il doit bien faire remarquer aux auditeurs, que cette “ inégalité est un caractère qu’il donne exprès à un person“ nage.” Livre iv. ch. 7. The following comparison is no unhappy illustration of Aristotle’s precept. “ Il arrive “ quelquefois qu’une même personne est égale et inégale “ (ἰσότης ἀνισότης) en même tems. Parceque le carac“ tère, qui dans la plus-part des hommes ressemble au “ soleil,

The Tigellius of Horace offered himself naturally enough, upon this occasion, to the commentators, as an illustration. We need not, however, suppose Aristotle to have thought of so very fantastic and comic a species of incoherence. Mutability and caprice are sometimes found in higher characters, where they are less ludicrous in their appearance, and, sometimes, very serious in their effects. And though, perhaps, any character of the kind may have too much of a comic cast to accord with our ideas of Tragic dignity, we have no reason to conclude, that it would have found the same difficulty of admittance upon the Greek stage, where the Tragic muse did, not unfrequently, condescend to be seen, “Δακρυοὶν γέλασσα.”

I shall only add to this note the following passage from the commentary of Victorius, which appears to me to explain well, in few words, the meaning, and the spirit, of Aristotle's precept.

“Studens ostendere quantopere hoc præceptum “ custodiendum sit, affirmat, si quis fortè—“ varius dissimilisque sibi inductus semel sit, eum, “ talem in omni facto totius fabulæ servandum “ esse, ut æquabilitas à Poetâ custodiatur in “ naturâ illâ inæquabili ostendendâ: quod non “ fieret, si aliquis levis, nec in eodum propositum “ permanens,

“soleil, dont l'égalité consiste à paroître toujours le même, “ en d'autres ressemble à la lune, dont l'égalité n'est qu'à “ changer quatre fois de faces en un mois.”—Ib. p. 450.

“ permanens, inductus, paulò postea firmus et “ obstinati animi fingeretur. Si morum igitur “ inæqualitas naturæque inconstantia constanter “ servanda est, quanto magis natura indolesque “ stabilis, par sibi ac jugis ad extremum servari “ debet.”

NOTE 112.

P. 144. WE HAVE AN EXAMPLE OF MANNERS UNNECESSARILY BAD, IN THE CHARACTER OF MENELAUS, &c.

Mr. Potter, in the introduction to his translation of the Orestes, says of this passage, that it “ may be considered as a mysterious oracular sentence, “ which wants an expounder.” I can only say, that I think the commentators would have reason to congratulate themselves, if no sentence of this mangled work wanted an expositor more than this. Whether we read ἀναγκαῖον, or ἀναγκαῖς;—an unnecessary example of bad manners, or an example of unnecessary badness of manners; the sense seems evidently the same: and that Aristotle could not mean, what the excellent translator of Æschylus and Euripides seems to think he might mean—to “excuse the Poet upon the necessity”—sufficiently appears from another passage, at the end of the 25th chapter, [Transl. Part IV. Sect. 7.] where this character is again mentioned as an instance of vitious manners, excused by no necessity—μη ἀναγκῆς ἔσσης.—Mr. Potter complains of “the little light which the passage “derives from the connexion:” I think without reason. For as the other examples given are examples of the violation of his other precepts, relative to propriety, and uniformity, of manners, the connection plainly indicates this to be an example of the similar violation of his first rule—that the manners should be good. So far, then, seems to be clear. In what particular view Aristotle thought the badness of the character not necessary, may be, indeed, less clear. I should suppose him to mean, that the historical, or traditional, character of Menelaus, and the observance of the ὁμοίον, by no means obliged Euripides to paint him in such colours. With respect to the plea, that it was necessary, because “the “drama could not,” otherwise, “have been “worked up to this terrible height of Tragic “distress,” Aristotle’s answer would, perhaps, have been similar to that which he makes upon another occasion:—i. e. the Poet should not, originally, have so constructed his plan, as to bring upon himself the necessity of committing so great a fault:—ἐξ ἀρχῆς γὰρ εἰ δεῖ συνίστασθαι τοιούτους. [sc. μύθους]. cap. xxiv.

NOTE 113.

P. 144-5. OF UNUNIFORM MANNERS, IN THE IPHIGENIA AT AULIS, &c.

“ How does this appear, independently of the “ name of this great critic? Iphigenia is drawn “ indeed at first, fearful and suppliant: and “ surely with the greatest observance of nature.
 “ The account of her destination to the altar was “ sudden, and without the least preparation: and,
 “ as Lucretius well observes, in commenting her “ case, NUBENDI TEMPORE IN IPSO; when “ her thoughts were all employed, and, according “ to the simplicity of those times, confessed to “ be so, on her promised nuptials. The cause “ of such destination too, as appeared at first,
 “ was the private family interest of Menelaus.
 “ All this justifies, or rather demands, the “ strongest expression of female fear and weak“ ness. But she afterwards recants and volun“ tarily devotes herself to the altar. And this,
 “ with the same strict attention to probability.
 “ She had now informed herself of the impor“ tance of the case. Her devotion was the “ demand of Apollo, and the joint petition of all “ Greece. The glory of her country, the dignity “ and interest of her family, the life of the gene“ rous Achilles, and her own future fame, were,
 “ all, nearly concerned in it. All this considered,

L 4

“ together

“ together with the high, heroic sentiments of “ those times, and the superior merit, as was be“ lieved, of voluntary devotement, Iphigenia’s “ character must have been very unfit for the “ distress of a whole Tragedy to turn upon, if she “ had not, in the end, discovered the readiest sub“ mission to her appointment. But, to shew “ with what wonderful propriety the Poet knew “ to sustain his characters, we find her, after all,
 “ and notwithstanding the heroism of the change,
 “ in a strong and passionate apostrophe to her “ native Mycenæ, confessing some involuntary “ apprehensions and regrets, the remains of that “ instinctive abhorrence of death, which had “ before so strongly possessed her.

Εθρεψας Ἑλλαδι μέγα φαῖν - - - Θανεσα δ’ ἐκ ἀναινομαι.

Once the bright star of Greece - - -
 But I submit to die.

“ This, I take to be not only a full vindication of “ the consistency of Iphigenia’s character, but as “ delicate a stroke of nature as is, perhaps, to be “ found in any writer.” [*Commentary on the Ep.
 to the Pisos*, &c. vol. i. p. 113, &c.]

If all I knew of the Tragedy in question was from this ingenious defence, I should certainly acquit Euripides. I cannot acquit him, or can only partially acquit him, when I read the Tragedy itself. The fact perhaps is, that the question, whether

whether the critic's censure be just or not, cannot possibly be decided by any general statement of the case. That Iphigenia, so circumstanced as she is here, and very justly, described to be, might at first be timid and suppliant, and, at last, meet death with resolution, and this, without any inconsistency, or duplicity of character, will hardly be disputed. But the question is, whether Euripides has actually so drawn this timidity, and this resolution, as to preserve the unity of character. To determine this fairly, we must, at last, have recourse to the detail of the Poet's execution, and the actual impression which, on the whole, it leaves upon the reader's mind. All depends here upon degree and manner. A single nuance in the colouring, a slight depression or elevation of tone, in the suppliant, or the heroine, may be sufficient to determine the impression this way, or that. What this impression was upon Aristotle's mind; it may be observed that he has marked very precisely and clearly by the expression, 'ΟΤΑΔΕΝ ΕΟΙΚΕΝ 'Η 'ΙΚΕΤΕΤΟΤΕΑ ΤΗ. ΤΥΤΕΡΗ:—" the supplicating Iphigenia is NOTHING LIKE the Iphigenia of the conclusion." The expression, I think, does not imply, that he thought the mere circumstance of her supplicating at first for life, and recanting afterwards, was, of itself, necessarily inconsistent, but, that the manner in which she supplicated was such, as to make her, in that part, appear to be a different character, another person, person, from what she appears to be when she recants.

My own opinion I confess to be, that though the considerations suggested in this ingenious defence of Euripides may prove the censure of Aristotle to be too strongly, or, at least, too generally, expressed, yet they do not prove it to be without foundation. I say, too generally, because perhaps there is but one passage in the speech of the suppliant Iphigenia, to which the ΟΥΔΕΝ ΞΟΙΧΕΝ is fairly applicable, in its full force. Her speech, Εἰ μὲν τῶν Δεφίως, &c. v. 1211, which, on the whole, is highly pathetic, ends with these unhappy lines :

- - - μαινεται δ' ὅς εὐχεται
ΘΑΝΕΩ· ΚΑΚΩΣ ΖΗΝ ΚΡΕΙΣΣΕΟΝ Η ΘΑ-ΝΕΙΝ ΚΑΛΩΣ*.

v. 1249.—

I leave it to the reader to determine, whether any intervening circumstances, that can be imagined, will make it at all conceivable, that the same Iphigenia, should, in the short space of time taken up by the recital of, at most, only 35 lines of dialogue, experience

* This is softened in Mr. Potter's version :

- - - - - " of his senses is he left,
" Who hath a wish to die ; for life, though ill,
" Excels whate'er there is of good in death.

v. 1365.

• The reader of Euripides will observe, that Iphigenia continues the same strain of consternation and lamentation after the speech of her father in reply to her supplication ;

(v. 1253,

experience such a total change of sentiments, as to express the most heroic resolution, and the utmost sensibility to the glory of dying for her country ; as to say,—

- - - δίδωμι σωμα τ' ἔμην Ἑλλάδι,
 Θνητ', ἐκπορθεῖτε Τροίαν' ταῦτα γὰρ μνημεῖα μέ-Δια μακρὰ, καὶ παῖδες ἥτορ, καὶ γαμοὶ, καὶ δοξ' ἔμην. v. 1397^c.

It seems probable, that Aristotle had chiefly in view the particular lines I have quoted ; and had he any way pointed his censure to that passage—had he said, ἄθεν φαίνεται ἡ ὀργὴ ἐκτετακτα, &c. quoting, or referring to, the verses, I think there could have been no objection to the justice of his criticism.

Gravina, who has also defended Euripides in his book Della Tragedia, lays great stress upon a circumstance, which does, indeed, seem to be of considerable moment in the Poet's justification ; I mean, the effect of necessity in producing courage and

(v. 1255, &c.) and even at v. 1317, she says she dies, “ impiously murdered by an impious father :”

Σφαγασὶν ἀνοσιόρισιν Ἀνὸς πατρός.

From the end of this monstrophic lamentation to her heroic speech v. 1638, there are, I think, but 35 lines.

- - - - - “ For Greece I give my life.
 “ Slay me, demolish Troy : for these shall be “ Long time my monuments, my children these,
 “ My nuptials, and my glory.” - - -

Potter's Eurip. v. 1549.

and resolution. “ Non é maraviglia, se Ifigenia, “ quantunque per naturalezza del sesso, timida,
 “ ed amorosa della vita, sinchè la poteva sperare ;
 “ poi resa forte dalla necessità, madre spesso “ anche delle virtù morali, come anima gene“ rosamente educata, disprezza la morte, e cangia “ l'amor della vita in compiacenza di gloria. Il “ che alla giornata anche osserviamo in persone “ di nascita e d'animo vile, che condotte alla “ morte, arditamente l'abbracciano, quantunque “ al primo avviso costernate rimanessero ; perchè “ l'idea della necessità non avea usata ancor la
 “ sua forza.” [Sect. 19.]

This seems much to the purpose ; and it is supported by its agreement with what we find in the Tragedy itself. For the change in the sentiments and language of Iphigenia is not, as we have seen, produced before the scene in Trochaics between Clytæmnestra and Achilles ; the very scene in which the inevitable necessity of the sacrifice is first made clearly apparent. The effect of this on the resolution of Iphigenia is visible also in her speech :

- - - τα δ' ΑΔΥΝΑΘ' ἡμιν καρτερεῖν ἔρᾳδιον.

Αλλα και σε τευθ' ὄραν χρεη, μη διαβληθης σφατω,
 ΚΑΙ ΠΛΕΟΝ ΠΡΑΞΩΜΕΝ ΟΥΔΕΝ. - - -

ΑΛΛ' ΑΜΗΧΑΝΟΝ·—δίδωμι σωμα τ' ἔμρον
 Ελλαδι, &c. v. 1372.

The

The learned Mr. Markland, in his excellent edition of the two Iphigenias, defends Euripides upon very different ground. He admits the inconsistency, not only in the character of Iphigenia, but in all the characters of the play, except Clytemnestra; and even in the chorus. But all this he supposes to have been intended by the Poet, as a moral lesson—a striking picture of the “levity and inconstancy of the human mind.” And he wonders, which I cannot say I do, that this should have escaped the ἀγχινοια of Aristotle⁴.

NOTE 114.

P. 145-6. HENCE IT IS EVIDENT THAT THE DEVELOPMENT ALSO, &c. - - -

Heinsius pronounces this whole passage, to the words, ἐν τῷ Οιδ. τῷ Σοφ.—inclusively, to be certainly out of its proper place⁵. And I should be of his opinion, if such digressive and parenthetical insertions were not very usual with Aristotle. The expression, however, should be observed:—φανερὸν ἐν ὅτι ΚΑΙ τὰς λύσεις, &c. that “the development also,” &c. i. e. as well as the other incidents of the fable, just mentioned. Most of the versions neglect the word καί, which is important, and greatly helps the connection. This digression, however, though not unrelated, is but slightly and obliquely related, to his present subject; and seems introduced introduced rather ἀπὸ μηχανῆς, and in violation of his own rule—ταῦτο μετὰ ταῦτο ἢ ἀναγκασιον ἢ εἰκρόν. It interrupts the connection, and obscures the purport, of the chapter; and though we allow it to be where the author placed it, we may fairly question, whether he has placed it where it should be.

⁴ P. 190. Note on v. 1375.

⁵ De. Trag. cap. xii.

NOTE 115.

P. 146. MACHINERY.

Ἀπὸ μηχανῆς.—It appears from Jul. Poll. lib. iv. cap. 19. that the term, μηχανή, was not applied indiscriminately to the machinery of the play-house in general, but was appropriated to that particular machine, in which Gods and Heroes made their appearance in the air. Μηχανὴ δὲ, θύρας δεικνύσκει καὶ ἡρώας τῆς ἐν αἰθρῇ.—I hope it was something better than the Μηχανή of the French opera, so pleasantly described by Rousseau:—

“ Les chars des Dieux et des Déeses sont “ composés de quatre solives encadrées et sus-“ pendues à une grosse corde en forme d’escarpo“ lette; entre ces solives est une planche en “ travers, sur laquelle le Dieu s’asseye, et sur le “ devant pend un morceau de grosse toile bar“ bouillée, qui sert de nuage à ce magnifique char.
 “ On voit vers le bas de la machine l’illumination “ de deux ou trois chandelles puantes et mal “ mouchées, qui, tandis que le personnage se “ démene et crie en branlant dans son escar“ polette,

“polette, l'enfument tout à son aise. Encrens
“digne de la divinité.”

The account of the machinery of a Greek Theatre, in the chapter of Jol. Pollux above referred to, is curious, and amusing, as far as it is intelligible.

NOTE 116.

P. 146. OR THE RETURN OF THE GREEKS
IN THE ILIAD.

Και ἐν Τῇ ΙΛΙΑΔΙ τὰ περὶ τὸν ἀποπλῆν. It has been disputed, whether Aristotle here speaks of the Iliad of Homer, or of some Tragedy called The Iliad. See Dacier's note.—But, if we suppose the text to be right here, I see not how we can reasonably reject the first of these interpretations. Ἡ ΙΛΙΑΞ, as Beni has well observed, can only be, THE Iliad,—i. e. Homer's Iliad. Dacier supposes the Tragedy to have been called, “The Iliad, or, The return of the Greeks;” and to be that mentioned by Longinus, Sect. 15, and attributed to Sophocles. But, even supposing a Tragedy to be meant, it seems very clear from Aristotle's expression, that the title must have been, Ἡ ΙΛΙΑΞ, only; for he says, ΕΝ τῇ ΙΛΙΑΔΙ ΤΑ ΠΕΡΙ ΤΟῦ ἀποπλῆν—i. e. “the circumstances, or incidents, “relative to the return of the Greeks, in [the “Tragedy of] The Iliad.”—So, cap. xxiv.—ἐν τῇ Οδυσσειᾳ—τὰ περὶ τὴν ἐκθισιν.—Indeed, The Iliad, taken

• Nouvelle Eloise, Part II. Let. xxiii.

taken alone, seems an improbable title for a Tragedy; but Dacier's junction is still more improbable. He might as well have imagined a Tragedy with this title—Ἡ Οδυσσεια, 'H, 'H EKΘΕΣΙΣ.—As to the Tragedy of Sophocles mentioned by Longinus, it seems clearly to have been his POLYXENA *.

Supposing, then, the text not to be defective, we cannot, I think, avoid understanding Aristotle to speak of the machinery, (to use the word in his general sense,) in the second book of the Iliad, where Minerva descends to prevent the return of the Greeks †. It is true indeed, as has been objected, that an instance drawn from an Epic Poem is not what one would expect here, where the subject is Tragedy; and, that though there be, in this instance, a difficulty solved—a knot cut—yet this λυσις, is not, properly, λυσις μυθς, in that sense, in which Aristotle applies the term in cap. xviii ‡. to the final denouement of a Tragic fable.—We must therefore suppose him to have produced this, merely as an obvious and well known example of the sort of supernatural interposition, or machinery, that would be improper in the λυσις of a Tragedy. For, that he intended to censure the “ministeria Deorum,” so necessary to the Epic Poem, and so frequent in the great model of all Epic Poems, cannot be imagined without absurdity, and is by no means necessarily implied, as Dacier seems to think, in this interpretation.

Such

* See the note of Ruhnkenius in Toup's Longinus.

† Il. B. 155, &c. . ‡ Transl. Part. II. Sect. 18.

Such appears to me to be the only meaning, and the best apology, which the passage will bear, taking for granted the integrity of the original. But of this, I confess, I doubt. M. Batteux translates—"la petite Iliade." But if we admit that sense, as Aristotle certainly would not have called that Poem THE Iliad, without distinction, we must necessarily suppose the text defective, and the word ΜΙΚΡΑ to be omitted^d; and it seems very probable that this was the case. The illustration, indeed, will still be drawn from an Epic Poem; but from one of an irregular and historic structure, consisting of a string of ill-united stories*, and which seems to have been considered as a sort of seed-plot, or nursery, of subjects for the use of the Tragic Poets: so that in referring to it, Aristotle may be understood to refer to such Tragedies as were founded on it; of which he enumerates himself no fewer than eight, and one of these was called ΑΠΟΠΛΟΥΣ; taken, I suppose, like the Polyxena of Sophocles mentioned by Longinus, from that part of the Little Iliad, which related the detention of the Greeks in the Thracian Chersonese, and the appearance of the ghost of Achilles demanding the sacrifice of Polyxena. See the Hecuba of Euripides, v. 35, &c. and 104, &c.—
and

^d — τὴν ΜΙΚΡΑΝ Ἰλιάδα—and, ἐν τῇ ΜΙΚΡᾷ Ἰλιάδι. cap. xxiii.

* See Aristotle's account of it, cap. xxiii. Transl. Part III. Sect. 1.

and the fine description of the sacrifice, v. 519, &c.
—In Mr. Potter's translation, v. 36—102—501.

NOTE 117.

P. 147. OR OF INDOLENT ---.

Ῥαθυμῶ:—indolent—nonchalant. Hesychius explains Ῥαθυμῶ, —Ὁ ΜΗ ΠΟΝΗΤΙΚΟΣ ἀλλ' ΕΚΑΥΤΟΣ. It is improperly rendered, "timide," by M. Batteux, and "mansueto" by the Italian translators.

NOTE 118.

P. 147. SHOULD DRAW AN EXAMPLE APPROACHING RATHER TO A GOOD, THAN TO A HARD AND FEROCIOUS, CHARACTER.

The original is—Ὅτω καὶ τὸν ποιητὴν, μιμημένον καὶ ὀργίλης καὶ ῥαθυμῆς, καὶ τ' ἅλλα τὰ τοιαῦτα ἔχοντας ἐπὶ τῶν ἡθῶν, ἐπιεικείας ποιεῖν παραδειγμὰ ἢ σκληροτητῶς δεῖ: οἷον τοῦ Ἀχιλλεῖα Ἀγαθὸν καὶ Ὀμπερῶ. — A passage that has much perplexed and divided the commentators. Of all the explanations which this perplexity has produced, that of Dacier is the most improbable and ill founded. He forces ῥαθυμῶ into the sense of, emporté, furieux, and makes it "encherir sur ὀργίλῳ," Επιεικεία, he wrenches from the obvious and proper sense in which it is continually used by Aristotle, into that of probability. And the result of this violent operation upon the passage, is the following strange version :—" Il faut tout de même; qu'un Poete

 " qui veut imiter un homme colere et emporté, ou
 " quelqu' autre caractere semblable, se remette
 " bien plus devant les yeux ce que la colere doit
 " faire vraisemblablement (i. e. ἐπισυναίσις) que ce
 " qu'elle a fait (i. e. ἡ σκληροτητα!) et c'est " ainsi," &c. I may venture to leave all this to the learned reader's rejection, without any farther comment. I shall only just observe, that the expression, KAI ὅς. KAI μὲν. evidently marks different characters; not, as Dacier makes it, different degrees only of the same character.

Heinsius first suggested, that the phrase ἐπισυναίσις ἡ σκληροτητα, was elliptical, and μᾶλλον to be understood. But in spite of the "Attica venustas," I am much more inclined to suspect an omission of the word. Aristotle would hardly have used a mode of expression so unavoidably ambiguous—or rather, that would, almost unavoidably, lead to a wrong sense; for, the fact is, that all the commentators, before Heinsius, understood the ἡ, as indeed every reader, I believe, would at first naturally understand it, in the disjunctive sense of, or. Besides this, I doubt whether any example of this elliptic phrase occurs in Aristotle's works,
 That it may, I will not take upon me to deny;
 but it seems, at least, very unusual. An instance of it I have not found; but the reader may find many instances of the full phrase, μᾶλλον ἢ, even in this treatise^a. However, one, or the other, of these suppositions, it seems necessary to adopt. The passage will then, without forcing the words ἐπεικεία and σκληρότης from their usual and proper signification, afford a clear and consistent meaning. Επεικεία is used, I think, here, as it is in cap. xiii. in the general sense of good^b. Σκληρότης plainly relates only to his first instance, of the ὀργιλ, the angry character, of which it seems to express the extreme degree. In the Ethics ad Nicom. we have—ΑΓΡΙΟΙ και ΣΚΛΗΡΟΙ, as synonymous, or very nearly so^c. A passage of Plato may serve to illustrate and confirm this sense of the word. Speaking of the θυμοειδεις, or irascible nature, he says, it may produce the ἀγριον:—και ὁρθως μιν τραφεν, ἀνδρειον ἂν εἴη· ΜΑΛΛΟΝ Δ' ΕΠΙΤΑΘΕΝ ΤΟΤ ΔΕΟΝΤΟΣ, ΣΚΛΗΡΟΤΕΡΟΝ τε και χαλεπὸν γιγνιούτ' αὐν, ὡς το εἶκ^d.—And just before—ΑΓΡΙΟΤΗΤΟΣ τε και ΣΚΛΗΡΟΤΗΤΟΣ, και αὐ μαλακίας τε και ἡμερότητ^d.

The

^a Cap. i. φυσιολογον ΜΑΛΛΟΝ Η ποιητην. — cap. ix. ΜΑΛΛΟΝ των μυθων — — Η των μετρων. — cap. xxiv. προαιρεισθαι τε αδυνατα και εἰματα, ΜΑΛΛΟΝ Η δυνατα και ἀπίθανα.

^b So, in the Rhet. lib. i. cap. 5. ἐπεικείας is plainly used as synonymous with χρησ. For, defining the word χρηστοφιλια, he says—ὃ δε και ΕΠΙΕΙΚΕΙΣ ανδρες, [sc. φιλοι εἰσι] ΧΡΙΣΤΟΦΙΛΟΣ.

^c Lib. iv. cap. 8. ed. Wilk.

^d De Repub. lib. iii. ed. Mass. p. 228,

The sense of the passage, then, will be, that, in order to reconcile the first precept, of the χρησον, with the third, of the ὁμοιον, the character should be brought as near to a good one, as is consistent with the circumstance of likeness. Thus, if such a character as that of Achilles is to be drawn, its striking features are to be preserved, but, at the same time, to be rather improved and softened, than exaggerated. For the expression must be observed. Aristotle does not say absolutely, according to the sense of Heinsius, that Achilles ought to be drawn, or was drawn, παραδειγμα ἐπιεικειας, but rather so than otherwise;—ΜΑΛΛΟΝ ἢ σκληροτητος.—“Loin de charger encore “le defect, il le rapprochera de la vertu,” as Mr. Batteux has very well expressed the spirit of the rule, though he has generalized it, and made it refer to all that precedes — καὶ ὀργίλους, καὶ ῥαθυμούς, &c.—whereas it appears plainly, from what has been said of the force of σκληροτης, that the words, ἐπιεικειας ποισιν παραδ. ἢ σκληρ. can be applied only to the ὀργίλοι; for as to the ῥαθυμοι, such a character may, indeed, be flattered into the ἐπιεικειης, but cannot well, by any distortion, be made to appear σκληρ.

Still, however, what every one, I believe, naturally expects at the first reading of this passage, as it now stands, is, that after having mentioned two instances of faulty characters, the ὀργίλοι, and the ῥαθυμοι, Aristotle should mention two corresponding instances of good qualities bordering upon, or connected with, each, and of which the Poet might avail himself, to give to each a favourable turn. But, instead of this, we have a good, and a bad quality, (ἡπιεικεία, and σκληρότης,) both of which, as we have seen, can be made to relate only to his first instance, the ἔργιλος; so that all the rest, between the words ἔργιλος, and ἡπιεικείας, must be parenthetical. The harshness and embarrassment of such a construction, led me formerly to suspect an error in one of the words, ἡπιεικείας, or σκληρότης; and a conjecture was suggested to me by a passage in the Rhetoric, which, I hope, will at least be thought plausible enough to excuse my laying it before the reader. The suspicion seemed to fall upon σκληρότης; for the ἡπιεικεία would answer well enough as a softening, or improvement, of ῥαθυμία; as an indolent man, who concerns himself about nothing, and cares only for his own ease, is often spoken of as a quiet, good kind of man. Instead of σκληρότης, then, I thought it not improbable, that Aristotle might have written ἁπλοτής. The passage of Aristotle himself which suggested this to me, is in the first book of his Rhetoric, cap. ix. where, delivering the usual precepts relative to the art of encomiastic misrepresentation, he says, — Ληπτίον δὲ — — — ἱκανόν, ἐκ τῶν παρακολυθημένων αἰ, κατὰ τὸ βέλτιστον· οἷον, τὸν ὀργιστὴν καὶ τὸν μανικόν, ἁπλοῦν καὶ τὸν ἀνύδαδ, μεγαλοπρεπὴ καὶ σέμνον. κ. τ. φλλ.

The

The whole passage is much to the purpose of this place; and is, plainly, not more applicable to the Rhetorician, with respect to the hero of his oration, than it is to the Poet, with respect to the hero of his poem. A passage of Euripides will add, perhaps, some probability to this conjecture. In the Iphigenia at Aulis, Achilles thus draws his own character:

Εγώ δ' ἐν ἀνδράσιν εὖσεβέσασθε τραφεῖς,
Χειρῶν, ἱμάθων τῆς τροπῆς ἄπλοτος ἔχειν.
Καὶ τοῖς Ἀτρεΐδαις, ἣν μὲν ἤγανται καλῶς, Πεισομέθ'. ὅταν δὲ μὴ καλῶς, εὔπεισομέθ'.

v. 926.

Where the meaning of τροπῆς ἀπλῆς, is very well fixed by the two subsequent lines, and by the expression, ἐλευθερὰν φύσιν, in the verse that follows them.

Plato, also, in the Hippias, talks much of the simplicity, truth, and sincerity, of Achilles; as if, in his view, they were the prominent features of what was good in the Homeric character of that hero. When Socrates asks Hippias, whether Achilles is not represented by Homer as an artful, designing character, Hippias answers—Ἡκιστα γὰρ, ὦ Σωκράτης, ἀλλ' ἄπλοτος ἐστίν. And; again, ὅς μιν Ἀχιλλεὺς εἰη ἀλῆθης τε καὶ ἄπλοτος· ὁ δὲ Ὀδυσσεὺς πολυτροπὸς τε καὶ ψευδής°. And the following lines are there quoted, in which Homer has made

Achilles

° Tom. i. p. 364, ed. Serr.

Achilles strongly mark this feature of his own character :

Διογενες Λαερτιαδη, πολυμηχαν' Οδυσσευ,
 Κρη μεν δη τον μυθον ἀπηλεγεως ἀποειπειν,
 'Ηι περ δη φρονεω τε, και ὡς τετελεσμενον ἔσαι· Εχθρῶ γαρ μοι κείνῳ ὁμως αἰδαο πυλησιν,
 'Ος χ' ἑτερον μεν κευθει ἐνι φρεσιν, ἄλλο δε βαζει.
 Il. ix. 308.

The sense, then, of the passage before us, according to this conjecture, would be this:—If the Poet chuse for the subject of his imitation a passionate, or an indolent man, he should give to the former the cast of plain sincerity, and honest frankness; and to the other, (the ῥαθύμῳ) that of moderation, gentleness, good-nature, and what the French, by an expressive word which our language wants, term, bonhomme.—But I dwell too long upon a mere conjecture. The evident propriety of the word σκληροτης, as applicable to the unsoftened and unflattered character of Achilles, may justly, perhaps, protect it from suspicion; though, on the other hand, the passages I have adduced, added to the improbability of the ellipse supposed by Heinsius, the embarrassment of the parenthesis, and the advantage of leaving the ; to its most obvious, disjunctive, sense, prevent me from a total rejection of this idea.

The word παραδειγμα, here, is taken by most of the commentators to mean a perfect ideal model—

“ summum

¹ Επιεικής—ΠΡΑΟΣ, ΜΕΤΡΙΟΣ.—Suidas.

² Robortelli, Victorius, Piccol. Beni, Goulston.

"summu exemplar." For this I see no reason. I take it to be used here, as it is generally, I believe, if not always, used by Aristotle, merely for an example. Of this the reader may easily satisfy himself by consulting the useful index to Mr. Winstanley's edition.

NOTE 119.

P. 147. AS ACHILLES IS DRAWN, BY AGATHO, AND BY HOMER.

PLATO, in the third book of his Republic, gives a very different view of the Homeric Achilles. He makes him a mere compound of extreme pride and extreme meanness: ὥςτε ἔχειν ἐν αὐτῷ νοσηματα δύο ἐναντιῳ ἀλλήλοις, ἀνελυθερίαν μετα φιλοχρηματίας, καὶ αὐτὴν ὑπερηφανίαν θεωρεῖν τε καὶ ἀνθρώπων*. To which we may add, as a companion, Dr. Jortin's portrait of Achilles: "A boisterous, " rapacious, mercenary, cruel, and unrelenting " brute; and the reader pities none of his calamities, and is pleased with none of his successes^b!" This is far enough from the παραδειγμα ἐπεικείας. But for a juster account of this matter, and for the best illustration of this passage of Aristotle that can be given, I refer the reader

* "So that he united in himself two vices the most opposite to each other; avaricious meanness on the one hand, and, on the other, an insolent contempt both of Gods and men."—P. 174. ed. Massey.

^b Six Dissertations, p. 214.

reader to Dr. Beattie's analysis of the character of this hero, as drawn by Homer; Essay on Poetry, &c. Part I. ch. iv.

NOTE 120.

P. 147. AND BESIDE THESE, WHATEVER RELATES TO THOSE SENSES WHICH HAVE A NECESSARY CONNECTION WITH POETRY.

Here are two readings: τας παρα τα εξ αναγκης ακολουθουσας αισθησεις τη ποιητικη; and, τα παρα τας εξ αναγκης, &c. but in both, the object, and general sense of the passage, seem to be the same, though in both, the expression, it must be confessed, is sufficiently embarrassed and obscure. I have preferred the latter, (which is that of Victorius,) as being, on the whole, the clearest*.

The senses that belong to, accompany, or are connected with, Poetry, are, plainly, the sight, and the hearing, as relative to the Οψις, or spectacle, in the whole extent of that term, and to the Μελοδοϊα or Music. When these are said to be εξ αναγκης ακολουθουσαι τη ποιητικη, it cannot be meant that the parts relative to them are essential to the Tragic Poem, like the fable, manners, &c. but only, that they are necessary appendages of the drama in its complete state, as designed for representation.

* In the treatise Περὶ αισθησεων, the same expression occurs: — ἡ μὲν ἄφῃ καὶ γενεῖς ΑΚΟΛΟΥΘΕΙ πάσῃ ΕΞ ΑΝΑΓΚΗΣ. "Tactus et gustus animalia omnia necessariò comitantur." Tam. i. p. 663. ed. Duval.

representation. This is perfectly conformable to what was before said of the Οψις; that, though confessedly, in one view, *ἡκιστα οἰκίον της ποιητικης, yet, in another view, ΕΞ ΑΝΑΓΚΗΣ ἀν εἴη τι μοριον της Τραγωδίας ὁ της Οψιως κοσμος†.

The drift of the precept is obvious. The decoration should be such as to agree with the rules just laid down for the manners. The scenery, dresses, action, &c. must be ἀρεστώτα, ὁμοία—probability, nature, and the costume, must be observed. Even the μιμῆσις βελτιωτων, the improved imitation, has here, too, its obvious application. The squalid hair, and ragged dress, of Electra‡, must, as well as the σκληροτης of Achilles, be a little flattered in the representation, and not too like, &c.

The rule extends, also, to the Melopæia, or the Music; which, from other passages of Aristotle's works, we may suspect to have been sometimes such, as sacrificed propriety, and just expression—the ἦθη, the πρεπον, &c. to the depraved taste of what he calls the φορτικοι spectators§.

It

* Cap. vi.—“is most foreign to the art.”—Transl. Part II. Sect. 3.

† Ibid. init. “The DECORATION must necessarily be “one of its parts.” Part II. Sect. 2.

‡ Σκεψαι με ΠΙΝΑΠΑΝ ΚΟΜΑΝ,
Και ΤΡΥΧΗ ΤΑΔ' ἱμῶν πεπλῶν.

Eurip. Electra, 184.

§ See, De Repub. lib. viii. cap. 6, and 7, p. 457, E. 459, A. ed. Duval. The contests (ἀγωνες), indeed, of which

It is probable that Aristotle alludes, also, to cap. xvii. and to the mistakes, which the Poet is liable to commit, who composes without keeping the stage, and the effects of representation, in his eye*.

Though the Poet neither painted the scenes, nor made the dresses, yet all this formed one of the six constituent parts of Tragedy;—fell, of course, under the direction and controul of the Poet, and was of the utmost importance to the success of his piece, at a time when representation was almost essential to the idea of dramatic poetry†.

NOTE 121.

P. 148. ALL THOSE DISCOVERIES IN WHICH THE SIGN IS PRODUCED BY WAY OF PROOF.

Ἀπὸ πρῶτης ἰδέας*. Well explained by Dacier after the Italian commentators. Indeed, the very words of Homer, in the passage alluded to, sufficiently illustrate the meaning of the expression.

E.

which he speaks in these passages, seem to have been merely musical. But the known influence of the same popular audience in the dramatic contests, and the caution given by Aristotle in the passage we are considering, make it probable, that even in the music of Tragedy, especially in the instrumental part of it, something of the same accommodation might prevail.

* Transl. Part II. Sect. 17.

† See vol. i. Diss. I. Part II. at the end.

Εἰ δ' ἄγε δὴ καὶ ΣΗΜΑ ἀριφραδες ἄλλο τι δεῖξω, Ὅφρα με εὖ γινωτον, ΠΙΣΤΩΘΗΤΟΝ τ' ἐνὶ θυμῷ, ὍΥΑΗΝ - - - &c. Od. φ. 217.

"To give you firmer faith, now trust your eye:
 "Lo! the broad scar indented on my thigh."

Pope, xxi. 226.

Other instances of signs thus used, not for the purpose of accidental discovery, but as confirmations of a voluntary discovery previously made, may easily be found. Thus, in the Electra of Sophocles, when Electra asks her brother, Ἡ γὰρ συ κινῶ;—he answers—

- - - Τηνδε προσβλεψας' ἐμὲ
 Σφραγιδα πατρὸς, ἐκμαθ' εἰ σαφὴ λεγῶ.

NOTE 122.

P. 148. THOSE WHICH - - - HAPPEN SUDDENLY AND CASUALLY, ARE BETTER.

Εκ περιπετίας.—"Non valet hic περιπετία; mutationem illam ingentem fortunarum, sed, ἡ περιπετίας, significat, casu, fortuito, et quia ita cecidit."—Victorius.

So in the passage from Polybius quoted by Suidas, under the words Περιπετία, and Ευμενής:—
 ἡ τυχὴ τοῦ πλείονος συνεργῶν χρωμένη, ἡ δ' ΕΚ ΠΕΡΙΠΕΤΕΙΑΣ, ἀλλὰ διὰ τῆς ἀγχινοίας. κ. τ. λ.

Aristotle's using the word thus, adverbially, after having hitherto used it only in its technical, or dramatic, sense, of a sudden change of fortune, produces produces some ambiguity; and the more so, as the adverbial phrase, ἐκ περιπετίας, seems not to be of very common occurrence. Heinsius, taking περιπετία in the dramatic sense, translates—"quæ e mutationibus in contrarium oriuntur;" which, indeed, is the obvious meaning of the expression, if not understood adverbially. But it cannot be Aristotle's meaning, because the discovery of the scar of Ulysses was not the consequence of any such περιπετία. Indeed, it was neither the consequence, nor the cause, of any reverse of fortune.

I have sometimes suspected that Aristotle might write it, ἐκ ΠΡΟΗΕΤΕΙΑΣ, by which all ambiguity would have been avoided. But, perhaps, after all, the phrase had no ambiguity to Greek ears, and the passage may be right as it stands.

NOTE 123.

P. 149. DISCOVERIES INVENTED, AT PLEASURE, BY THE POET, AND, ON THAT ACCOUNT, STILL INARTIFICIAL.

Αὐτοὶ δὲ, αἱ περιημεναι ὅτε τε ποιῆτε, διὰ στίχων. — The expression, περιημεναι ὅτε τε ποιῆτε, must necessarily, I think, be understood emphatically, and must mean, not merely invented, (for so are the other discoveries also, which follow,) but arbitrarily invented by the Poet, and obviously so, "upon the spur of the occasion;" in opposition to such means of discovery and recognition, recognition, as, though still indeed of the Poet's invention, are artfully prepared in the very texture of his plot, and appear to arise, necessarily or probably, from the action itself. And thus I find it well explained by Piccolomini:—" Chiama " Aristotele questa seconda specie di riconoscimento, fatto dal Poeta: e così lo chiama, non " perche in tutte le specie il Poeta non sia quello " che li riconoscimenti, siccome le altre parti dell' " azione e della favola ponga e formi coi versi " sui; ma ha dato à questa specie più ch' all' altre " questo nome, perche in essa, non fondandosi il " Poeta, nè nello stesso connettimento delle cose, " e nella stessa favola, nè in segno alcuno che la " persona stessa, che s'ha da riconoscere, gli " offerisca innanzi; egli, per questo, come libero " divenuto, à suo mero (quasi) arbitrio, reca, " finge, e pone in bocca della persona à voglia sua, " quella occasione di riconoscimento che più gli " piace," &c. [p. 230.]—Yet, as this sense is rather inferred from the explanation subjoined, (ταυτα ἐν αὐτῷ λυγν' ἂν βотаεται ὁ ποιητής, ἀλλ' ἔχ' ὁ μύθος) than expressed by the words themselves, I am much inclined to suppose some omission in the text.

The other reading, ὅτι ἀνέχεται, is very plausibly supported by the Abbé Batteux, from a passage of Aristotle's Rhetoric, which has been already mentioned in NOTE 104*. I doubt, however, however, whether that passage be fairly applicable to this^b. But though it were, the sense above given, and which I think must be given, to the expression παιρῖναι ὑπο τῷ Π. seems hardly reconcilable with this reading. For can we conceive that Aristotle would assign as a reason why such discoveries are not inartificial, that they are arbitrarily (and therefore easily,) invented by the Poet?—ΔΙΟ ἐκ ἀτεχνῶν.

* Rhet. I. c. ii. Τὸν δὲ πικρὸν, αἰ μὲν ἀνέχεται εἶπον—κ.τ.λ.

I must observe, however, that though these two readings are diametrically opposite,—ἀτεχνῶν—ἐκ ἀτεχνῶν—yet, it is some comfort, that whichever we adopt, the general sense of the passage will be the same. As such discoveries are of the Poet's invention, they are not ἀτεχνῶν, in the rhetorical sense: as they require very little invention, compared with those which arise from the action itself, they may, in this view, be denominated, ἀτεχνῶν. In either reading, therefore, Aristotle will be found to say the same thing; i.e. that the discoveries of this second species are, in point of art and ingenuity, superior to the first species, and inferior to all the rest.

^b In that passage, ἀτεχνα, is opposed to ΕΝΤΕΧΝΑ, and means, such things as are foreign to the orator's art.—Here, the word means, not foreign to the Poet's art, but only—requiring little, or no art, or ingenuity of invention, in the Poet.

NOTE 124.

P. 149. ORESTES, AFTER HAVING DISCOVERED HIS SISTER, DISCOVERS HIMSELF TO HER.

The Greek is—ἀνεγνωρίσει την ἀδελφην, ἀνεγνωρίσθης ὑπ' ἑκείνης :—this, as Victorius has observed, seems to say the reverse; i.e. that Orestes discovered his sister after having been discovered by her: which is not the fact. One would rather have expected—ἀναγνωρίσας την ἀδελφην, ἀνεγνωρίσθῃ ὑπ' ἑκείνης: which would also have been clearer, and not have given occasion to the commentators to suppose, that the discovery of Iphigenia by the letter was meant to be included in this second and faulty species of discovery; whereas the expression ὍΙΟΝ Ὁρ. ΑΝΕΓΝΩΡΙΞΕ την ἀδελφην, leads very naturally to that idea. But it is easy to see, upon the least reflection, that the discovery of Orestes only is the example here intended. This is sufficiently explained by Dacier after Victorius. It was natural enough, however, for Aristotle to mention the other discovery, in passing, as being the counterpart of a double ἀναγνωρίσις in the same drama. [See cap. xi. at the end. Transl. Part II. Sect. 9.]—But this whole passage, I may say, this whole chapter, has undoubtedly been most miserably mangled in transcription.

NOTE 125.

P. 149. BUT ORESTES, BY [VERBAL PROOFS] &c.

The reading which Victorius regarded as most authentic is this:—ἐκεῖν⊕ δε * * * * * ταῦτα ἐν αὐτ⊕ λέγει ἃ βελεται ὁ ποιητης, ἀλλ' ἔχ^u ὁ μὺθ⊕. —But four Medicean manuscripts, and, it seems, all those in the King of France's library, agree in reading—ἐκεῖν⊕ δε αὐτ⊕ λέγει, κ. τ. λ.², and, in the latter, we are told, the words are written without any hiatus. This last reading, however, appears to me short and deficient. I cannot but think that the author, after the words ἐκεῖν⊕ δε,—had expressed the means of the discovery, and by them denominated this species, as he has all the others:—δια σημειων—δια μνημης—ἐκ συλλογισμου—. But how the vacancy was filled, it is impossible to determine; and it is of the less consequence to determine, as we are in possession of the Tragedy itself. Δια σημειων, which Victorius found in one MS. or, δια τεκμηριων, as Dacier ingeniously conjectured from the words of Euripides himself, seem most probable. In point of meaning, it is indifferent by which of these appellations these discoveries were distinguished; τεκμηριον being, according ² See edit. Ox. 1780, and Batteux's translation, note 3. —But M. Batteux is mistaken in saying that Victorius omits the words ταῦτα ἐν:—he gives them in his text, and translates them in his commentary. He rejects only the supplement, δια σημειων.

according to Aristotle's own definition in his Rhetoric, only a species of σημειον. Τετων δε (i. e. των σημειων,) το μιν ἀναγκαιον, τεκμηριον^b. Σημειον is a sign, or token: Τεκμηριον, a certain, decisive sign, such as puts an end to all doubt, according to the derivation of the word given by Aristotle in the passage just referred to. We see, therefore, with what strict propriety the word is used by Euripides, when Iphigenia demands, and Orestes professes to give, a decisive proof:

Iphig.—ἔχεις τι τῶνδε μοι ΤΕΚΜΗΡΙΟΝ;

And Orestes, presently after, when he produces his last and strongest proof, says—

‘Ἄδ’ εἶδον αὐτῷ, ταδε φρασῶ ΤΕΚΜΗΡΙΑ’.

It is, indeed, some objection to δια σημειων, in this passage of Aristotle, that it would appear to confound this discovery with the first, by giving it the same denomination. But this, perhaps, would be sufficiently obviated by the explanation immediately subjoined:—δια σημειων· ΤΑΥΤΑ μιν ἐν αὐτῷ ΛΕΓΕΙ ἡ βελεται, &c. Σημειον, in the first species of discovery, is used for visible, external proofs: here, it would be used for verbal, argumentative proofs; as it is used, continually, in this treatise. And it may also be observed, that ^b Lib. i. cap. ii. p. 517. ed. Duval.

^c Iphig. in Taur.—from v. 808—to 826.—In the Electra of Sophocles, ΣΑΦΗ ΣΗΜΕΙΑ is used, v. 892, as equivalent to τεκμηριον which occurs afterwards, v. 910.

that Aristotle himself, at the end of this chapter, (if the integrity of the text be admitted,) refers to this sort of discovery, among others, under the denomination of πεποινημένα ΣΗΜΕΙΑ.

NOTE 126.

P. 149. FOR, SOME OF THE THINGS, FROM WHICH THOSE PROOFS ARE DRAWN, ARE EVEN SUCH AS MIGHT HAVE BEEN PRODUCED AS VISIBLE SIGNS.

—Ἐξην γὰρ αὖ ἐνία καὶ ἐνέγκειν.—In the sense which I have given to this obscure sentence, the only sense that I thought could fairly be extracted from the words, I am glad to find myself supported by the judgment of Victorius.—“Quare “propè dictum peccatum est: (δι’ ὃ ἰγγυς τῆς “εἰρημῆνης ἀμαρτίας ἐστίν.) quia si illa quibus usus “est Orestes non omninò signa fuerunt;—neque “enim ostendi potuerunt;—propè tamen illa “accesserunt; atque ita propè ut quædam ex “ipsis illius prosus generis fuerint, quamvis ita “ipsis ille usus non sit. Hoc enim arbitror va- “lere, “licebat enim quædam etiam portare”— “id est, manu tenere, et jubere ut ipsa videret ac “reminisceretur,” &c.

Ἐνία, because all the proofs of Orestes were not of this kind, but only Electra’s work, and the lance.

NOTE 127.

P. 149. THE DISCOVERY BY THE SOUND OF THE SHUTTLE.

Ἡ τῆς κερκίδος φωνή—Dacier, after some other commentators, makes a speaking shuttle of this; and wonders, as, indeed, he well might, that the great critic should let so monstrous an absurdity pass without a severer censure than that of its wanting art. Others understand, much more reasonably, not the literal, but the metaphorical, voice of the shuttle, in the epistolary web by which Philomela is said to have conveyed to her sister the dismal tale of her sufferings,

—ἵς τε ποικιλμασι ΣΤΟΜΑΤΙ χρῆσαμενη,

in the language of that most curious of all Poets, John Tzetzes.*

But as this seems to have been the current traditional story, I do not see how it could be adduced as a circumstance invented at pleasure by the Poet. I should rather suppose, that the discovery in question, whatever it might be, was effected by the sound of the shuttle, which Aristotle calls, φωνή, voice, not, probably, in his own language, but in the poetical language of the Tragedy itself to which he alludes. For these κερκίδες, it seems, were a very vocal sort of things, nothing like the shuttles of “these degenerate “days.”

* Chil. vii. 142.—See Ovid's Metam. lib. vi. 572, &c.

"days." Every one recollects the "arguto pectine" of Virgil. But this is nothing to the amplification of some Greek epigrammatists, who scruple not to compare them to swallows, and even to nightingales;

Κερκιδας ὀρθρολαλῆσι ΧΕΛΙΔΟΣΙΝ εἰκελοφώνως—
And,

Κερκίδα δ' εὐποίητον ΑΗΔΟΝΑ—^b.

Hence the ridiculous fancy of Joseph Scaliger, that the metamorphosis of Procne into a swallow was exhibited in the Tereus of Sophocles, and that a shuttle was made use of, instead of a whistle or bird-pipe, to imitate the swallow's voice!—

NOTE 128.

P. 149. THUS IN THE CYPRIANS OF DI-CÆOGENES - - -.

That this was a distinct Poem from the Κυπρία mentioned afterwards in cap. xxiii. seems clear from this single circumstance, observed by Victorius, that the Epic Poem called The Cypriacs,—τα Κυπρία ἔπη,—is mentioned there by Aristotle, as it is, generally, by other antient writers, in terms that imply a doubt of its author^a: whereas here the author is named, without any expression of uncertainty.

Whether the Poem was Epic, or Tragic, cannot be determined; nor, from the ambiguity of the ^b Anthol. lib. vi. cap. 8. ^a —ὁ τα Κυπριακα ποιησας - - -.

the case, τοῖς Κυπρίοις, whether the title of it was Τα Κυπρία, or, Οἱ Κυπριοί—The Cypriacs, or, The Cyprians. The latter is, certainly, the most probable title for a Tragedy, and therefore, as Dicæogenes is recorded only as a Tragic and Dithyrambic Poet, I have ventured to adopt it.

NOTE 129.

P. 149. IN THE TALE OF ALCINOUS - - -

See Od. viii. 521.—There is another discovery of the same kind in the 4th book, where Menelaus recognizes Telemachus by the tears he sheds at the mention of his father. There is not, I think, either in Homer, or in any other Poet, a more natural and affecting picture of friendly regret on the one hand, and filial affection on the other.—“Of all the friends I have lost,” says Menelaus, addressing himself to Telemachus without knowing who he was—“one there is, whom I lament more than all the rest:”—

- - - ὅς μ' οἱ ὕπνον ἀπέχθαιρει καὶ ἔδωδ' ἔμνησεν
Μνησόμενός· ἐπεὶ ἔτις Ἀχαιῶν τοσσ' ἐμογήσεν Ὅσσ' Ὀδυσσεύς ἐμογήσῃ καὶ ἤρατο — τῷ δ' ἄρ' ἐμελλεν
Αὐτῷ κηδὲ ἔσεσθαι, ἐμοὶ δ' ἀχ⁹ αἰὲν ἀλαστον
Κεῖνός, ὅπως δὴ δῆρον ἀποιχεται· εἶδε τι ἰδμεν, Ζωὴν δ' ὅγ', ἣ τεθνήκεν. Ὀδυρόνται νῦν περ αὐτὸν Λαερτιάδης θ' ὁ γέρον, καὶ ἐχέφρων Πηνελόπειά, Τηλεμαχ⁹ θ', ὃν ἔλειπε νεὸν γεγαῶτ' ἐνὶ αἰκῷ.

ὣς φάτο·—τῇ δ' αἶρα πατρὸς ὑφ' ἡμέρον ὥρε
 γούιο. [ἀκυσας,
 Δακρυ δ' ἀπο βλεφαρων χαμαδὶς βαλε, πατρὸς
 Χλμιναν πορφυρεην ἀντ' ὀφθαλμοῖν ἀνασχων
 Ἀμφοτερῇσι χερσὶ· νοήσε δὲ μιν Μενελάος. — — —
 Od. Δ. 105—^a.

That the title, Ἀλκίονος, or Ἀλκίονος ἀπόλογος, was understood to refer chiefly to the long narration of Ulysses, which occupies four books of the Odyssey, seems clear, even from the proverbial application of the expression. Ἀπολογὸς Ἀλκίονος.—ἐπὶ τῶν φλυαρευτῶν, καὶ μακρὸν ἀποτασσόντων λόγον.—Suidas. And so Jul. Pollux:—ἐπὶ μακρῶν ῥήσεων ^b. But a passage in Aristotle's Rhetoric leaves no doubt. He there expressly mentions Homer's account of the speech of Ulysses to Penelope, Od. xxiii. 310, &c. as being the Ἀλκίονος ἀπόλογος compressed into an abridgment of thirty verses.—Παραδειγμα ὃ Ἀλκίονος ἀπόλογος, ὅτι πρὸς τὴν Πηνελόπην ἐν τριακοῖς ἐκασί πεποιηται ^c. Now those verses are, in fact, a mere table of contents to the 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th books, which contain the narrative of Ulysses at the court of Alcinous.—This title, therefore, (Ἀλκίονος ἀπόλογος) must at least have extended to those four books. But the passage which is the subject of this note, seems to prove

^a Not ill translated by Fenton, in Pope's Odyssey, book iv. 131.

^b II. 4. and VI. 26.

^c III. 16. p. 603. ed. Duval.

prove that it extended still farther; for here we are referred to the eighth book under that title; though the speech, the μακρά ῥησις of Ulysses, does not commence till the ninth. The editions prefix the title, Αλκίον ἀπολογία, only to the eighth book.—The fact seems to be, that the titles, by which the different parts of Homer's Poems were first distinguished, were applied to parts of very unequal lengths; so that afterwards, when the equal, or nearly equal, division into books took place, it would not always coincide exactly with the other division, formed by the different distinct subjects or episodes of the Poem; but one title would sometimes comprehend several books, and different parts of the same book, would sometimes be distinguished by different titles. Thus, for example, the fifth book of the Odyssey had two titles, Καλυψὲς Ἀντρον, and Σχιδια, or Τα περι την σχιδίαν: and the last book three, Νικυίαν—Τα ἐν Λαιρτῷ—and, Σπονδαί^d. And thus, on the other hand, the title, Αλκίον ἀπολογία, is not, I apprehend, to be considered as appropriated to any one book, but, probably, comprehended five books—from the eighth to the twelfth, inclusively; perhaps, was understood to refer, generally, to the whole Episode of Alcinous; as indeed the expression ΑΛΚΙΝΟΤ ἀπολογία — “the story of ALCINOUS”—seems rather to imply. And the
different

^d See Ælian, V. Hist. lib. xiii. cap. 14, and the notes of Perizonius.

different parts of this long Episode were, again, subdistinguished by other titles; such as, Κυκλωπια, Νεικυια, Τα Κίρκης, &c. Indeed, the title, Αλκίνας Απολόγοι, though prefixed only to the eighth book, seems evidently extended beyond that book by the title subjoined as its equivalent,—Ἡ, τὰ τε Οδυσσεὺς παρὰ Αλκίινῳ. But how the word ἀπολόγοι got into the plural number here, I do not well understand. This circumstance, however, together with the idea of its being confined to this single book, has, I think, led Perizonius and other learned men into mistakes concerning the reason of the appellation. Perizonius (ubi sup.) thinks the eighth book was so called, “because there are several speeches of Alcinous in it ;” and others suppose, that the title alludes to the songs of Demodocus*.

NOTE 130.

P. 150. THE DISCOVERY OCCASIONED BY REASONING, OR INFERENCE; SUCH AS THAT IN THE CHOEPHORÆ—.

Here is much obscurity and confusion.—One thing, however, seems clear; that ἐκ συλλογισμῶν, cannot mean as some interpreters have understood it to mean, “by reasoning or inference in the mind of the person who makes the discovery;” because this is common to all the modes of discovery. When Electra recognizes her her brother, does she not infer, or, in the philosopher's language, syllogize? "This man has seen the lance—nobody could see it but Orestes—'This is Orestes.'"—And the same may be said of all the other recognitions. Discovery by inference, therefore, on the part of the discoverer, cannot be made a distinct species. The discovery Aristotle means, is plainly a discovery, not made, but occasioned, by inference. Throughout all his instances, he considers only the means, or occasion, of discovery, as furnished, in some way or other, by the person discovered. With respect to bodily marks, bracelets, &c. the letter of Iphigenia, and the verbal τεκμηρια of Orestes, this is obvious enough. But the case is the same with the discovery by memory: in both the examples of that species, the persons are discovered, not by recollection in the discoverers, but by the effects of it in themselves. And so here too, in the three last examples of discovery in συλλογισμῶς, however obscure in other respects, this at least seems clearly enough expressed, that the persons are discovered by their own reasoning, or inference; that is, by something which it leads them to say ².

* Schmidius, in Pind. Nem. p. 34.

But, the difficulty is, that Aristotle's first example, appears not to accord with this idea, and
with

² Some time after these remarks were written, I found them coincide exactly with those of Piccolomini, whose comment on this passage is, as usual, exact and clear. See also Benius, who follows him.

with the other examples. The inference here, appears to be, even from the words themselves ^b, and, if the Choëphoræ of Æschylus be intended, as the commentators suppose, certainly is,—inference in the mind of the person who makes the discovery. But as this, for the reasons already given, cannot, I think, be admitted, we must either leave this knot as it is, or solve it by supposing some other Tragedy, not extant, to be meant, in which the conclusion mentioned was, as in all the other instances that follow, the occasion only of the discovery ^c. Nor will this appear a very improbable supposition, if we recollect the swarm of Tragic Poets who were continually exercising their invention upon a few popular subjects, and the number of different Tragedies which, in consequence, we find recorded, not only on the same subject, but even with the same title; often with some slight variation only, in the mode of a discovery, and other episodic incidents of the plot, which would still leave a general resemblance, a sort of family likeness, between them, such as, in fact, we find in ^c So, Beni: "Itaque primum exemplum sic intelligendum crediderim, ut Electra agnita sit, non Orestes: "ita, nimirum, ut cum Orestes eo modo ratiocinantem "audiret puellam, dum Orestem sibi similem diceret, inde "Electram agnoscat." Pauli Benii, in Ar. Poet. Comment. p. 348.

^b Τεταρτη δὲ, ἢ ἐκ συλλογισμῶν· οἷον, ἐν Χορηφοῖς [al. Χλοηφοῖς] ὅτι, ἡμεῖς· τις ἐλθὼν· ἡμεῖς· δὲ ἰδὼν· ἀλλ' ἡ Ορεστης· οὐτ'· ἀρα ἐλθὼν.

in Tragedies on the same subject now extant; in the Electra of Sophocles, and that of Euripides, and the Choëphoræ of Æschylus.

But we may say, farther, that this supposition seems to be favoured by the Tragedy of Æschylus, itself; with which, what Aristotle here says, appears to me by no means exactly to correspond. The reader, who will take the trouble to examine the whole passage supposed to be here alluded to, from v. 166, to v. 233^d, will, I believe, think with me, that the discovery, in that play, cannot with propriety be denominated a discovery made by inference from resemblance. The circumstances of the lock of hair, and the footsteps, produce in Electra's mind no more than a glimmering of hope—σαινομαι δ' ὑπ' ἱλπίδι [v. 192.]—and she is so far from discovering Orestes by them, that even when he appears before her, she is not convinced till he produces the ὑφασμα—the vest, or veil. This is justly remarked by Brumoy; “Tout cela (i. e. the hair, &c.) ne fait que la rendre plus inquiète : Elle demeure donc dans ce trouble jusqu' à ce qu' Oreste paroisse à ses yeux. Il se montre tout à coup, et se fait reconnoître pour son frere, en lui présentant un voile qu'elle a tissu elle-meme.” This I take to be the true ἀναγνώρισις

^d In Mr. Potter's Æschylus, from p. 329, to 334-Quarto.

^e Theat. des Grecs, ii. p. 6.—Mr. Potter is of the same opinion :—“ No discovery is from hence raised : but
“ the ἀναγνώρισις of this drama; and it belongs rather to Aristotle's first class—διὰ σημείων; if not even to the worst sort of that class, where the sign is produced πρὸς ἔνκα,—by way of proof. Indeed, even admitting that Electra may be considered as recognizing her brother by inference from the resemblance of the lock of hair and the footsteps only, still, as Piccolomini acutely and solidly observes, this instance would belong to the first species of discovery by signs. “Questo riconoscimento non è della quarta specie, ma della prima; nato, non da sillogismo, ma da segno: “posciache Elettra, preso per segno d'Oreste la capigliatura, sopra tal segno, quasi sopra mezzo termine, fabbrica il sillogismo che ella fa in se stessa, argomentando, che colui fusse Oreste: “havendo io già detto, ch' in ogni riconoscimento suo intervenir sillogismo ed argomentazione dentro all' animo della persona riconoscente.” p. 236.

NOTE 131.

P. 150. “HE CAME TO FIND HIS SON, AND “HE HIMSELF MUST PERISH.”

It is not very obvious, how these words are to be brought to any thing like reasoning, or inference. — But all here is darkness. The far-fetched explanation which Dacier has condescended to

“the mind of Electra is deeply struck; she reasons and conjectures, and so is finely prepared for the discovery which soon follows.” Notes on the Choëphoræ.

to borrow, without notice, from Castelvetro, for whom, in his preface, he expresses so much contempt, only serves to make the "darkness" more "visible."

I know not whether it be worth while to remark a mere resemblance of expression, but a very close one, in Homer :

Μη πατὴρ ἀντίθεον ΔΙΖΗΜΕΝΟΣ, ΑΥΤΟΣ
ὈΛΩΜΑΙ. Od. O. 90.

NOTE 132.

P. 150. THERE IS ALSO A COMPOUND SORT, &c.

When the meaning of an author cannot be satisfactorily explained, all that a translator can do, is, to be particularly careful to render faithfully his words. This I have endeavoured to do here : but whether I have done even this, the manifest corruption of the text must leave uncertain. Whatever sense may be enveloped in the Greek, I hope remains enveloped in the English. But what that is, I will not undertake to say.—With respect to the title of the drama, Οδυσσεὺς Ψευδαγγέλης, if I have not given it its only possible sense, I have, surely, given it its most natural and obvious sense :—Ulysses in the disguise of a messenger. For I am really not able to see, how the words, without violent twisting, can be made to signify passively, as Castelvetro would have it, "Ulysse di

"cui sono recate false novelle;" though Victorius has pronounced a man to be a fool, who pretends to determine which of these two meanings is the right one*. Had a false Ulysses been meant, it seems probable, that the word Ψευδοδυσσεύς would rather have been used; as Ψευδῆρακλῆς, The false Hercules, was the title of a Comedy of Menander.

Αναγνωριστῶ—sc. τῶ θεατρῶ: I see no other construction, as the text stands. And so Victorius:—" Spectatores ita accepisse illam vocem, "tanquam si ipsi, rei illius auxilio, ipsum agnitiuri essent."

Ulysses seems to have been a rich and valuable resource to the dramatic writers. His history furnished the subjects of many Comedies, as well as Tragedies. See Casaubon upon Athenæus, p. 297.—There were, Ulysses Wounded—Ulysses Mad—Ulysses the Deserter—Ulysses Shipwrecked—Ulysses Weaving, &c.—The subject of the play here mentioned seems to have been suggested by Homer, Od. ζ. 120. But, what it was—how this discovery was compound (συνθετῶ)—or how, indeed, it was a discovery at all—what the precise paralogism was, &c. I confess myself totally unable, from the short, perplexed, and probably corrupt words of the text, to make out. The reader may see, however, a great variety of different conjectures in the commentators; and

I believe

* "Hæc enim ita incerta sunt, ut stultum esse videatur aliquid ipsorum affirmare."

I believe when he has read them all, he will find himself just where he was. For my part, I leave this bow of Ulysses to be bent by stronger arms than mine :—

Ω φίλοι, ἔ μιν ἐγὼ τανυω·—λαβέτω δὲ καὶ ἄλλοι.

NOTE 133.

P. 151. BUT OF ALL DISCOVERIES, THE BEST IS THAT WHICH ARISES FROM THE ACTION ITSELF ---.

I agree with those commentators, who understand this to be given by Aristotle as a species of ἀναγνωρισις distinct from any of the preceding. This appears, 1. From his examples, which are very different from all those before produced, and not reducible, I think, to any of his classes. The discovery of Iphigenia by the letter, is, indeed, mentioned under his second class, but not as an instance of that species.—See NOTE 124. 2dly, and principally, from his saying, “ After these, “ the next best are the discoveries by inference”— naming an entire species; which he would not, surely, have done, had his best of all discoveries been such, as might be found equally in the other species; had he been speaking, as some understand him, only of the best way of using the discoveries already enumerated.

NOTE 134.

P. 151. SUCH DISCOVERIES ARE THE BEST, BECAUSE THEY ALONE ARE EFFECTED WITHOUT INVENTED PROOFS, OR BRACELETS, &c. NEXT TO THESE ARE THE DISCOVERIES BY INFERENCE.

If the words, πεισθημενων σημειων, refer, as it is generally understood, to the second sort of discoveries exclusively, it is not easy to see how it can be true, that the fifth and best sort of discoveries, that ἐν πραγματος, is the only one that is effected without invented signs, bracelets, &c.—for, on this supposition, the same may evidently be said of the third and fourth classes, those by memory, and by inference, which are expressly distinguished from the two first classes.

This inconsistency is not, I think, to be removed, but by understanding the words πεισθημενα σημεια, here, to be used in a wider sense, as including the third and fourth species, and, in general, all discoveries that have any degree of the defect which Aristotle means to point out by the expression πεισθημενα ἀπο τῆ ποιότητος, used in describing the second species, as opposed to what he calls, ἐξ αὐτῶν πραγματος; though that second species only is expressly so denominated, because it had this fault in the most glaring degree.

Any incident, or single action, of that combination of actions that compose a fable, is said,
I think,

I think, to be ἐξ αὐτῶν πραγμάτων, when it is prepared in the texture of the plot, and appears to follow so naturally and of course (κατὰ τὸ ἀναγκαῖον ἢ τὸ εἰκ—) from the incidents which precede it, that the spectator does not see how it could have been otherwise^a. On the contrary, those incidents are not ἐξ αὐτῶν πραγμάτων, which are not thus gradually prepared, but have, more or less, the appearance of expedients brought in to answer the purpose of the moment; which suggest the idea of occasional and easy contrivance; which, though not, perhaps, improbable, yet have not such a degree of probability, as answers fully the purpose of dramatic illusion, by acting upon the mind of the spectator as necessity^b, and keeping his attention rivetted to the action, without suffering him, as it were, to turn his eyes a moment from it, to the resources of the Poet's invention.

Now the third and fourth sorts of discovery appear, when we examine them, to be of this kind.

They

^a What is here expressed by, ἐξ αὐτῶν πραγμάτων, is more fully expressed, cap. x. where he says of the discovery and revolution, that they should arise ἐξ αὐτῆς τῆς συστάσεως τοῦ μύθου ὥστε ἐκ τῶν προτετενημένων συμβαίνειν, ἢ ἐξ ἀναγκῆς ἢ κατὰ τὸ εἰκ, ἡγοῦσθαι ταῦτα. Transl. Part II. Sect. 8.

^b “Puisque la fonction du vraisemblable dans la Tragédie, est d’empêcher de s’appercevoir de la feinte, le vraisemblable qui trompe le mieux est le plus parfait, et c’est celui qui devient necessaire.” Fontenelle, Refl. sur la Poétique, Sect. 63.

They are not prepared and brought on gradually by the precious circumstances of the fable, as in the examples given from the Oedipus, and Iphigenia in Tauris, but effected by contrivances, more or less naturally introduced by the Poet, at the moment when they are wanted; by tears suddenly shed at the sight of a picture, by an exclamation suddenly uttered. These, therefore, are not improperly included under the denomination of πεποιημένα (ὕπο τε ποιητε); and they are, also, in the proper and logical sense of the word, σημεία; the tears, in the one case, and the illative reflection, or exclamation, in the other, being signs or tokens, by which the persons are recognized. And thus, what Aristotle here says seems true—that the discovery which arises out of the action itself, is the only sort that is entirely effected ἀνευ των πεποιημενων σημειων και περιδεραιων: by περιδεραια, meaning the first class of discoveries, and under πεπ. σημ. comprehending the three other classes.

He has, plainly, arranged his modes of discovery, as he had before arranged the modes of managing the παθῆ, or disastrous incidents, of Tragedy (cap. xiv.)—in the order of their comparative excellence; beginning with the worst, and proceeding gradually to the best. When he tells us, that the discoveries by inference are the next best, he evidently considers them, as not being, strictly at least, ἐξ αὐτων πραγματος; and so far, I think, is intelligible: but, in what respect they are are better than the preceding species, δια μνημης, he has not told us. The discovery by recollection may, perhaps, in this respect be regarded as less ἐξ αὐτῶν πραγμάτων, or, more of the "Poet's making," as it seems to require the introduction of something accidental and extraneous, such as the picture in his first instance, and the Bard and his performance, in the second; circumstances, which have more the appearance of expedients than the reflection of Orestes, for example, in the Tragedy of Polyides. For that reflection arose, at least, naturally, and solely, from his situation, and that situation was essential to the fable.—But it is time to release the reader, and myself, from the embarrassments of one of the most corrupt, confused, and ambiguous chapters of this mutilated and disfigured work.

NOTE 135.

P. 152. THIS, THE POET, &c.

Ὁ μὴ ὄρωντα τὸν θιατὴν ἰλανθάνειν. Dacier has, at least, I think, satisfactorily proved, that this passage wants some emendation, and that the sense must be—"escaped the Poet, (not the spectator,) "for want of his seeing, or conceiving himself to "see, the action." He might have added to his other reasons, that the word λανθανοιτο, applied just before to the Poet, seems to fix the same application of ιλανθάνει here. The opposition, as he has observed, is strongly marked:—it escaped the Poet; ἐπὶ ΔΕ τῆς ΣΚΗΝΗΣ, &c. but upon the stage, &c. Castelvetro had seen this before Dacier, and conjectured, ὁ μὴ, ὁρῶντα, ΩΣ τὸν θεατὴν, ἰλανθάνει AN. "La qual contrarietà non " sarebbe potuto essere celata a Carcino, se " avesse riguardata la sua Tragedia non come " Poeta, ma come veditore *." The ingenuity of the conjecture may be allowed; not so, I fear, the accuracy of the Greek.

NOTE 136.

P. 152. IN COMPOSING, THE POET SHOULD ALSO, AS MUCH AS POSSIBLE, BE AN ACTOR.

— Τοῖς σχήμασι συναπεργαζόμενον ποιεῖν — The same expression occurs in the Rhetoric, III. 8.— ἀνάγκη τὰς συναπεργαζόμενας σχήμασι, καὶ φωναῖς, καὶ ἰσθητῇ, καὶ ὅλως τῇ ὑποκρισεί, ἰλειυνότερας εἶναι. But there, this is mentioned only as the means, by which the Orator may excite greater emotion in the hearer, immediately: here, as the means, by which the Poet may excite a stronger emotion, a greater reality of imagination and feeling, and a more perfect alienation of person, if I may venture so to call it, in himself, immediately; in order to produce afterwards a correspondent effect upon the spectator, by the force and truth of his imitation.

"I have often observed," says the admirable author of the Inquiry concerning the Sublime and Beautiful,

* P. 371.

Beautiful, “that on mimicking the looks and “gestures of angry, or placid, or frightened, or “daring men, I have involuntarily found my mind “turned to that passion whose appearance I en“deavoured to imitate; nay, I am convinced it “is hard to avoid it, though one strove to sepa“rate the passion from its correspondent ges“tures^b.” I believe, however, it is hardly possible to put on the bodily appearance of any passion, without previously turning the mind, in some degree, to that passion. But it is certain, that the effect, in this case, will react upon the cause, and convert a slight and nascent emotion into a more steady, strong, and real feeling of the passion.

A singular instance of the practice of this rule of Aristotle—σχημασι συναιπεργαζομενον ποιειν—in a sister art, is given in the following curious account, from Felibien, of Domenichino, a painter remarkable for expression.

“Il ne pouvoit comprendre qu’il y eut des “peintres qui travaillassent à des ouvrages consi-“dérables avec si peu d’application, que pendant “leur travail ils ne laissassent pas de s’entretenir “avec leurs amis. Il les regardoit comme des “ouvriers qui n’avoient que le pratique, et nulle “intelligence de l’art; etant persuadé qu’un “Peintre, pour bien réussir, doit entrer dans une “parfaite

^b Part IV. Sect. IV.—See also the curious account there given of Campanella.

“ parfaite connoissance des affections de l'esprit “ et des passions de l'ame ; qu'il doit les sentir “ en lui même, et s'il faut ainsi dire, faire les “ memes actions et souffrir les memes mouvemens
 “ qu'il veut représenter : ce qui ne se peut au “ milieu des distractions. Aussi on l'entendoit “ quelquefois parler en travaillant, avec une voix “ languissante et pleine de douleur, ou tenir des “ discours agréables et joyeux, selon les divers “ sentimens qu'il avoit intention d'exprimer. Mais “ pour cela, il s'enfermoit dans un lieu fort retiré, “ pour n'être pas apperçu dans ces differens états,
 “ ni par ses élèves, ni par ceux de sa famille ; “ parcequ'il lui étoit arrivé quelquefois, que des “ gens qui l'avoient vû dans ces transports, “ l'avoient soupçonné de folie. Lorsque dans sa “ jeunesse il travailloit au Tableau du Martyre “ de S. André qui est à S. Gregoire, Annibal “ Carrache étant allé pour le voir, il le surprit “ comme il étoit dans une action de colere et “ menaçante. Après l'avoir observé quelque “ temps, il connut qu'il representoit un soldat qui “ menace le S. Apôtre. Alors ne pouvant plus “ se tenir caché, il s'approcha du Domeniquin, et “ en l'embrassant, lui avoüa qu'il avoit dans ce “ moment-là beaucoup appris de lui^b. ”

I will just observe, farther, that this precept, or rather counsel, of Aristotle, would appear the less strange

^b Felibien,—Entretiens sur les vies des Peintres, &c.
 tome iii. p. 379.

strange to the Poets of his time, because, as he himself tells us, the earlier Tragic Poets were also actors: ὑπεκρίνοντο γὰρ αὐτοὶ Τραγῳδίας οἱ ποιηταὶ το πρώτων.—Rhet. III. 1.—But, indeed, I am so far from seeing any thing strange or improbable in this advice, that, on the contrary, if it be liable to any objection at all, it is, perhaps, rather to that of being unnecessary: for I scarce believe, that any Poet of genius, antient or modern, ever yet composed a Tragedy without practising involuntarily, in some degree or other, what the critic here recommends. No dramatic Poetry, I think, can be less chargeable with the μανικόν, than that of the French. Yet M. Marmontel sees no difficulty in this-precept. In his account of this part of Aristotle's work, he says, " Il recommande
 " que l'on soit présent à l'action que l'on veut
 " peindre, que l'on se pénètre soi-même des sen-
 " timens que l'on doit exprimer, et qu'on imite,
 " en composant, l'action des personnages qu'on
 " met sur la scène: méthode qui contribue réel-
 " lement à donner au style plus de chaleur et de " vérité." [Poet. Franc. I. p. 15.] Mr. Mason says of the late ingenious and amiable Mr. Whitehead, whose dramatic compositions, whatever other merit may justly be allowed them, certainly bear no marks of any unmanageable phrensy in the Poet,—that " he is apt to believe, that he " always acted, or at least declaimed, while he was " composing for the stage." If, then, even the modern

modern Tragic Poet is, almost necessarily, more or less, "an actor in composing," there can surely be little difficulty in conceiving an Æschylus, or a Sophocles, in their free, solitary, and unwritten meditations, to have given still greater scope to their imaginations, and, Ὅσα Διγνᾶτον, at least, σχημασι συναπιεργασθαι. We must, for once, divest ourselves of modern ideas, and think, not of a spruce Poet of "these degenerate days," shut up in his study, with his pen in his hand, and his writing-table before him—but of Euripides, retired into that lonely, dark, and shaggy cavern, which is said to have been the favourite scene of his Tragic meditations. "Philochorus refert, in "insulâ Salamine speluncam esse tetram et horridam, quam nos vidimus, in quâ Euripides Tragicæ gædias scriptitârit."—Aul. Gell. xv. 20.

NOTE 137.

P. 152. FOR BY NATURAL SYMPATHY, &c.

Πιθανωτατοι γαρ ἀπο τῆς αὐτῆς φύσεως οἱ ἐν παθίαισι νισι.—Nothing, I think, can be more forced and improbable, than the sense given to the words, ἀπο τῆς αὐτῆς φύσεως, by Victorius, and, after him, by Goulston and Dacier: "eorum qui pari naturâ ingenioque præditi, &c.—De deux hommes qui seront d'un égal genie, celui qui se mettra dans "la passion sera toujours plus persuasif."

If the text be right, the only sense I see is that given by Heinsius:—"propter similitudinem ejus-
" dem

“dem naturæ.”—i.e. “from natural sympathy.”

—But I am much disposed to suspect, that we should read, αὐτ’ ΑΥΤΗΣ ΤΗΣ φυσικῆς—ab ipsâ naturâ;—Ipsâ naturâ comparatum est, ut, &c.—

A similar, but contrary, transposition, of the same words, occurred at the end of the second chapter: ἐν αὐτῇ δὲ τῇ διαφορᾷ—plainly, as Victorius observes, instead of ἐν Τῇ ΑΥΤῇ.—. And, indeed, this sense is so obvious, that Robortelli, Castelvetro, and Piccolomini, have all given it in their translations, though certainly not warranted by the text. However, as the other reading seems to express, though somewhat obscurely, the same idea, I have not departed from it any farther, than by adopting the explanatory version of Heinsius, which takes the meaning, and leaves the obscurity.

NOTE 138.

P. 152. WE SHARE THE AGITATION OF THOSE WHO APPEAR TO BE TRULY AGITATED—THE ANGER OF THOSE WHO APPEAR TO BE TRULY ANGRY.

Χειμαίνει ὁ χειμαζόμενος, καὶ χαλεπαίνει ὁ ὀργιζόμενος ἀληθινάτα. I have given that sense of this passage, in which all the commentators I have seen are perfectly agreed. But I cannot dissemble a difficulty which has always occurred to me in this interpretation, though, to my surprise, I have not found it any where taken notice of. I mean, that it gives a transitive sense to the verbs, χειμαίνει,

χειμαίνε, and χαλιταίνει. With respect, particularly, to the verb χαλιταίνει, (for the other occurs but seldom,) the difficulty from the general, if not the constant, use of it, as a verb neuter, seems not easily to be overcome. This use of it, by Aristotle himself, and by other prose writers, is so common and well known, that it would be mere trifling to produce instances. That it is never used by them transitively, it would be rash, perhaps, even in those, whose Greek reading is much more extensive than my own, to affirm. I can only say, that I have never seen a clear instance of it, either in prose, or verse. The lexicographers, indeed, send us to Homer: but without giving any instance that appears to me to be at all decisive*. And, on the other hand, the word occurs clearly in its usual and intransitive sense in other passages: as, Il. E. 256. II. 386. Σ. 103, &c. But even admitting the verb to be now and then used by Homer in a sense indisputably transitive, it seems very unlikely, that Aristotle should transplant so rare, and poetical, a use of the word, into plain and philosophical prose; especially as other verbs were probably at hand, if he meant what he is supposed to mean, which would not have been liable to this ambiguity.

This difficulty has sometimes led me to suspect, that the passage may possibly, after all, admit

* See Il. T. 183.

admit of a different sense; and that Aristotle may have meant only to say this:—"The Poet
 " should work himself, as far as may be, into the " passion he is to represent, by even assuming
 " the countenance, and the gestures, which are
 " its natural expressions. For they, of course,
 " have most probability and truth in their imi" tation, who actually feel, in some degree, the " passion: and no one expresses agitation of " mind (χειμαίνει) so naturally, (ἀληθινώτατα,) as " he who is really agitated, (χειμαζομένῳ,) or " expresses anger (χαλεπαινει) so naturally, as he " who is really angry (ἔργιζομένῳ.)"—Thus, the forms, χειμαίνει, χαλεπαινει, will retain their neuter signification, referring to the Poet's expression of the passion in his composition; as, χειμαζομένῳ, and ἔργιζομένῳ, refer to the internal feeling of the passion, which he has excited in his own mind.
Χειμαζισθαι—to be violently agitated in mind:—
Χειμαίνειν—to express that agitation by words or actions^b: ἔργιζισθαι—to be angry: χαλεπαινειν— to express that anger by words or actions.—It will, perhaps, be objected, that χαλεπαινειν, used as a verb neuter, appears to be synonymous with ἔργιζισθαι. That it may be often so, I will not take

^b This verb seems to be rare. I neither recollect, nor can, at present, find, any other instance of it, than in the 9th Pastoral of Theocritus, v. 20, where it is used impersonally: χειμαίνει, i. e. when it is winter. An instance, which, as far as it goes, is in favour of the sense
 I would give to the word here.

take upon me to deny: but numerous instances may certainly be produced, where it is not so—where it clearly denotes something beyond the mere internal passion. In this line of Homer, for example;

Ζεὺς, ὅτε δὴ ῥ' ἀνδρῶσσι ΚΟΤΕΣΣΑΜΕΝΟΣ ΧΑΛΕΠΗΝΗ. Il. Π. 386.

—“iratus sæviat,”—where the anger of Jupiter is expressed by κοτεσσαμεν; but χαλεπήνη goes on to the external demonstration of it, ὅτε λαβροτατον χερσὶν ὕδωρ. v. 385.

So, too, Od. T. v. 83.

Μὴ πῶς τοι δεσποινα κοτεσσαμένη ΧΑΛΕΠΗ-ΝΗ. - - -

—which, in vulgar language, would be fairly rendered, “lest your mistress should be angry, and “scold.”

Thus, again, Il. Ε. 256, of Jupiter:

- - - ὁ δ' ἐπεγρομεν ΧΑΛΕΠΑΙΝΕ
ΠΙΠΤΑΖΩΝ ΚΑΤΑ ΔΩΜΑ ΘΕΟΥΣ.—

In the very passage adduced to exemplify the transitive use of this verb, Il. T. 183, it appears to have the same sense: for the words, ὅτε τις προτέρῃ χαλεπήνη, allude to Agamemnon's own words, Il. B. 378.

Καὶ γὰρ ἐγὼν Ἀχιλεὺς τε μαχεσάμεθ', εἵνεκα κέρης, Ἀντιβίοις ΕΠΕΕΣΣΙΝ· ἐγὼ δ' ἥΡΧΟΝ ΧΑΛΕ-ΠΑΙΝΩΝ.

Χαλεπαίνειν is here, I think, put as synonymous with μαχεσθαι ἐπέεσσιν. Agamemnon confesses,
that

that he himself gave the first verbal provocation; alluding, I think, to his speech, v. 131, where he first hints at the seizure of Briseis. For though Achilles speaks, indeed, somewhat roughly to the king in the preceding speech, yet his wrath cannot properly be said to commence before the subsequent speech, Ω μοι, ἀναιδέην, &c. v. 149.

I shall add only an instance or two more.—In the first book of Plato's Repub. Socrates says to Thrasymachus,—ἐλεεσθαι ἢ ἡμᾶς πολὺ μᾶλλον εἰς ἡμᾶς περ, ὑπο ὑμῶν τῶν δεινῶν, ἢ ΧΑΛΕΠΑΙΝΕΣΘΑΙ—i.e. "we deserve rather to be pitied by you wise men, than to be scolded at."—In the passage quoted NOTE 22, p. 283, vol. i. Plato says of a dog,—ὅν μιν αἶν ἰδὼν ἀγνοῦντα, ΧΑΛΕΠΑΙΝΕΙ—ὅν δ' αἶν γνωρίμων, ΑΣΠΑΖΕΤΑΙ: "fawns on those he knows, and barks at strangers." In the Memorabilia of Xenophon, II. 2, we have—Αἰσθομένου δὲ ποτὶ Λαμπροκλῆα, τὸν πρεσβυτάτου υἱὸν ἑαυτοῦ, πρὸς τὴν μητέρα ΧΑΛΕΠΑΙΝΟΝΤΑ: i.e. "when he had heard him speaking angrily to his mother."

It seems, then, that the passage will fairly admit of the meaning I have proposed. And whether that meaning would not be more to Aristotle's purpose, than the other, I willingly submit to the reader's consideration. For why recommend it to the Poet to help his imagination by action, when he composes?—plainly, for the sake of the effect of this method upon his poetry; that his expression of passion may have more of truth and nature; mature; that his characters may χειμαίνων, or χαλεπαίνειν, ἀληθινώτατα *. Now it seems more consonant to this purpose, that the words which follow as the reason of the advice, should refer to this immediate effect upon the Poet's work, which is the object of the advice, than to the more remote and implied effect of the work upon the spectator. It seems, indeed, to have been this reference to the audience, in the usual way of understanding the passage, that led Madius into the mistake of supposing this precept intended, not for the Poet, but for the Player.

Such are my objections to the sense hitherto given to this passage, and my reasons for thinking, that its meaning may have been mistaken. I abandon them, without reserve, to the judgment of the learned reader: in my own, it is impossible for me to confide, when I reflect, that the whole band of commentators, who have preceded me, have acquiesced, without doubt or scruple, in that interpretation which to me appears so unsatisfactory.

* It is somewhat in favour of this interpretation, that it gives the adverb, ἀληθινώτατα, its most natural and obvious construction, with the verbs, χειμαίνων and χαλεπαίνειν. As the passage is commonly understood, it must be joined with the participles.

NOTE 139.

P. 152. GREAT NATURAL QUICKNESS OF PARTS - - -.

Ευφους ἡ ποιητικὴ ἐστίν - - -. Ευφύια—ΟΞΥΤΗΣ.
Hesychius. See also Casaub. upon Athenæus, p. 454, and Suidas, voc. Ευφουα, and Ευφύια, where the passage he quotes from Alex. Aphrod. shews what was the common idea of εὐφύια, though its propriety is disputed. The εὐφους were generally understood to be οἱ ῥαδίως—μανθανόντες, ὁμοίως δὲ ἔχοντες πρὸς πάντα τὰ μαθηµατα, &c. The passage seems to allude to Ethic. Nicom. III. 5. p. 113. ed. Wilk.

No epithet can be more exactly adapted to the εὐφους, than that of εὐπλᾶς, which follows; a man of quick, mimetic parts, who can turn himself, as we say, to every thing with equal facility, and mould himself, without effort, to every form. But the word had considerable latitude, and would have been applied by the ancients, to the genius of a Shakspeare, the talents of a Foote*, or the docility of a school-boy†.

* Philip of Macedon would have caressed such a man as Foote. He delighted, we are told, ἀνθρώπους τοῖς ἐφύττει καλῶμενοις, καὶ τὰ γέλοια λέγοντι καὶ ποιοῦσι. Athen. 260.

† Παρά των ἐφύτων, says Isocrates, speaking of scholars, δεῖ µεγαν λαβανην µισθον, ὅτι πολλὰ µανθάνονται· παρὰ δὲ των ἀφύτων, ὅτι πολλὰς κόπας παρεχούσι.
 —An admirable inscription for a school door.

NOTE 140.

P. 152. OR, AN ENTHUSIASM ALLIED TO MADNESS - - -.

Ἡ μανία.—My translation here will, I fear, be thought too paraphrastical. But this is one among many passages, that have occurred, where I have found it impossible to give, at the same time, word for word, and idea for idea. This, indeed, is the great misfortune of translation; for what Mr. Harris has observed is too true,—that “much of the force of the original will necessarily be lost in the translation, where single words in one language cannot be found corresponding to single words in the other^a.”

The word, μανία, wanted no explanation to Greek readers, to whom, from the writings of Plato, in particular, it was familiar to consider enthusiasm of every kind, as a species of madness^b. They would understand no more, from Aristotle's expression, than that comparative insanity which Cicero has so exactly expressed:—Poetam bonum neminem — sine inflammatione animorum “existere”

^a Philos. Arrang. p. 211, note.

^b See, particularly, the Phædrus, p. 244, 245, ed. Serr. —Aristotle himself, too, in his Rhetoric, says—Ἐνθὺν γὰρ ἡ ποίησις, III. 7. ed. Duval.—I cannot help just reminding the reader of the admirable humour with which Horace ridicules the practical abuse of this idea, in his Art of Poetry, v. 295—304.

“existere posse, et sine quodam afflatu quasi “furoris.”—But what can a mere modern reader think, when he is told, in Dacier’s translation, that, to succeed in Poetry, “il faut avoir un genie
“excellent, ou etre FURIEUX?”

Nor could I, without danger of confounding the philosopher’s distinction, have rendered εὐφροσύνη by the single word genius; which, as we usually apply it to the fine arts, implies much of that very warmth, and illusive power, of imagination, that “inflammatio animorum” which Aristotle meant to express by the other word, μανικόν.

I must not omit, that this whole passage receives considerable illustration from another, in the Problems, pointed out by Mr. Winstanley in his edition, p. 292^d.

If Aristotle had given any instance of the μανικόν among the Tragic Poets, it would, in all probability, have been Æschylus. It is pleasant to observe the appearance which the wild invention and ferocious sublimity of his PROMETHEUS, had to the eye of a French critic, of admirable good sense, indeed, but, καρδία ηφροντος. “Je crois,” says Fontenelle, “qu’ Eschile etoit UNE MA-“NIERE DE FOU, qui avoit l’imagination très-“vive,

^c De Or. II. 46.

^d P. 817. B. ed. Durval. Ὅσοις δὲ λαν &c.—to ἐνστατή, C.
The reading, ἐνστατικόν, instead of ἐξετατικόν, if it stood in need of any confirmation, would be confirmed by this single passage beyond all doubt.

“vive, et pas trop réglée.” He would probably have said much the same of Shakspeare. The charge certainly cannot be retorted upon the French Tragic writers. It is related of the unfortunate Nat Lee, that, when he was in Bedlam, somebody had the inhumanity to tell him, it was a very easy thing to write like a madman. “No,” replied the Poet, “it is not an easy thing to write like a madman; but it is a very easy thing to write like a fool.” I believe these two things are almost equally difficult to our ingenious neighbours. It would be hard to detect Racine writing like a fool. But I confess I never read him without wishing he had written a little more like a madman. We must allow him much merit;—but he never “rolled his eye” in the “fine phrensy” of the Poet; he knew little of “the tricks” of “strong imagination.” The character given of him by Lord Kaimes appears to me perfectly exact and just; that “he is always sensible, generally correct, never falls low, maintains a moderate degree of dignity without reaching the sublime, paints delicately the tender passions, but is a stranger to the genuine language of enthusiastic or fervid passion¹.”

I have

* Tome ix. p. 415.—“Il me semble,” says this agreeable writer, “qu’il ne faudroit donner dans le sublime, qu’à son corps defendant.” [Preface to his Hist. des Oracles.] No wonder then, that he could not relish Æschylus.

¹ Elements of Crit. vol. i. p. 488.

I have often wondered, what it was that could attach Mr. Gray so strongly to a Poet whose genius was so little analogous to his own*. I must confess I cannot, even in the dramatic fragment given us by Mr. Mason, discover any other resemblance to Racine, than in the length of the speeches. Its fault, indeed, is Racine's; its beauties are, surely, of a higher order. What pity, that a work of genius, should have been smothered in its birth, by a little cold and trifling criticism!—We have, indeed, been told, that “it was certainly no loss to the English stage, that “Agrippina was never finished:” but we have been told it by the same critic who has pronounced, also, that the BARD of Gray, only “endeavours “at sublimity;” who saw in the juvenile Poems of Milton “no promise of Paradise Lost,” and who has admitted, with seeming complacence, into the catalogue of English POETS, such names as Blackmore, Yalden, and Pomfret—

“Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytanimque!”—

NOTE 141.

P. 152. WHEN THE POET INVENTS A SUBJECT - - -

Here is a confusion of various readings, none of them, I think, free from suspicion. How the sense

* See Letter xvi. Sect. 4. of the Memoirs of Mr. Gray.

sense given to the passage by Victorius, and almost all the commentators, is fairly to be obtained from any of them, I confess, I never could see. I follow the common, and, in my opinion, the least suspicious, reading—τις τε λογες τις πεποιημενους*—. And I understand Aristotle to speak of subjects, either wholly invented by the Poet, like the Αἰθρᾶ of Agatho, or, having only some very slight and general foundation in history or tradition. — Λογῶν—the general story, or argument. — (Λογῶν—ἡ τῶν δρᾶματων ὑποθέσεις. Hesychius.)—ΚΑΙ αὐτὸν ποιῶντα,—because, I suppose, such arguments were commonly drawn up by others, probably in the Διδασκαλῖαι, and, perhaps, prefixed to the copies of the play. But here, Aristotle—“poetam etiam ipsum hoc facere jubet; quod novum erat, et inusitatum :”—as the force of ΚΑΙ ΑΥΤΟΝ seems rightly explained by Victorius.

NOTE 142.

P. 153. WHEN HE HAS GIVEN NAMES TO HIS CHARACTERS - - -.

This seems to shew plainly, that by λογες πεποιημενους the critic means only such subjects as were of the Poet's own invention*. For he says—first,

* τις ΔΕ λογες, which, according to VICTORIUS has MS. authority, would, perhaps, be preferable.

* As, πεποιημενον ὄνομα, cap. xxi. “a word of the Poet's invention.”—πεποιημενα σημεια—πεποιημεναι ἀναγνωρίσεις, cap. xvi.

first, form a general sketch of your fable; then, give names to your characters. This manifestly implies, that the names were not already fixed by history or tradition, but were at the Poet's choice. To avoid this difficulty, the Abbé Batteux translates, "on remet les noms^b." But this, certainly, is not what Aristotle says; and it is too trifling, surely, to be what he means. If the names are given by the particular history which the Poet follows, what purpose will it answer to omit them in his plan?—They will certainly be in his mind; they may as well be upon his paper. In short, the method here recommended by Aristotle seems perfectly absurd and nugatory, upon any other supposition than that of a story, either wholly invented by the Poet, or, of which, at least, he owes only some slight hint to fact, and real life. In this case, and in this only, it is, that the subject first presents itself to the Poet's mind in a general and abstracted view, which he afterwards circumstantiates by time, place, and names, and fills up by the detail of particular episodes and scenes.

That this is the meaning, will appear, I think, still more clearly from the 9th chapter, with which this passage should be compared. What is here said

cap. xvi. and, περιποιημένα ὀνόματα, cap. ix. "names invented
" by the Poet."

^b And, see his note, N^o 3, upon chap. xvi.—It is the explanation of Beni:—"jam nomina imponi jubet, non
" tam illa fingendo, quam reddendo."

said of the method to be pursued by Tragic Poets, answers exactly to what is there said of the Comic: εὐρησάντες γὰρ τοῦ μύθου διὰ τῶν εἰκωτῶν, ὅτι τὰ τυχόντα ὀνόματα ἐπιτίθεσθαι;— with this difference, indeed, that the Comic writer may give whatever names he pleases; while the Tragic generally adopts historical names, even when his subject is feigned. Yet Aristotle, there, not only allows that Tragedy, as well as Comedy, may be all invention, both plot and names, but even says, that it would be “ridiculous” to think otherwise: γέλαιον τὰτο ζῆτεσθαι. And he immediately adds, that it is the invention or making of his fable, (not of his verse only,) that truly constitutes the Poet ^c.

NOTE 143.

P. 153. THAT THE EPISODES BELONG PROPERLY TO THE SUBJECT - - -.

See NOTE 37*.—Here are two instances given by Aristotle of what he means by ἐπεισόδια in dramatic Poetry. They confirm, I think, what was said in that note. That Orestes should be taken, by some means or other, and should, by some means or other, be saved, were essential parts of the Poet's fable. These were not episodes, in Aristotle's view; for he expressly includes them both in that general sketch of the story, which is previous to the intertexture of the episodes:—ἐλθὼν

δι

^c Cap. ix.—Transl. Part II. Sect. 6. * In vol. i.

δε καὶ ΛΗΦΘΕΙΣ — and, ἐντευθεν δε ἡ ΣΩΤΗΡΙΑ. The episodes are the circumstances by which the Poet chose to effect this capture, and this escape; i. e. the madness of Orestes, and the ablution of the statue; or rather, these facts drawn out into some particularity of descriptive narration, so as to form distinct, though subordinate, parts of the action; for this, perhaps, made a part of Aristotle's idea of ἐπεισοδίων.—And the examples here given seem to confirm this. See the Iphig. in Tauris, v. 260, to 340.—v. 1153, &c.—And, particularly, the narration of the ἀγγελία, v. 1327, &c.

From the very observation, that these episodes should be *properly related to the subject, and from what he adds of the difference of dramatic and epic episodes in point of length, it clearly appears, that, as I observed in the note referred to, the word is not applied to Tragedy in a different sense from that in which it is applied to the Epic Poem.

NOTE 144.

P. 153. BUT IN THE EPIC THEY ARE THE MEANS OF DRAWING OUT THE POEM TO ITS PROPER LENGTH.

Ἡ δ' ἱστορία τοῖς μηχανεῖται.—Compare cap. XXIV. Ἐχὼν δὲ πρὸς τὸ ἐπεκτείνεισθαι, κ.τ.αλ.—το, ἱστοροῖσι.

* They could not therefore be considered by Aristotle as "parties nécessaires de l'action," according to Le Bossu's definition, lib. ii. ch. 6.

NOTE 145.

P. 153. THE GENERAL STORY OF THE ODYSSEY—LIES IN A SMALL COMPASS.

Μικρῷ, (instead of μακρῷ,) has now the support of a manuscript. See, ed. Ox. 1780, with the learned editor of which I perfectly agree. Λογῷ is plainly used here in the same sense as before, for the general argument, or summary, of the Poem: whereas, if we read μακρῷ, it can mean only the entire story at full length, with all its episodes. Farther; the epitome of the Odyssey which follows, is evidently the exemplification of the preceding assertion, that the story of the Odyssey, stripped of its episodes, is very short.

Homer himself has given us a still more general outline of the Poem in two lines and a half;—συνοψιν πάσης της Οδυσσειας, as the scholiast has observed upon it:

Φην, κακα πολλα παθοντ', ὀλισαντ' ἀπο παντας ἱταιρας,

Αγνωσεν παντεςσιν, εἰκοσῷ ἐνιαυτῳ,

Οπαδ' ἔλευσεσθαι. - - -

Od. B. 174.

—where, ὀλισαντ' ἀπο παντας ἱταιρας, is equivalent to Aristotle's μονε ὄντῳ.

NOTE 146.

P. 154. PERSECUTED BY NEPTUNE - - -.

ΠΑΡΑΦΤΑΑΤΤΟΜΕΝΟΥ ὑπο τῆ Ποσειδῶν. —

The same idea is thus expressed by Virgil :

- - - nec Teucris addita Juno

Usquam aberit.

Æn. vi. 90.

—upon which passage the reader will find an excellent and useful note in the best of all editions of this Poet, that of Heyne.

Horace comes still nearer to the word παραφυλαττεσθαι :

Incontinentis nec Tityi jecur

Relinquit ales, nequitiae ADDITUS

CUSTOS.

Lib. III. Ode iv.

NOTE 147.

P. 154. AND MAKING HIMSELF KNOWN TO SOME OF HIS FAMILY - - -.

Αναγνωρισας τινας, αὐτοῖς ἐπιθεμεν. — This is all very strange, and, probably, very corrupt; as may appear, merely from the awkward and cacophonous repetition of the pronoun—ΑΤΤΟΣ ἀφικνιται - - - ΑΤΤΟΙΣ ἐπιθεμεν, ΑΤΤΟΣ μὲν ἴσθη.

And what is, ἀναγνωρισας τινας?—Certainly, not what one expects. Ulysses, we know, was discovered by the nurse, and discovered himself to Eumæus, and the herdsman, and to Telemachus;
but

but I do not recollect that he discovers any one. Castelvetro saw this; and he says, that “οἰκτιρῶν is “to be understood; and that the signification of “the word ἀναγνώρισας here must be observed, “which is, not that Ulysses discovered any of his “friends, but that he made himself known to “them.” But we have no authority, that I know of, for this use of ἀναγνώριζεν with an accusative case. Piccolomini, too, understands this passage as Castelvetro did—“datosi à conoscere ad alcuni.” And the Abbé Batteux—“se fait reconnoître,” &c.

But what, again, is, αὐτοῖς ἐπιτιθεμένοι?—Does αὐτοῖς refer to the friends, or to the enemies, of Ulysses?—Is ἐπιτιθεμένοι, deceiving, imposing on, as it is rendered by Victorius, and others after him, or, as others understand it, attacking? for it will bear either of these senses. I have preferred the latter as most obvious, and, on the whole, most to the purpose. Ἐπιτιθεμένοι is used by Aristotle in this sense, Rhet. II. 5. It generally, I believe, implies an attack more or less insidious, such as that of Ulysses upon the suitors. The scholiast upon Homer, Od. γ. 156, observes, that a day of festivity was made choice of, as furnishing a favourable opportunity of attacking the suitors: ἵνα τῶν ἀνδρῶν περὶ τὴν ἰορτὴν καταγινομένων, εὐκαιρὸν ἴχῃ τὸ ἐπιτιθεσθαι τοῖς μνησθησεί.

NOTE 148.

P. 154. I CALL COMPLICATION, ALL THAT IS BETWEEN THE BEGINNING OF THE PIECE, AND THE LAST PART, &c.

Aristotle is here, as usual, very short and dry in the information he bestows upon us concerning this δισις and λυσις. I wish he had given us a definition of their meanings, instead of a mere designation of their places. One would suspect, on the first view, from the mention of a change ἐκ εὐτυχίας only, (in which reading all the MSS. I think, agree,) from his instance, (if it be the same Tragedy as he before cited, cap. xi.) and from the common acceptation of the word λυσις itself, that he was speaking only of those Tragedies in which the principal characters are extricated from the difficulties they were involved in, and the end is happy. And, indeed, the way in which Le Bossu, and others after him, explain this nœud and denouement, leads naturally to this idea, and seems hardly consistent with their allowing, as they do, that the denouement may be either calamitous or prosperous*. For they explain the nœud, or δισις, by "obstacles à vaincre" — "efforts contraires — i. e. aux efforts du héros pour l'exécution de son dessein." — "Les obstacles présentés s'appellent nœuds, et la manière dont"
" on

* Le Bossu, Traité du Poème, Ep. II. 16.

† Batteux's note on this passage. † Le Bossu, II. 13.

"on les force, se nomme, denouement"⁴.—This will do very well for Æneas, or Ulysses. But when Oedipus finds himself guilty of parricide and incest, and, from a state of regal dignity and happiness, becomes a wretched, blind, and banished vagabond—this is but a strange way of surmounting obstacles.

The truth is, that the obstacles of the δραμα, or the knot, are those which are presented to the mind of the spectator; the difficulty overcome is that of seeing how the piece will terminate. And thus, indeed, the Abbé Batteux more accurately expresses himself elsewhere :—" Le nœud dans le Cinna est, de sçavoir si Cinna tuera Auguste," &c.⁵. The λυσις is, to the spectator, the solution of the problem, "How will all this end?" And we may add, the more difficult the problem, the greater the pleasure of the solution.

It may be objected, that this is applicable only to those Tragedies, the subjects of which are totally unknown to the spectator; and it may be asked, "Where is the problem to be solved, in those dramas, which we have repeatedly seen and read, and of which we are perfectly acquainted
" with

⁴ Batteux, Principes de la Lit. tome ii. p. 226.

⁵ Princip. de la Lit. tome iii. p. 51. And so, too, Le Bossu, where he says of the nœud, that it lasts "autant de temps que l'esprit du lecteur est suspendu sur l'événement de ces efforts contraires," &c. ch. xiii. Dacier, too, talks in the same equivocal language. See his notes, 1, 2, and 3.

“ with the catastrophe, and every incident that “ leads to it?” To this I can only answer, that it is a fact, and certainly a curious fact, that it makes little difference, or none at all, in the sympathetic interest which a spectator feels during the course of the action, whether he knows, or does not know, beforehand, how the piece will end.
 “ Quelque prévenu que l’on soit de la manière “ dont tout va se résoudre, la marche de l’action
 “ en écarte la réminiscence : l’impression de ce que “ l’on voit empêche de réfléchir à ce que l’on sait ;
 “ et c’est par ce prestige que les spectateurs qui “ se laissent toucher, pleurent vingt fois au même “ spectacle.”—[Marmontel, Poet. Franc. ii. 220.]

The term λυσις, therefore, is as applicable to the calamitous catastrophe of the Oedipus, as to the satisfactory conclusion of the Iphigenia in Tauris.
 For Aristotle expressly gives these parts, as parts of every Tragedy. Εἰς δὲ ΠΑΣΗΣ τραγῳδίας, το μὲν, δις, το δὲ, λυσις.

NOTE 149.

P. 154. THE LYNCEUS OF THEODECTES ---.

Castelvetro has guessed, with some ingenuity,
 the subject and plot of this Tragedy, from Hyginus, Fab. 45. See Goulston’s supplemental version, which is taken from him. It seems, however, very improbable, that a Tragedy should be denominated from a person who had no other share in the action, than that it passed under his roof.

Dacicr

Dacier understands this to be the Lynceus mentioned before, cap. xi. All I see is, that his application of the word, παιδιον, to Lynceus the husband of Hypermnæstra, cannot be admitted. The diminutive παιδιον, is, I believe, never used but to signify a child. In this respect, certainly, Castelvetro's conjecture has greatly the advantage; as it has, also, in the explanation of αἰτιασις τε θανάτου, which, in Dacier, is terribly forced. See his version.

NOTE 150.

P. 155. THERE ARE FOUR KINDS OF TRAGEDY, DEDUCIBLE FROM SO MANY PARTS WHICH HAVE BEEN MENTIONED.

It is incumbent on a commentator to state, as clearly as he can, the difficulties of his author, whether he be able to remove them, or not. This has not been done with respect to this passage, in any of the comments that I have seen.

Aristotle says, Τραγωδίας δὲ εἶδη εἰσὶ τέσσαρα· τοσαῦτα γὰρ καὶ τὰ μέρη ἐλήχθη. "There are four species of Tragedy; for so many also are the parts which have been mentioned." This is saying, as expressly as words can say it, that the four different species of Tragedy correspond to, and, of course, arise from, four different parts already mentioned. Now what are those parts? Four parts of quantity have indeed been mentioned; (cap. xii.) but these are quite out of the question.

question. If we have recourse to what are called the parts of quality^a, these are six; and if, with Dacier, we reduce them to four, by throwing out the decoration and the music, the four that remain, i. e. fable, manners, sentiments, and diction, will furnish out, among them, only one of the species of Tragedy enumerated—that which is denominated ἡθικὴ. These, then, cannot be the four parts pointed at as the foundation of the four species. There remain only the parts which Aristotle calls μέρη ΜΥΘΟΥ: the parts, not of Tragedy, but of one of the essential parts of Tragedy—the Fable. These he enumerated in the 11th chapter^b, and to these, the commentators, in general, are agreed in understanding Aristotle to allude.

But the difficulty here is, that he refers to four parts mentioned, and here are only three—i. e. περίπτεσις, ἀναγνωρισίς, (which he expressly calls δύο μύθῳ μέρη), and, thirdly, παθόν: ΤΡΙΤΟΝ δὲ, παθόν.—There is no mention of ἠθόν, to furnish his third species, the moral Tragedy; nor, indeed, was it, by any means, to be expected there, where he is professedly enumerating the parts of the Fable. Παθόν, in the sense in which the word is there used^c, may, unquestionably, be considered

^a Cap. vi. Transl. Part II. Sect. 2.

^b Transl. Part II. Sect. 9, at the end.

^c Παθόν, in its usual sense, of passion, is a part, not of the μύθῳ, but of the Διδραμία. (See cap. xix. Transl.

considered as parts of the Fable; ἥθη, or manners, cannot.

The Abbé Batteux thinks the ethic species is tacitly implied, as the opposite, or negative, of the pathetic. The three parts of the fable, περιπετεια, ἀναγνωρισις, παθος, give, directly, only two species of Tragedy; the two first constituting, (one, or both of them,) the complicated, (πεπλεγμενην,) and the third, the pathetic, or disastrous, Tragedy. The two other species are only the negatives of these. If the fable is without revolution or discovery^d, the Tragedy is simple, as opposed to complicated; if, without παθος, or disasters, it is ἡθικη, as opposed to παθητικη.—Such is the explanation of this ingenious writer^e; which seems to be much favoured by the manner in which these species are arranged afterwards, when applied to Epic Poetry in cap. xxiv.; where we have—ἡ γὰρ ἈΠΛΗΝ ἡ ΠΕΠΛΕΓΜΕΝΗΝ,—ἡ ΗΘΙΚΗΝ ἡ ΠΑΘΗΤΙΚΗΝ, δεῖ εἶναι; and, also, by the frequent opposition of παθος and ἥθος; παθητικον and ἡθικον, in antient writers^f.—

It

Part II. Sect. 22.) But, in the sense defined cap. xi. (Transl. Part II. Sect. 9.) it is an action—ΠΡΑΞΙΣ φθαρτικη, &c. and, therefore, part of the plot, or συνθεσις πραγμάτων, as much as the revolution, and discovery.

^d - - - ἌΝΕΤ περιπετεια; ἡ ἀναγνωρισις, as he says above, in defining the simple fable. Cap. x.

^e See his note; and his Principes de la Lit. tome iii. p. 84.

^f See, for instance, Rhet. III. 17. Quintil. VI. 2. p. 299, 300, ed. Gibs. &c.—I am aware, indeed, that in this

It may, indeed, be objected, that this cannot be reconciled to Aristotle's words—τοσάντα γὰρ καὶ τὰ μέρη ἑΑΕΧΘΗ; which seem to refer clearly to four parts that had been all expressly mentioned. But, if we should suppose Aristotle here to consider that as said, which was only implied, and as explained, which was only hinted, we should, perhaps, take no liberty that is not warranted by the magisterial and elliptic brevity of his general style, and even by similar instances in his writings*. But even this will not entirely remove the difficulty, while, by the parts alluded to, we understand Aristotle to mean only the μέρη μὲν of the 11th chapter: because ἡθ, as I before observed, could be neither mentioned, nor implied, as a part of the fable. Perhaps, therefore, he meant to use the word μέρη in a general sense, as he clearly does use it, cap. xxiv. καὶ τὰ ΜΕΡΗ, ἔξω μὲλ. καὶ ὁψίως, τ' αὐτὰ καὶ ΓΑΡ περιπετειῶν δει, κ.τ.αλ.—where the καὶ ΓΑΡ shews, that the parts he had just mentioned this opposition, καθ is not taken in the dramatic sense, of blood-shed, disasters, &c. but in the usual sense of passion. But as this sense is, in fact, involved in the former, (for we can scarce conceive a disastrous, or, as we call it, a deep, Tragedy, that is not also highly pathetic, or passionate;) this is not, perhaps, any material objection.

* His references are frequently obscure, or ambiguous. So, the καθ εἰρηται, cap. xi. see NOTE 83. And the, ὡσπερ εἰρηται, cap. xv. see NOTE 110.—An embarrassment of enumeration somewhat similar to that of this passage has occurred in cap. xiv. See NOTE 105.

mentioned included both the six constituent parts of Tragedy, and the three parts of the fable which he enumerates. If we understand μερη in this way, the meaning will only be, that so many different parts, (of one kind or other,) have been mentioned (ἰλιχθῆναι), from which these species may be deduced: these are, the three μερη μυσθῆναι, which furnish the complicated, the simple, and the pathetic, species; and the second of the essential parts of Tragedy, ἡθοῦς, which, though indeed it be a part of every Tragedy, admits, according to Aristotle's own account, of more or less ^b, and, when predominant, may be characteristic of another species, the ethic, or moral Tragedy, naturally enough opposed to the pathetic.

I confess I see no other possible consistent sense that can be given to this passage, as we now read it: for four parts are here mentioned; and four parts cannot be made out, if we confine ourselves to the μερη ΜΥΘΟΥ in cap. xi.

Dacier seems to have perceived this; and his explanation agrees so far with mine, that he, also, makes "la peripetie, la reconnoissance, la passion, et les mœurs," the four parts that produce the four sorts of Tragedy. But when, in order to reduce the seven parts, (i. e. fable, manners, diction, sentiments, discovery, revolution, disasters,) to the four which he wants, he rejects three, i. e. fable, diction, and sentiments, because they are

^b Cap. vi.—ἀντι δε ἔχον γινώσκειν αὐ (sc. Τραγωδία) δεσ.

are common to all Tragedy, he makes a distinction for which there seems to be no foundation; the manners being equally included by Aristotle among those parts which are expressly ΠΑΣΗΣ τραγωδίας μερῇ¹. But, though all these parts necessarily belong, in some degree or other, to every Tragedy, any one of them may be so predominant, as to characterize a Tragedy, and give it, if we please, a specific denomination. Thus, there may be, and there is, such a species as the sentimental Tragedy, of which, in the critic's language, το ὅλον ἡ Διαποιῶν :—another, of which the language may be the most striking character—ἡς το ὅλον ἡ Λεξις²; and he himself speaks of a sort of Tragedy that might very well be denominated, ἡ Οπτική¹, of which examples are not wanting on the modern stage. The Italian opera is a Tragedy, ἡς το ὅλον ἰσιν ἡ Μελοποιῶν.—But Aristotle's business was not to enumerate all the different species which want of taste or judgment might produce, but those only which were considered as legitimate, and such as sound criticism would approve. Hence, he has recourse, for the formation of the four regular and

¹ Cap. vi.

² Of the first, Mr. Harris gives Measure for Measure as an instance; of the last, Cato.—Philol. Inq. p. 161.—But Cato seems rather a compound of the two species. Dr. Johnson, in his life of Addison, has more justly characterized it by—"just sentiments in elegant language."

¹ See cap. xiv. Transl. Part II. Sect. 13.

and authorised species, only to the two first and most important of the six constituent parts of Tragedy—the FABLE, and the MANNERS.

But after all, when we have made the best we can of the text in this passage, we must allow, I believe, that it is more for the credit of Aristotle to suppose it faulty. And that it is so, I am the rather inclined to think, as one difficulty still remains. The expression—"there are four sorts " of Tragedy; FOR so many parts have been " mentioned"—seems clearly to imply, not merely, that those four sorts are deducible, in some way or other, from those parts, but, as I at first observed, that they, respectively, arise from those parts, each of which produces its correspondent species of Tragedy. But this, as we have seen, is by no means the case. Of the four parts, only παθος, and ἦθος, produce directly their correspondent species, the παθητικη, and the ἠθικη. The other two parts, περιπετεια, and ἀναγνωρισις, denominate one species from their presence, (the πεπλεγμινη,) and another, (the ἀπλη,) from their absence.

NOTE 151.

P. 155. ANOTHER, THE MORAL - - -

Ἡθικη.—"Videant studiosi hujus libri, an intelligi debeant, et tanquam ἀπο κοινης repeti, et hic
 " et infra, verba illa quæ in explicatione fabulæ
 " implexæ posuit: intelligo, inquam, hæc—ἡς το
 2 " ὅλον

“ ὅλον ἔστιν: et quod præterea utroque loco con-venit, inde sumptum, [i. e. παθῶν — ἡθῶν] ‘ut, “ quemadmodum inquit in describendâ illâ per“ plexâ—ἥς το ὅλον ἐστὶ περιπεταὰ καὶ ἀναγνωρισίς,— “ ita, in patheticâ,—ἥς το ὅλον ἐστὶ παθὴ; et in “ moratâ, ἥς το ὅλον ἔστιν ἡθὴ.” So Victorius; and the observation seems just and important.

By ἡθικὴ, I cannot think, that the mere absence of παθὴ is meant, as M. Batteux supposes^a, or, as Dacier and others take it, the mere moral tendency of the example. I understand the τραγωδία ἡθικὴ to be, in the most obvious and usual sense of the word, that kind of Tragedy, ἥς το ὅλον ἔστιν ἡθὴ—of which the manners are the predominant part; which seems sufficiently to imply the absence of that violent perturbation, deep distress, and terrible catastrophe, which distinguish the pathetic species. This obvious sense of ἡθικὴ is confirmed by Aristotle’s exemplification in cap. xxiv.
 For there, he plainly opposes it to the παθητικὸν of the Iliad, and applies it to the Odyssey; a poem eminently characterized as a picture of life and manners^b. The word is also used, evidently, in the same sense in the Rhetoric; where the two species of the drama, ἡθικόν, and παθητικόν, are mentioned,

^a “ La fable morale, opposée à la Pathétique, doit être “ celle où il n’y a point de sang répandu; telles sont le “ Cinna de Corneille, et la Berenice de Racine.”—Prin-cipes de la Lit. iii. p. 85.

^b See Longinus, Sect. 9, ad finem.

mentioned, as being, each of them, accommodated to action, and preferred, on that account, by the players, as peculiarly favourable to the display of their mimetic powers^c. Now this would not be the case, if by ἠθικὴ nothing more than a moral lesson and a virtuous example were intended. Yet this idea is by no means excluded by the other; and Victorius seems to have rightly adjusted this matter. “Animadvertendum autem Tragediam “illam vocari moratam, quæ non solum accuratè
 “mores exprimit, sed eos etiam inducit probos;
 “quod ipse significavit suprâ, ubi de moribus “dissertuit; primum enim præcepit ut χρησά ἦν “fingerentur.”

If it be objected, that, the delineation of manners being the peculiar province of Comedy, this account of the Τραγωδία ἠθικὴ confounds the limits of these two opposite species of the drama; we may answer, that the moral, or rather mantered Tragedy, (for we seem to want a word here,) though allowed by Aristotle, was certainly not that which he himself considered as the best, or the most Tragic^d; yet, that even this was sufficiently distinguished from Comedy by the kind of manners which it imitated. They were to be, if possible, good,

^c — ἀγωνιστικὴ δὲ, [sc. λέξις—oratorical diction] ἢ ὑποκριτικωτάτη· ταύτης δὲ δύο εἶδη· ἡ μὲν γὰρ, ΗΘΙΚΗ, ἡ δὲ, ΠΑΘΗΤΙΚΗ. διὸ καὶ οἱ ὑπακρίται τὰ ΤΟΙΑΥΤΑ ΤΩΝ ΔΡΑΜΑΤΩΝ διακρίνει, καὶ οἱ ποιηταὶ τὰς τοιαύτας. [sc. ὑποκριτάς.] Rhet. III. 12.

^d See cap. xiii, Transl. Part II, Sect. 12.

good, (χρησα),—at all events they were to be, on the whole, serious—σπουδαία: whereas the object of Comedy, with respect to manners, as to every thing else, was the ridiculous. We must remember too, that, as I have before observed, the two dramas were by no means, in Aristotle's time, so rigorously separated as they now are. There were, then, but two dramatic muses, the muse of Tragedy, and the muse of Farce. Yet there is something between a flood of tears and a broad laugh; and as Farce obstinately refused to put any degree of restraint upon her muscles, Tragedy, who, as we have seen, was so accommodating, as even, occasionally, to approach to the very laugh of Farce, frequently condescended to dry her tears, and to put on, without scruple, the intermediate smile, which Comedy should have supplied.

NOTE 152.

P. 155. AND, FOURTHLY, THE SIMPLE, SUCH AS ----- AND ALL THOSE TRAGEDIES, THE SCENE OF WHICH IS LAID IN THE INFERNAL REGIONS.

Το δὲ τέταρτον, οἷον, αἰτε Φορκίδες, καὶ Προμηθεύς, καὶ ὅσα ἐν αὐτῷ—The enumeration of these species in cap. xxiv. leaves no room to doubt the omission of the word 'ΑΠΛΟΤΗ here. Το δὲ τέταρτον, ἀπλῶν, οἷον, &c.

The commentators have been much puzzled to discover, why all those Tragedies, that have for their their subject τα ἐν ᾗδε, should be of the simple construction; and I have, indeed, been sometimes strongly inclined to believe, that the words, καὶ ὅσα ἐν ᾗδε, were out of their place, and belonged to the second species; thus: ἡ δὲ Παθητικὴ, ὅσον, οἱ τε Αἰσχυροί, καὶ οἱ Ἰζιονες, καὶ ὅσα ἐν ᾗδε. Why such subjects should belong to the disastrous class, no one can want a reason; and the words follow naturally, and pertinently, in this view, after the instance of Ixion. I have been surprised not to find so obvious a conjecture in any of the comments. Piccolomini, indeed, glances at it:—

 “ Non sò vedere, perchè più tosto in essemplio “ delle Tragedie pathetiche, che delle semplici, “ non le habbia poste; havendo riguardo in ciò
 “ alle punishment, e supplicii dell’ inferno.” p. 255.
 And it is very singular, that Dacier’s note (N° 10.) is exactly such, as if he had himself made this conjecture; of which, however, he says nothing. But, after all, it is obvious enough, as Beni has observed, that, in these infernal Tragedies, no περιπτεῖσαι, no sudden reverse of circumstances, could well have place. The comment of that acute Italian upon this passage, is the best I have seen, and will, perhaps, satisfy the reader, that no such conjecture is wanted.—“ Clausula hæc sit;— “ ex istiusmodi fabulis exemplum duxisse Aris-“ totelem ad illustrandam simplicem fabulam, “ quòd cum illi [sc. Tantalus, Sisyphus, &c.] in “ eas pœnas atque tormenta, non à prosperitate, “ quem-

“quemadmodum Oedipus et alii plerique, devol-“verentur, sed ab initio ad finem usque illis “jactarentur, peripetia abeſat quàm longiſſimè.
 “Imò verò, non modò repentè fortunæ commu“tatio haud fiebat, quod eſt proprium peripetiæ, “verum etiam mutatio in decursu toto fiebat “leviſſima ac propè nulla; ita ut ab initio ad “finem usque, mira ſimplicitate flueret fabula.
 “Ex quo fiebat, ut commodiùs ex aliis, in quibus “repentè vulnera, cruciatus, et cædes continge“bant, patheticæ duceretur exemplum, quàm ex “iis, quibus nullus repentè cruciatus infligebatur, “et tamen ſimplicitas de quâ dicebam mirificè
 “apparebat.”—Benii Comment. p. 372.

As to the reading itſelf, ἐν αἰδῷ, it ſeems to be ſufficiently confirmed even by a collation of blunders; for the MSS. exhibit, ἐν αἰδοι—ἐν αἰδ—ἐν αἰδῷ—ἐν αἰδῷ.

Victorius ſeems to doubt, I know not why, whether there exiſted any ſuch Tragedies. The Σιſυφῶς Πετροκλυίδης of Æſchylus muſt, clearly, have been of this kind; and probably his Ψυχάγωγοι. His Prometheus may be conceived to come the neareſt of any Greek Tragedy extant to a ſpecimen of this kind of drama.—Dacier has very properly reminded us here of what Ariſtotle had ſaid, cap. xiii. of the old Poets—that τῆς τυχόντας μύθας ἀπηνήθμεν—i. e. they took, as we ſay, any ſubject that came uppermoſt.

NOTE 153.

*P. 157. BUT IN THE DRAMA, THE EFFECT OF SUCH A PLAN IS FAR DIFFERENT FROM WHAT IS EXPECTED.

Πολυ παρα την ὑποληψιν ἀποβαίνει :—literally, “it turns out very differently from what was expected, or supposed, by the Poet.”

The ὑποληψις, the view, and expectation of the Poet, when he crowds so many incidents into his piece, is, that he shall make it interesting and pleasing by its variety. But the contrary happens. The necessity of not exceeding the usual length, and time of representation, reduces the proposed variety to a confused and huddled mass of incidents, not long enough dwelt on, or sufficiently detailed, to be either interesting, or clear. His Poem will be καταπεπλεγμενον τη ποικιλια, as the critic well expresses it in another passage that should be compared with this*. Thus, the Poet, in this ill-judged attempt, is disappointed in the same manner as the architect, who aims at a beautiful variety by a multitude of small and crowded ornaments, which spoil the general effect, and, at the same time, are too many, and too minute, to afford pleasure by separate inspection. And thus, πολυ παρα την ὑποληψιν ἀποβαίνει; or, as the ingenious author of the Analysis of Beauty has

* Cap. xxiii. Transl, Part III. Sect. 1. “perplexed by its variety.”

has expressed the same idea, in a chapter which affords no bad illustration of this passage from a sister art, "variety, when overdone, is a check upon itself."^b

Such appears to me to be the meaning of this passage, which, I think, has not been fully seen by any of the commentators.

NOTE 154.

P. 157. AS EURIPIDES, BUT NOT ÆSCHYLUS, HAS DONE, &c.

This passage affords a good specimen of the distressing ambiguity that prevails so remarkably throughout

^b Hogarth's Anal. of Beauty, cap. viii.—a work, to which, with all its imperfections, I think it may fairly be said, that the public have not done full justice; perhaps, through the author's own fault, who did it more than justice himself, by his pretensions. When Hogarth attempted to philosophize, he was lost. His meaning is often obscured by awkward expression, and sometimes seems, pretty plainly, not to have been well known even to himself. (See particularly his chap. on Proportion.) Yet the book abounds, I think, with sensible, useful, and, at the time it was written, I believe, uncommon, observations. The ideas of eminent artists, relative to their own arts, must always be, more or less, valuable and useful; and they ought not to be discouraged from communicating those ideas to the public, by criticism too severely exercised upon the manner in which they do it. A few ideas, even roughly thrown out, from an artist of genius, will often be of more utility to the progress of the art, than whole pages of fine writing and refined speculation from the unpractised amateur.

throughout this work. It fairly admits of two different constructions, and two different senses*. It may be thus: ὅσοι περσιν Ιλιεὶ ὅλην ἐποίησαν καὶ μὴ κατὰ μέρος, (ὥσπερ Εὐριπίδης Νιοβην, ἢ Μηδεῖαν, καὶ μὴ ὥσπερ Αἰσχυλόν,) ἢ ἐκπιπτέσιν—κ.τ.αλ. Or thus: ὅσοι περσιν Ιλιεὶ ὅλην ἐποίησαν,—καὶ μὴ κατὰ μέρος (ὥσπερ Εὐρ. Ν. ἢ Μ. [sc. κατὰ μέρος ἐποίησε,] καὶ μὴ ὥσπερ Αἰσχ. [sc. ὅλην ἐποίησε.]) ἢ ἐκπιπ. κ.τ.αλ. —In the first of these ways, the censure will fall on Euripides; in the other, on Æschylus. Victorius contends for the first, but his reasons, though plausible, seem not decisive. The whole, as he observes, turns upon this—whether the ὥσπερ refers to the whole sentence—ὅλην ἐποίησαν καὶ μὴ κατὰ μέρος,—or, only to the words immediately preceding, i.e. κατὰ μέρος. On the whole, the last construction, I think, offers itself most naturally; and it seems rather favoured, too, by the similar application of μὴ ὥσπερ, to the Poet censured, presently after; where, speaking of the Chorus, he says it should συναγωνίζεσθαι, ΜΗ ὩΣΠΕΡ παρ' Εὐριπίδῃ, ἀλλ' ὩΣΠΕΡ παρὰ Σοφοκλέῃ. —But this, after all, is one of those passages, where the “æquato examine lances” are so nicely balanced, that a commentator might continue in suspense for ever, if the necessity of going on did not oblige him to turn the scale by a touch of his own hand.

* Dacier's interpretation (note 19.) I pass over as perfectly inadmissible. This forced construction he borrowed from Castelvetro, p. 398.

NOTE 155.

P. 157-8. FOR, IN REVOLUTIONS, AND IN ACTIONS OF THE SIMPLE KIND, THESE POETS SUCCEED WONDERFULLY IN WHAT THEY AIM AT; AND THAT IS, THE UNION OF TRAGIC EFFECT WITH MORAL TENDENCY, &c.

Those annotators who make the words, 'Εν δὲ ταῖς περιπετείαις—the beginning of a separate precept relative to the use of the wonderful, have the natural construction of the text, and the uniform reading of all the MSS. against them. The natural and obvious construction, surely, is, ἐν τετῇ μόνῃ· ἐν ΔΕ ταῖς περ.—κ. τ. αλ. And this is also confirmed by the mention of Agatho again, presently afterwards. All the MSS. too, it seems, give θαυμασως, which can never be forced into the sense of "per admirabile." The alteration proposed by Heinsius—στοχαζεται, and βελεταί—in order to make this refer exclusively to Agatho, seems unnecessary. Στοχαζονται refers, very naturally, to Agatho in conjunction with the other Poets just mentioned, whose mistake, and whose failure, were the same.

I have ventured to render this passage in a manner somewhat different from any translator or commen-

* Yet so Mr. Winstanley seems to understand it. See his note, p. 294. If there are any examples of the adverb θαυμασως so used, I could wish he had produced them.

commentator that I have seen^b. Τραγικὸν γὰρ τὸτο, καὶ φιλανθρωπὸν. The question is, to what τὸτο refers? The commentators are divided. It appears to me, that it refers to the purpose, at which these Poets are said to have aimed; and the τὸτο, which follows, explains the τραγικὸν καὶ φιλανθρωπὸν.—Τὸτο ΓΑΡ—“for this (i. e. which they aim at,) is both Tragic and Moral.” The reader will see how exactly what follows suits this sense; and how this passage helps to confirm the sense given to the word φιλανθρωπὸν, in cap. xiii. [See NOTE 94.] where, ἔλπειν καὶ φοβεῖσθαι, is plainly equivalent to τραγικὸν here. The difficulty was, to reconcile these two effects. Aristotle’s expression, στοχαζονται ΘΑΥΜΑΣΤΩΣ — “surprisingly well”—implies this difficulty, and, that he does not speak of the practice as perfectly agreeable to his own theory of the Tragic drama.—In the subjects here instanced, there was the φιλανθρωπὸν, because the ἀδικία and πονηρία were punished: and, at the same time, the τραγικὸν, though not amounting to what the critic required, was not wanting, because there was the unexpected reverse of fortune, a calamitous event, παθὴν, &c.^c The persons suffering, too, were distinguished by eminent wisdom and courage; and though such characters

^b The best comment is that of Benius, p. 379.

^c ἡ τραγικὸν, Αἴτιαι γὰρ, cap. xiv. “not Tragic, because it exhibits no disastrous events.” Transl. Part II. Sect. 14.

characters are not, what Aristotle recommends as the fittest for Tragic purposes^d, yet, by the substitution of admirable and splendid, for moral and estimable, qualities, they are made to produce, in some degree, a similar effect upon the spectator.

This appears to me to be the sense of the passage; and it leads me strongly to suspect, that, instead of ἐν τοῖς ἈΠΛΟΙΣ πρᾶγμασι, we should read — ἐν τοῖς ΔΙΠΛΟΙΣ πρ. How easily the mistake might happen, is obvious to the eye. My reasons are these: 1. The φιλανθρωπον—moral tendency—poetical justice, &c. was the very characteristic of the double fable, (διπλη συγασις) and the very reason, probably, why the Platonic critics, as well as the good-natured audiences, preferred it as the best plan*. 2. The instances here given seem to accord exactly with this idea. They are plainly examples of the διπλη συγασις, not of the simple fable—i. e. the fable without revolution or discovery. The expression, τραγικον γαρ τετο και φιλανθρωπον, implies, that the Tragic and Moral were aimed at, and effected, by these Poets, both in the περιπετειαι, and in the other actions mentioned, whatever they were—ἐν τοῖς περιπ. και ἐν τοῖς --- πρᾶγμασι: and, consequently, his subsequent examples of the τραγικον και φιλανθρωπον must equally accord with both. But, if we read ἀπλοῖς, this will not be the case; for those examples

^d See cap. xiii. ὁ μεταξυ, &c. Transl. Part II. Sect. 11.

* See cap. xiii. Transl. Part II. Sect. 12. last parag.

ples are such as necessarily imply revolutions, and a sudden and unexpected turn of events, which suit very well with ΔΙΠΛΟΙΣ πραγμασι, but are incompatible with ἁπλοῖς; the simple fable being defined by this very circumstance, that it is ἀνεπιτηδίας, &c. (cap. x.)

NOTE 156.

P. 158. SUCH EVENTS, AS AGATHO SAYS, &c.

This alludes to these two lines of Agatho:—

Ταχ' ἂν τις εἰκοιτο αὐτο τετ' εἶναι λεγοί, βροτοῖσι πολλὰ τυγχάνειν ἐκ εἰκοτα.

Even this, it may be said, is probable,
That many things improbable should happen,
In human life.—

See Rhet. II. 24. p. 581, ed. Duval.—And Bayle's Art. AGATHON, note [F], who mentions a similar maxim of St. Bernard's: "Ordinatissimum est, minus interdum ordinatè fieri." "Il est tout à fait de l'ordre, que de tems en tems il se fasse quelque chose contre l'ordre."

This general, and, if I may call it so, possible sort of probability, may be termed, the probability of romance; and these lines of Agatho furnish a good apologetical motto for the novel writer. It might be prefixed, perhaps, without impropriety, even to the best productions of the kind—to a CLARISSA, or a CECILIA. Nothing is so commonly complained of in such works, as their improbability; and often, no doubt, the complaint is well founded: often, however, the criticism means nothing more, than that the events are uncommon, and proves nothing more, than the want of fancy, and an extended view of human life, in the reader. If the events were not uncommon, where would the book find readers?

“ Si la nature ne combinait jamais des evenemens d’une maniere extraordinaire, tout ce que le Poete imagineroit au-delà de la simple et froide uniformité des choses communes, seroit incroyable. Mais il n’en est pas ainsi. Que fait donc le Poete?—Ou il s’empare de ces combinaisons extraordinaires, ou il en imagine de semblables. Mais au lieu que la liaison des événemens nous échappe souvent dans la nature, et que, faute de connoître l’ensemble des choses, nous ne voyons qu’une concomitance fatale dans les faits; le Poet veut lui qu’il regne dans toute la texture de son ouvrage une liaison apparente et sensible; en sorte qu’il est moins vrai, et plus vraisemblable que l’historien.”—Diderot, De la Poes. Dram. at the end of his Pere de Famille, p. 306.

NOTE 157.

P. 158. THE CHORUS SHOULD BE CONSIDERED AS ONE OF THE PERSONS IN THE DRAMA - - - AND A SHARER IN THE ACTION.

This is not, I think, contradicted, but only properly limited and explained, by what the author says elsewhere—that, to act, is, ἐκ οἰκτιρῶν χορῶν ἵστ' γὰρ ὁ χορὸς ΚΗΔΕΤΤΗΣ ΑἰΡΑΚΤΟΣ · εὐνοίαν γὰρ μόνον παρέχεται οἷς παρῆσι *. He is, there, comparing the Chorus with the persons of the drama. In that view, the Chorus might be said, comparatively, to have no share in the action.—But here, he is comparing those Choruses whose songs are properly connected with the action, and who are interested in its event, with such as appear to have no concern with it, and to be, not merely inactive, but indifferent, spectators. In this view, it was as natural to say—the Chorus should be regarded as a person of the drama, and a sharer in the action: a sharer, that is, not by the active part, but by the warm interest, which it takes, and expresses, in that action. However, the word αἰρακτὸς must not be taken in its strictest sense. We find the Chorus, in the Greek Tragedies, frequently contributing, in some little degree, to the progress of the action, by active offices of friendly attention and assistance; as, for example, in the Philoctetes, and the Ajax of Sophocles.

* Prob. 49, of Sect. 19.

NOTE 158.

P. 159. THEIR CHORAL SONGS, &c.

There cannot, surely, be the least doubt, that, for ΔΙΔΟΜΕΝΑ, we should read, ΑΔΟΜΕΝΑ: an emendation so obvious, that it occurred to me the first time I ever read the passage. But I afterwards found, that it had occurred, long ago, to Madius; a circumstance, which, to my great astonishment, has been passed over in utter silence by all the subsequent commentators that I have seen. The words of Madius are—"Mendum igitur in verbis omnino esse censeo; ac primum in voce διδομενα, quæ in locum vocis αδομενα irrepsit: nam verbum αδειν, quod paulò post ponitur, aperte indicat, locum, ut nos fecimus, "castigandum."—I can attribute it only to some inadvertence, or mistake, that Mr. Winstanley, in his note, p. 294, has omitted to take notice of this most material part of Madius's comment on the passage. The emendation is confirmed by the αδουσι, and αδειν, which follow; by the extreme facility of the mistake, and by the difficulty of giving any reasonable explanation of the other reading. Διδομενα, says Victorius, "quia magis tratus eos (sc. choros) dabat." But he agrees that μελη is understood; and though we read, often, of the magistrate's giving a Chorus, (δυναμι χορον,) that is, furnishing the expence of the choral dresses, dresses, &c. we no where read, I believe, of their giving the Choral Odes.

NOTE 159.

P. 160. BUT IT IS EVIDENT, THAT, WITH RESPECT TO THE THINGS THEMSELVES ALSO, &c.

Καὶ ἐν τοῖς πράγμασιν. The alteration of Heinsius, δραμασιν, appears to me, not only to be unnecessary, but to pervert Aristotle's meaning. Τα πρᾶγματα, here, are, I think, the things themselves—the circumstances and incidents of the action or fable, as opposed to Διανοία, the sentiments, or thoughts, and to ὅσα ὑπο τῆς ΛΟΓΟΥ κ. τ. αλ. He had referred to the rhetorical treatises for what concerns the διανοία; he goes on, (after a short explanation of διανοία and its various branches,)—"But it is plain, that, not only for the διανοία, or sentiments, but also for the things themselves (ΚΑΙ ἐν τοῖς πράγμασιν,) how they are to be made terrible, piteous, &c. the Poet should draw from the same sources, and may be referred to the same treatises."—Thus, for example, in the second book of Aristotle's Rhetoric, he may learn what sort of things, persons, and events, are proper to raise terror or *pity, the peculiar objects of Tragic imitation. After which observation, he goes on, very naturally and properly, to remark, as Dacier has well observed, "la différence entre les choses" que

* See particularly cap. v. and viii. ed. Duval.

“ que traitent les Orateurs, et celles que traitent “ les Poetes.”—For the rest, my idea of this passage accords with that of Dacier, (note 3) ; but he does not appear to have seen the force of the expression, ΚΑΙ ἐν τοῖς πραγ. Indeed, he entirely drops the conjunction, which is here of great importance ; for it seems to fix the sense of πραγμασιν, and to point its opposition to διανοία :—Τα μὲν ἐν περὶ τὴν ΔΙΑΝΟΙΑΝ ἐν τοῖς ῥήτ. κεισθῶ - -
 - - - δὴλον δέ, ὅτι ΚΑΙ ἐν τοῖς ΠΑΡΑΓΜΑΣΙΝ ἀπο τῶν αὐτῶν εἰδῶν δεῖ χρῆσθαι - - .

In Goulston's version, which follows Castelvetro, this opposition is rightly expressed ; but in what follows, Aristotle's meaning is, I think, mistaken :
 for the difference he is shewing, (πλὴν τοσαύτων διαφέρει, &c.) is not, I apprehend, the difference between the things and the sentiments, in Tragedy, but, between the things themselves only, considered in different views, as the subject of the Orator, or of the Poet.—These commentators understand the expressions, ἐν τῷ λόγῳ, and, τὸ λεγόμενον, of the dramatic speech, and speaker.

NOTE 160.

P. 160. MUST DRAW FROM THE SAME SOURCES - - .

— Απο τῶν αὐτῶν εἰδῶν δεῖ χρῆσθαι.—The expression, χρῆσθαι ΑΠΟ, is, I believe, uncommon. It seems rightly explained by Victorius “—to bor“ row from :”—“ quasi utendum illinc sumere “ atque mutuari.”

NOTE 161.

P. 160. WITHOUT BEING SHEWN TO BE SUCH. - -

—Ανευ διδασκαλιας. “Senza che si dica e che “s'insegni che sian tali.”—Piccolomini:—I believe, very exactly. The reader may compare Rhet. I. 2. p. 514, B. — and III. 1. p. 584, B. and, (διδασκαλικη,) I. 2. p. 515, A.

The truth of what the philosopher here observes, may appear from this single consideration. Suppose two Tragedies written by two Poets on the same subject, and of which the plot and principal incidents are the same^a: and suppose two pleadings of the same cause, by two speakers. It seems very plain, that the difference of the effect upon an audience in the former case, would bear much less proportion to the difference between the Poets, than it would, in the other case, to the difference between the Speakers.

^a For example, the Merope of Voltaire, and that of Aaron Hill. As poems, there can be no comparison between these two productions. But I doubt whether, in both, the same fable has not always produced much the same effect upon the audience. This shews the truth and propriety of the rank which Aristotle assigns to the fable, as the “soul of Tragedy.”

NOTE 162.

P. 160. IF THEY ALREADY APPEAR SO IN THEMSELVES.

—Εἰ φαίνοιτο ἡδία.—That ἡδία is wrong, I have no doubt. For if we admit it, we must take it, as Victorius does, for a single instance; as if Aristotle had said, “aut jucundæ, aut tristes, aut atro-” “ces, &c. - - - : quamvis enim nunc unum horum”
 “ponat, i. e. jucunda, reliqua tamen audienda”
 “sunt.”—But how improbable it is, that he should not chuse his single instance, if he meant to give one, out of those which had just been mentioned?—that he should not rather have said, εἰ φαίνοιτο ἰλεινα, or δεινα, than ἡδία, jucunda; which, besides, is evidently not at all to his purpose. I cannot, therefore, help thinking it something more than probable, that Aristotle wrote this, φαίνοιτο ἩΔΗ [sc. τοιαυτα—that is, ἰλεινα, δεινα, &c.]—“If they”
 “appear already so;—in themselves.” The elliptic brevity of the expression will hardly be objected to, in a writer who abounds with instances much more harsh and obscure than this. In the same manner, τοιαυτα is understood with φαίνεσθαι just before:—τα μὲν δὲ φαίνεσθαι (sc. τοιαυτα) ἀνυ διδασκαλίας.

The same conjecture had, I find, occurred, long ago, to Castelvetro, but, which I think somewhat singular, has not been taken notice of by any of the the commentators I have seen. He says—"ἰ φαίνοιτο ἡδεα: coloro, li quali non riconoscono che qui sia errore, assegnino à queste parole, se possono, senso degno e conveniente ad Aristotele. Adunque io crederei che non fosse male à leggere ἡδη, in luogo d' ἡδεα, e'l senso sarebbe convenevole." [p. 406.]

The reader may see a very different explanation of this whole passage in the Abbé Batteux's notes; but an explanation which cannot, in my opinion, be reconciled to the text. His censure of Dacier and others, that they have rendered this chapter "à contresens," seems to me to recoil upon himself.

NOTE 163.

P. 160. FIGURES OF SPEECH - - -.

—Τα σχήματα της λέξεως—. Dacier, Batteux, and indeed almost all the commentators, seem to take σχήματα, here, for the gestures, modifications of countenance, and tones of voice, that accompany speech*. But, first, I much doubt whether the Greek will fairly admit of such a sense. Aristotle says, σχήματα λέξεως, figures, or forms, of the speech itself, not of the speaker. The same expression occurs several times in the Rhetoric, and always means the form of the diction itself;
never

* "Σχήματα vocat habitus quosdam, conformationesque oris, frontis, oculorum, vultus, gesticulationis manuum," &c. Robertelli, p. 227.

never the gesture with which it is delivered ^a.—

2. Aristotle explains himself by—οἷον, ΤΙ ἐντολὴ καὶ ΤΙ εὐχὴ, &c. i. e. what they are, not, what action or tone of voice they require ^b; “avec quel ton et quel geste on ordonne,” as M. Batteux unwarrantably translates it.—3. Aristotle says, that no blame, or none worth regarding, (ἀξιὸν σπεδῆς,) can fall upon the Poetry, (εἰς τὴν ποιητικὴν,) in consequence of the Poet’s ignorance of these matters, or of his not knowing them technically. A remark, surely, very unnecessary, if mere action and pronunciation were intended by σχηματα.—But, 4. The thing seems evident from the instance given of a criticism of this kind. Protagoras plainly charged Homer with ignorance, or inaccuracy, with respect to these σχηματα λεξέως, whatever they were. Now, according to the common explanation, the criticism could fall only on Homer’s pronunciation or action: but, of this, Protagoras knew nothing; all he appears to have meant, is, that Homer had made an improper use of the imperative mood; that is, had used one σχημα λεξέως, where he should have used another.

But what, then, are we to understand by these σχηματα λεξέως?—The learned reader will immediately see, that, as Victorius has observed, they
are

^a Rhet. II. 24, p. 579. III. 8, p. 591, B. and 10, p. 594, B.—And De Soph. Elench. p. 284, D.

^b Had this been his meaning, he would rather have said “τι ἐντολῆς—τι ἐτυχῆς,” &c.

are not to be confounded with those σχήματα λέξεως, of which we hear so much from Cicero, Quintilian, Dion. Hal. &c.—those “figuræ verborum,” which are opposed to the σχήματα διανοίας, the “figuræ mentis, sententiarum,” &c. Indeed, no such division of σχήματα is, I believe, to be found in Aristotle. It seems to have been the invention of the later Rhetoricians; and how little they were agreed, as to the number and the species of these σχήματα, the propriety of the division itself, and even the precise sense of the word σχήμα, may be seen in Quintilian IX. 1.—The σχήματα λέξεως of Aristotle, in this place, are plainly such, as would have been denominated by later writers, σχήματα διανοίας—figures of the thought or sense. Indeed we find them actually enumerated among the figures of that class. See Dionys. Halicarn. de Struct. &c. Sect. 8.—So Quintilian; “Figuras quoque mentis, quæ σχήματα διανοίας dicuntur, res eadem recipit omnes, in quas nonnulli diviserunt species dictorum, (i. e. of jokes, bons mots.) Nam et interrogamus, et dubitamus, et affirmamus, et minamur, et optamus.”

I see, therefore, not the least reason, why the expression σχήμα λέξεως should not be rendered here, exactly as in the other passages above referred to, “figura orationis”—form, or configuration, of speech. For λέξις, it must be observed, is here used, used, not in the particular sense of diction, or style and manner of expression, (as it is used Rhet. III. 8.) but in the general sense of λογος, speech, as we find it used in the beginning of the next chapter.

^c De Instit. Or. VI. 3. p. 316. ed. Gibs.

But though I cannot admit, that σχηματα means “configurationes oris,” &c. or, should be so rendered, yet I certainly admit, that Aristotle appears plainly to consider these different forms of speech, or sentences, with a view to action, or delivery; and, possibly, the observation of Victorius may be well founded, that—“vocatæ hæ figuræ ita videntur, quia aliter atque aliter vultus, totumque corpus, cum variantur illæ, conformantur; ut meritò hæc de causâ, σχηματα, figuræ, ipsæ appellatæ sint.”—I find the same thing in the following passage of Aristides Quintilianus, which seems evidently to allude to this very part of Aristotle’s treatise, and may be thought to afford some illustration.—Περὶ δὲ τῆς τῶν ΣΧΗΜΑΤΩΝ φύσεως, εἰς προσαγεῖν χρὴ τα νοήματα, ἢ πολλὰ λεγέειν δύνῃ ἡγεῖμαι. ἸΚΑΝΗ ΓΑΡ Ἡ ὙΠΟΚΡΙΣΙΣ ΤΑΥΤΑ ΔΗΛΩΣΑΙ. Καὶ γὰρ τετὼν ἕκασον [i. e. each of these σχηματα διανοίας, ὁ νοήματος,] ἢ συλλέλει πῶς, ὡς αἱ παραιτήσεις, ἢ ἀνίησιν, ὡς αἱ συγχωρήσεις, τῇ διανοίᾳ· καὶ ἦτοι μικροπρεπεῖς, ὡς αἱ διορθώσεις, ἢ μεγαλειεῖς, ὡς αἱ γνωμολογίαι καὶ ἀφηγήσεις, ἀπεργάζονται. ὣν ἕκαστὴ τὴν ἐνέργειαν ΕΚ ΤΩΝ ΤΥΠΩΝ ΑΡΙΣΤ’ ΑΝ ΔΙΑΓΝΟΙΗΜΕΝ, ὧΝ [leg. forte ὅΤΕ] ἕκαστον, ΚΑΤΑ ΤΟΝ ΤΗΣ ΥΠΟΚΡΙΣΕΩΣ ΚΑΙ-
PON,

PON, ΤΟΙΣ ΣΩΜΑΣΙΝ ΕΝΤΙΘΗΣΙ· ΠΑΡ' Ο ΚΑΙ
ΣΧΗΜΑΣΙΝ ΑΤΤΟΙΣ ΣΤΝΕΒΗ ΚΑΪΘΗΝΑΙ^d.

I rather suspect, we should read ΠΡΟΑΓΕΙΝ, in the beginning of this passage; in the sense of ἐκφέρειν, προφέρειν, &c. Meibomius renders σχημάτων, "gestuum," which cannot be the meaning; for by the τετων ἑκασον, and the exemplification which follows, (παραιτησεις, συγχωρησεις, &c.) and, indeed, by all the rest of the passage, it is clear, that he speaks of the configurations of the speech or sentence, of which he goes on to describe the different effects, first on the mind, and, ultimately, on the action, of the speaker. The version should, therefore, have been thus:— "De figurarum naturâ quibus animi notionēs proferendæ," &c. Or, if προσαγειν be right, the meaning, I think, must be—" to which those νοήματα are to be referred—" "under which they are to be classed." See the passage above, from Quintilian, and that of Dion. Hal. Sect. 8. which is much to the purpose.

Why Aristotle should dismiss this subject, as of much more concern, to the Actor, than to the Poet, requires no explanation. There could scarce, indeed, be any other occasion for the study of these σχήματα, but in order to learn, or to teach, in what manner, with what variations of tone, countenance, and gesture, propriety required them to be pronounced.—At the same time, it will not appear strange that he should mention them, if we recollect,
that

^d Aristid. Quintil. "De Musica," p. 86, ed. Meibomii.

that the Poets themselves were, at first, actors also, in their own pieces, and, afterwards, no doubt, instructed their actors; and hence perhaps, after all—not, as is commonly understood, from the moral teaching of the drama itself*—the well known phrases, διδασκειν τραγωδιαν, docere fabulam, &c. may, most naturally, be accounted for.

Nor was this practice peculiar to antient times. We know with what eagerness and animation Voltaire taught his Tragedies, almost to his latest hour. During his last visit to Paris, where he died, “ Il n’y vit rien, ne songea à y rien voir ; “ il n’y vécu que pour des Comediens, qu’il “ fatiguoit, en voulant leur donner des leçons de “ declamation.”

NOTE 164.

P. 161. THE PROFESSED MASTERS OF THAT KIND—

—Τῆς τῆν τοιαύτην ἔχοντος ἈΡΧΙΤΕΚΤΟΝΙΚΗΝ.—

For this word, see Eth. Nicom. I. 1, 2.—Thus, here, it seems to mean that master art, which teaches the principles of elocution, the art of public speaking, in general.

* See Casaub. in Athen. p. 413. and De Satyr. Poes. p. 113

* Tableau de Paris, tom. viii. p. 20. Since this note was written, I have had the satisfaction to find the above explanation of the phrase διδασκειν τραγωδιαν, &c. supported by Heyne : “ Διδασκαλος est poeta, qui fabulam committit, “ in theatrum producit; quia eam actores docet.”—In Epicteti Enchir. cap. xvii.

NOTE 165.

P. 161. THE CAVIL OF PROTAGORAS - - -.

See Hermes, I. 8. p. 144.

This, it seems, was his usual style of criticism; for, διανοίαν ἄφεις, πρὸς τ' ὄνομα διελιχθῆναι, as Diog. Laertius says of him^a. He seems, indeed, to have been the inventor of these σχηματα λεξέως. At least the same writer says, διηλε τον λογον ΠΡΩΤΟΣ εἰς τεσσαρα· 'ΕΤΧΩΔΗΝ, 'ΕΡΩΤΗΣΙΝ, 'ΑΠΟΚΡΙΣΙΝ, 'ΕΝΤΟΛΗΝ· (ὁ δὲ, εἰς ἑπτα — κ. τ. αλ.) ὡς και πυθμενας εἶπε λογων:—"the foundations of speech^b."

There is something amusing in the history of this man. He was originally a porter; and might have continued so, if his extraordinary genius for tying up wood had not attracted the notice of Democritus, by whose instructions and encouragement, from an eminent porter, he became as eminent a sophist. The reader may see the story in Aulus Gellius, V. 3.—The public was, certainly, not much obliged to Democritus. Protagoras was of more use to mankind when he invented porters' knots^c, than when he invented the σχηματα λεξέως,
and

^a IX. 52. ed. Meib.

^b IX. 54.—See Hermes, as above, about the different species of sentences; and ch. ii.

^c — την καλωμενην ΤΤΑΗΝ, ἐφ' ἧς τα φορτια βαταξουσι, εὑρεν, ὡς φησιν Αριστοτελης. D. Laert. IX. 53.

and undertook to teach, at the price of a hundred minæ^d, the art of Belial - - -

- - - - "to make the worse

"Appear the better reason : " - - -

--τον ἥττω λόγον κρείττω ποιεῖν*.

"If a cobler," says Socrates in the Meno of Plato, "or a taylor, should return the shoes, or "the clothes, he undertook to mend, in a worse "condition than that, in which he received them, "he would soon lose his business, and be starved "for want of work. But it is not so with the "sophists. PROTAGORAS was able to carry on, "for forty years together, without detection, and "with great credit, the trade of spoiling all those "who became his disciples, and sending them "back much worse than he found them^f."

NOTE 166.

P. 161. TO ALL DICTION BELONG, &c. - -

See Diss. I. p. 55. vol. i.—After having discussed three of the constituent parts of Tragedy, the fable, the manners, and the sentiments, Aristotle now comes to the diction (Λεξις), upon which he bestows three chapters. His subject plainly required ^d Above £. 300.—D. Laert. ibid. and Suidas. Aristotle, however, gives a different account of the way in which he was paid, Ethic. Nicom. IX. 1.

* See Rhet. II. 24. p. 581, D.

^f Ed. Serr. tom. ii. p. 91.

required him to speak of the diction of Tragedy^a, not of poetic diction in general; much less, to descend to the grammatical elements of language in general. Yet, of his three chapters on diction, the first is merely grammatical, and such, as even in a rhetorical treatise would appear misplaced; and even the two following chapters relate to poetic language in general, without any thing applicable to the diction of Tragedy in particular—his proper subject—except a single observation, or, rather, hint, at the end of the third chapter^b.

Dacier, who discharged, with as much fidelity as any commentator ever did, the duty of seeing nothing amiss in his author, has zealously defended the propriety of this grammatical chapter: but all he says amounts, I think, to little more than this—that the chapter should be there, because it is there. No man is nice about reasons, when the point to be proved has been determined before he looks for them.

NOTE 167.

P. 161. DISCOURSE OR SPEECH—.

ΛΟΓΟΣ.—Mr. Harris, in the Hermes, p. 19, has rendered the word, sentence. He took that part of the idea, that suited his subject; but, that this is not the whole sense of the word, but only a sense

^a See the conclusion of cap. xxii. Περὶ μὲν ἐν Τραγω-δίας, κ. τ. αλ.

^b See NOTE 209.

sense included in the word, is evident from what is said below, in the definition of λογος, where the entire Iliad is comprehended under that term. Had I here rendered λογος by sentence, I must, to have been consistent in my translation, have there called the Iliad a sentence.

The word λογος here plainly answers—not to sentence, exclusively, nor yet, exclusively, to what Mr. Harris calls “Oration or Discourse,” as composed of several sentences; but, it is a general term, comprehending both these, and applicable, like the Latin word oratio, or the English, speech, to every significant combination of words, whether consisting of a single sentence, or of many; as, indeed, appears from Aristotle’s definition itself. Nay, the word appears not even to have been limited to a complete assertive sentence; for the philosopher, in the treatise περι Ἑρμηνείας, gives the denomination of λογος to these two words—καλος ιππος. He says, ἐν τῷ ΛΟΓΩ, (in hac oratione,) καλος ιππος. It was what he calls a merely significant λογος, as distinguished from an assertive λογος, or proposition, such as, καλος ΕΣΤΙΝ ιππος.

I was unable to find any English word, that would express λογος adequately, and clearly. And it seems somewhat remarkable, that the Greek language, rich and copious as it is, should not afford—at least I am not aware that it does—

any

^a Hermes, p. 324.

any single word perfectly synonymous to our word, sentence. Λογ^α, as I have observed, is too wide; it serves equally to express a single sentence, or a whole speech, or even less than a sentence. It is applied by Aristotle to a combination of two words—a substantive and an adjective, without a verb—and, to the Iliad. Περιοδ^α was only one particular kind, or form, of sentence^b. Κωλον did not necessarily contain a complete sense, or thought, which is essential to our word, sentence^c.

NOTE 168.

P. 162. IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE MOUTH - - .

Τοποις.—Clearly right; nor can I conceive, what should have induced any critic to suspect this reading.—See Dionys. Halicarn. Sect. 14.—his curious and accurate analysis of articulation: and Aristides Quintil. p. 89. cd. Meib.—where, in describing the formation of the letters, these expressions occur:—ἐκ τῶν περὶ τῆς ὀδοντῆς ΤΟΠΩΝ—and, ἐκ μίσε τε φωνητικῆς ΤΟΠΟΥ. See, also, Hermes, III. 2, p. 322.—TONOIS, which had occurred to Mr. Winstanley*, would be mere tautology; for that idea is fully expressed afterwards, by ὀξύτητι καὶ βαρυτητι. Thus, Rhet. III. 1. τοις ΤΟΝΟΙΣ, 'ΟΙΟΝ ὀξεία καὶ βαρεία, καὶ μίση.

^b See Rhet. III. 9. p. 592. ^c Demet. de Eloc. Sect. 2.

* Ed. Ox. 1780, p. 296.

NOTE 169.

P. 162. AS THEIR TONE IS ACUTE, GRAVE, OR INTERMEDIATE.

—Οξύτητι, βαρυτητι, και τῷ μέσῳ.—All the commentators seem agreed, that by τῷ μέσῳ is meant the circumflex. Mr. Foster, in his Essay on Accent, &c. expresses some degree of doubt about this^a; and, I confess, it appears to me to be somewhat more than doubtful. Certainly, the only obvious and proper sense of the word mean, or middle, thus applied to the pitch of sound, is, that which is between ὀξύ and βαρυ; not, that which is compounded of the two, as the circumflex is always represented to be. At least the expression, in this latter sense, would not be very accurate and philosophical. A circumflexed syllable is described to be, a syllable that has both an acute and a grave accent;—ἀμφοτέρως τὰς τασεις, as it is expressed by Dion. Halicarn. Sect. 11. The voice first rises, and then falls, on the same syllable. A man would be thought to speak very strangely, who should describe any object painted half white and half black, by saying, that it was of a colour between black and white.

But, farther, I observe, that in other passages of Aristotle's works, where he speaks of accents, the word μέσος no where occurs. Indeed, he uses neither this, nor any other word, to denote
the

^a P. 22.—See the note.

the circumflex accent. He mentions only ὀξύ, and βαρύ, acute, and grave. See De Soph. Elench. p. 284, C.—288, E.—304, A.—306, A. ed. Duval. In the last of these passages especially, his expression is remarkable: εἰ παρα προσῳδιαν ὀξύειαν, Ἡ ΒΑΡΕΙΑ προσῳδία λυσις· ἢ δὲ παρα βαρείαν, Ἡ ΟΞΕΙΑ. That is—"If the sophism supposes the acute accent, the answer is—it is the grave accent; and vice versâ." Here are no traces of the triple division of accents, given by later writers, into acute, grave, and circumflex. Nay more; he speaks in the same way, even when the very ambiguity in question lies between an acute, and a circumflex, accent; as, ὀ (non,) and ὤ (ubi). See the passage, p. 304, A: where the circumflexed ὤ is expressed by the word βαρυτερον^b.—This, I confess, much increases my doubt with respect to the word μισῶ in the passage before us. For, had that been Aristotle's term for the circumflex accent, as the common explanation supposes, we probably should have found the expression in some of the passages referred to; at least, in that last mentioned.

I cannot, surely, be misunderstood, as meaning to infer, from these passages, that the flexure itself of the voice upon a single syllable, which was afterwards denominated by Grammarians, περισπωμένη, was unknown to Aristotle and the earlier writers.

^b A marginal note in Duval's ed. says—"Semper enim Aristoteles βαρείαν vocat τὴν περισπωμένην."

writers. The thing, undoubtedly, has always existed, and must exist, more or less, in every language. But these passages do, I think, afford a pretty strong presumption, that the circumflex had then no appropriated term^c; and, consequently, that, in this passage, the word μεσον has a different, and its usual and proper, meaning; that, in which it is used continually by the writers on Harmonics^d.

But, farther, it appears to be so used by Aristotile himself, in a similar passage of his Rhetoric. In the beginning of the third book, speaking of oratorical action or delivery, (ὑποκρισις) as far as it relates to the voice, he says, ἐστὶ δὲ αὐτῇ μὲν ἐν τῇ φωνῇ, πῶς αὐτῇ δεῖ χρησθαι πρὸς ἰκαστον παθεῖν· οἶον, ποτε μεγάλη, καὶ ποτε μικρά, καὶ ποτε μέση· καὶ πῶς τοῖς τόνοις, οἶον, ὀξεῖα, καὶ βαρεῖα, καὶ ΜΕΣΗ. Now, even supposing this to relate to accents, it seems, that

^c Mr. Foster, who had undoubtedly examined this matter more thoroughly than I pretend to have done, does not, I think, produce any such clearly appropriated term, from Aristotle, Plato, Aristoxenus, or any other writer of that age. See ch. v. p. 140, &c. of his very learned Essay on Accent and Quantity, &c.

^d See the passage from Euclid, below. Thus too, Bacchius: Τροπὸς τῆς φωνῆς ποτὶς λεγόμεν εἶναι;—Τρεῖς· ὀξύν, ΜΕΣΟΝ, βαρύν. p. 10. ed. Meib.—meaning, by μεσον, the Phrygian mode or key, which was between the Dorian and the Lydian, as D is between C and E.—So Arist. Quintil. τετῶν, ὃ μὲν ὀξεῖα, πρὸς τὰ βαρυτέρα τῆς φωνῆς ἐνέργηματα χρησιμῶν· ὃ δὲ λυδίῳ, πρὸς τὰ ὀξυτέρα· ὃ δὲ φρυγίῳ, πρὸς τὰ ΜΕΣΑ. p. 25.

that μεση, here, should naturally have the same meaning, with respect to ἰξεια, and βαρεια, as it has when applied immediately before to μεγαλη and μικρα, where it plainly means the medium between loud and soft.—But I think the passage clearly does not relate to the mere syllabic accent: for he is there professedly speaking of the accommodation of the voice to the expression of different passions; he must therefore mean such variation of tone or pitch, as depends upon the speaker's choice; not that of the accentual acuteness and gravity; for this is always spoken of as a fixed and invariable thing*. Aristotle therefore means, I believe, exactly what Cicero has expressed in the following words; and, from the similitude of the expression, it seems probable, that he had this very passage of Aristotle before him, or in his memory.—“Nam voces, ut chordæ, sunt intentæ, quæ ad quemque tactum respondeant, acuta, gravis; cita, tarda; magna, parva; quas tamen inter omnes est sua quoque in genere mediocris.”—That is, as it seems rightly explained by Dr. Pearce, every one of these differences of voice, high and low, loud and soft, &c. has its medium—μεσση†. To this passage of Cicero, I shall add one from Quintilian to the same purpose, and which affords a still clearer commentary upon that in the Rhetoric of Aristotle.

* See Mr. Foster's Essay, p. 23, 24, 25.

† Cic. de Or. III. 57. p. 417, ed Pearce.

tote. — “*Utendi voce multiplex ratio. Nam “ præter illam differentiam quæ est tripartita, “ acuta, gravis, flexa, — tum intentis, tum re“ missis — tum elatis, tum inferioribus modis, opus “ est, — spatiis quoque lentioribus aut citatioribus.
“ Sed iis ipsis MEDIA interjacent multa.*” If the reader compares this with the passage of Aristotle, he will see how exactly it answers to the Greek. Here are three differences of voice corresponding plainly to the three mentioned by Aristotle. The difference of intentis and remissis (loud and soft) expresses his μεγαλη και μικρη; that of, elatis, et inferioribus modis, (acuter, or graver, tones or pitches,) his ὀξεια και βαρεια; and that of spatiis lentioribus, &c. (quicker or slower times) his ρυθμοις τισι, &c. And, that Quintilian did not understand, by ὀξεια and βαρεια, the acute and grave syllabic accent, is clear from his expressly saying, that there are those three differences besides that of the different accents — “præter illam differentiam,” &c. — Lastly, the “media interjacent multa,” plainly alludes to the μεση of Aristotle.

The following passage, from the clear and accurate musical treatise of Euclid, will serve to illustrate, at the same time, both the terms of Aristotle, τονοις^b and μεση. Enumerating the different acceptations

^a II. 3.

^b Whenever Aristotle clearly speaks of accents, he always, as far as I have observed, uses the word προσῳδία,
not

acceptations of the word τον, one of which is τασις, tension or pitch, his instance of that sense of the word, is, ὁ δὲ, ὡς τασις, τον λεγεται, καθ' ὃ φαιεν ὀξύτονειν τινα, ἢ βαρυτόνειν, ἢ μεσση τῷ τῆς φωνῆς τον κεχρησθαι: i. e. a *middling pitch of voice*¹.

On the whole, then, I see no reason why we should not understand the word μεσση to be used in the same sense in the passage which is the subject of this note. For though, indeed, Aristotle is there speaking of single letters, and therefore can only mean syllabic accents or tones, yet it is plain, that these accents must have admitted of the distinction of high, low, and intermediate, even in single words, when of more than two syllables²; much more, in whole sentences or periods, where what Mr. Foster calls the oratorical accent, (if, indeed, it be compatible with a fixed syllabic accentuation of single words, of which I profess myself not yet convinced,) must necessarily not τον. See the passages above referred to, in the treatise De Soph. Elench. And, in this work, cap. xxv.

¹ P. 20, ed. Meib.

² Let any man pronounce a word of many syllables—μεγαλοπρεπείατα, for example—having one acute syllable, as D. Halic. says, among many grave—ἐν πολλὰς βαρεῖαις. Sect. 11. He will hear plainly, if he has any ear, that the acute syllable is only the acutest; and that the grave syllables are of different degrees of elevation, and some of them of course, μεσση—intermediate, between the most acute and the most grave.

sarily have varied the tone or pitch of the same nominal syllabic accent, from word to word.

But whatever sense of the word μῆτος we adopt, there is a difficulty, in this passage, which I must leave as I find it. The mention of tone or pitch of voice here, seems to me to be strangely misplaced. Accent, or tone, belongs to syllables, not to letters, of which Aristotle is here speaking. The vowels, indeed, may be acute or grave; but as syllables making a part of words, not as letters, separately considered, as they here are.—Besides; the other differences mentioned are fixed, essential differences. Of these letters, he says, some are formed in this manner, and others, in that: some are aspirated, and others smooth—some long, others short. But, can it be said, with any propriety, that some are acute, and others grave? Are there vowels that are always acute, as there are vowels that are always long?—This seems not more accurate, than it would be to conclude an enumeration of the differences of words, by adding that some are said, and some are sung:—or rather, it seems just the same, as if a man, describing the different sorts of bricks that are made, should conclude with telling us, that some are put at the top of a wall, some at bottom, and some in the middle.

NOTE 170.

P. 163. A CONJUNCTION IS A SOUND, &c. ---

The whole of this first definition of the conjunction appears to me to be corrupt beyond all hope of restoration from conjecture. Mr. Harris plainly passes it over as inexplicable, and takes the second definition only^a. I may well, therefore, be excused for not attempting to translate, what I confess myself totally unable to comprehend. I do, indeed, understand very well, that a conjunction, “neither hinders nor constitutes—“neither gives nor takes away—the meaning of “the sentence in which it stands.” But how this can be regarded as a definition of a conjunction, I do not understand. To define a thing only by what it does not do, (for it is here given as a separate and complete definition,) is hardly reconcilable with Aristotle’s logical accuracy^b. Dacier, in his translation, has obviated this objection, by uniting the two definitions; but without any authority from the text.

I must, again, confess, that what follows, about the situation of the conjunction in different parts of a sentence, has not been made intelligible to me,

^a Hermes, II. 2. note (a).

^b See Topic. lib. vi. cap. 6. Sect. 5.—where he represents a definition as vitious, εαν ἀποφασί διαφῇ το γένος—i. e. if the specific difference be expressed by a negation. He excepts the definition of mere privations, (as blindness,) which can be defined no otherwise. Sect. 7.

me, by any explication I have seen; particularly, the expression, καθ' αὐτον, which M. Batteux, after Castelvetro, renders, "by its nature:"—"à moins que par elle-même elle ne soit faite pour être au commencement." But this sense cannot be admitted; nor, I think, any other, than—"by itself—alone." This Mr. Winstanley explains by ἀνευ ἀνταποδοσεως: but I cannot see how his translation—"modo eas conjunctiones excipias quæ in initio periodi, καθ' αὐτας,—ritè stare non possunt," &c. —accords with Aristotle's words—ἢν μὴ ἀρμοττῇ ἐν ἀρχῇ λογῆ τιθῆναι καθ' αὐτον—i. e. "unless they are such as should be placed in the beginning, by themselves."—To make these words correspond to Mr. Winstanley's version, another negative seems wanting.

NOTE 171.

P. 163. AN ARTICLE ----- MARKS THE BEGINNING, OR THE END OF A SENTENCE.

The commentators all tell us, that this means the prepositive, and the subjunctive article; but none of them have clearly and fairly shewn us, how the one, because it is placed before a word, marks the beginning of a sentence or discourse, (ΛΟΓΟΥ ἀρχὴν;) or, how the other marks the end of it, because it follows the word to which it belongs. In the very sentence before us, for example, Ἀθροὺν δὲ ἐστὶ φωνὴ ἀσημ. Ἡ λογὴ ἀρχὴν ἢ τελ., ἢ διορισμὸν, δηλοῖ—in what sense does the subjunctive subjunctive article, ἢ, mark the end of the sentence—τελ⊙ *λογ*η? “L'article subjonctif,” says Dacier, “est celui qui marque la fin du discours: ‘c'est-à-dire, qu'il suit la chose qu'il designe, ‘comme, qui, lequel.”—It is easy to explain things in this manner.

For my part, I see not what is to be made of this, unless we may understand Aristotle to mean only that power of the article, by which, in the Greek language, it distinguishes the subject from the predicate, in certain propositions, and determines the order of construction. See Hermes, II. 1. p. 230.—But, then, this is no other than a species of διορισμ⊙, and is, indeed, given by Mr. Harris as one example of the definitive or ascertaining power of the article.

The second definition of the article, (—φων ἀσημ⊙ ———— to συντιθεσθαι) I have omitted. It is the first definition of the conjunction repeated verbatim. It may, indeed, be true of both; but if so, it must inevitably follow, I think, either that the two things must be the same, or, that the words are not truly a definition of either. Yet this passes smoothly with all the commentators I have seen, except Madius and Piccolomini.

NOTE 172.

P. 163. FOR EVEN IN DOUBLE WORDS, &c.

Compare cap. ii. and iv. of Aristotle's treatise, Περὶ Ἑρμηνείας. This is rendered by Piccolomini,
 2 with

with his usual accuracy, "perochè nei nomi
"doppij [ò ver composti] non usiamo le parti
"d'essi, secondo che, da per se prese, hanno signi-
"ficazione: come, (per essemplio) in questo nome
"Theodoro, quella parte (doro) non é signifi-
"cantè." p. 286.

NOTE 173.

P. 163. INDICATION OF TIME IS NOT INCLUDED, &c.—

Ὅν ΠΡΟΞΗΜΑΙΝΕΙ το ποτε. See Hermes, I. 6. note (d), p. 96. Aristotle has given a fuller definition of the verb, in the book περὶ Ἑρμ. cap. iii.

NOTE 174.

P. 164. OTHERS RELATE TO ACTION OR PRONUNCIATION - - -.

Ἡ δὲ, κατὰ τὰ ὑποκριτικά—sc. σχήματα: meaning the σχήματα λέξεως mentioned just before, cap. xix. with which these modes plainly coincide; for the πτώσεις ῥηματων here mentioned are no other than the Ἑγκλίσεις, modes, or moods, of the Grammarians.—[See Hermes, I. 8. p. 144, and particularly the notes there.] Καὶ κατὰ ποίας ἐγκλίσεις, αἷς δὲ τινες ΠΤΩΣΕΙΣ ΡΗΜΑΤΙΚΑΣ καλεῖσι. Dion. Hal. de Struct. &c. Sect. 6.—But he speaks of the term as applied only to the modes; for the tenses, διαφοραὶ χρόνων, are immediately after mentioned by him, as not included in that term. But Aristotle,

Aristotle, in the περι ἑρμην. expressly mentions the tenses also, as πτώσεις ῥημάτων. See cap. iii. Sect. 5.

NOTE 175.

P. 164-5. FOR ALL DISCOURSE IS NOT COMPOSED OF VERBS AND NOUNS:—THE DEFINITION OF MAN, FOR INSTANCE—.

—'Ου γὰρ ἅπας λόγος ἐκ ῥημάτων καὶ ὀνομάτων συγκρίνεται· οἷον, ὁ τε ἄνθρωπος ὁρισμός· ἀλλ' ἰνδεχεται ἄνευ ῥημάτων εἶναι λόγον. This is very ambiguously expressed. We are left to make out, as well as we can, whether the "definition of man," is referred to as an instance of a sentence without a verb, or of a sentence with both noun and verb.—The construction seems, indeed, to lead more naturally to the latter interpretation. But the other, I think, is more to Aristotle's purpose, (for, an example of a sentence with both noun and verb, it was hardly necessary to produce,) and is confirmed by the following passage in his book περι Ἑρμηνείας:

Αναγκὴ δὲ πάντα λόγον ἀποφαντικόν (every assertive sentence or speech) ἐκ ῥημάτων εἶναι, ἢ ἐκ πτώσεως ῥημάτων· καὶ γὰρ ὁ τε ἄνθρωπος λόγος (i.e. ὁρισμός, definition; for so λόγος is continually used by Aristotle,) εἰαν μὴ το, εἰσιν, ἢ, εἶσθαι, ἢ τι τοιοῦτον ΠΡΟΣΤΕΘΗ, ἔπω λόγος ἀποφαντικός*. The definition itself (the same, probably, to which he alludes alludes in the passage before us,) follows; it is, ζων πιζον διπεν^b. Now these three words alone constitute the definition, and it is of this only that Aristotle here speaks. In the full, assertive sentence, Ανθρωπος ἐστὶ ζων πιζον διπεν, the two first words are no part of the definition itself, but, as Victorinus has well observed, only indicate the thing defined. And accordingly, the philosopher, we see, in the above quotation, considers the verb as superadded to the definition.

* P. 38, C.

However, this sense would be so much more clearly expressed, if the words—διον, ὃ τε ἀνθρώπου ὄρισμ^c—followed, instead of preceding, the words ἀλλ' ἰνδεχεται ἀνευ ῥημάτων εἶναι λογόν, that I should hardly doubt of their being misplaced, if this sort of embarrassment were less frequent than it is in Aristotle's writings.

This whole passage receives much illustration from that part of the treatise περὶ ἔρμ. to which I have referred. A sentence without a verb is what Aristotle calls a significant sentence, but not an assertive sentence, or proposition; i. e. that affirms or denies something, and of which it may be predicated, that it is true, or false^c. Such only, in that logical work, it was to his purpose to consider; the other, the merely significant sentence, ^b The same definition occurs in other parts of his works; vol. i. p. 167, B.—237, D.—vol. ii. 920, 921.

^c See cap. iv. sect. 4 and 5. p. 38.

sentence^d, he dismisses, as belonging rather to rhetoric and POETRY. 'Οι μὲν ἔν' ἄλλοις [λογοῖς], ἀφεισθώσαν' ῥητορικῆς γὰρ, ἢ ΠΟΙΗΤΙΚΗΣ, οἰκισιοτέρα ἢ σκεψίς. ὁ δὲ ἀποφαντικῶς της νυν θεωρίας^e.

NOTE 176.

P. 165. SIGNIFICANT, AS THE WORD CLEON IS, &c. - - -

It has been observed, that the sense seemed to require an instance of a sentence with only one significant word ; at least, not composed of both verb and noun, as βαδίζει Κλειων is. But I rather believe, that Aristotle did not intend this as an instance of such a sentence, but merely as an explanation of the σημαίνει, and καθ' αὐτα σημαίνει τι, that precede. "It is not," says he, "essential to what I call λογῶς, oratio, that it should contain both a noun and a verb, i. e. that it should be a complete proposition : but some significant part it must have ; significant, I mean, as a whole word, separately taken, as Cleon is, for example, in the sentence, Cleon walks ; not as making a part of a word, like δωρον in the compound name Θεiodωρον, which has, indeed, a meaning, but not καθ' αὐτε — κεχωρισμενον — by itself—as a word in the sentence."

That

^d He instances in precatory sentences or speeches ; — οὐκ, ἢ εὐχῇ, λογῶς μὲν, ἀλλ' ἔτε ἀληθῆς, ἔτε ψευδῆς. Ibid.

^e Ibid.

That this is the meaning, seems probable from the chapter in which Λογ^{ος} is defined in the book περι Ερμηνείας. For there, as soon as he has given the definition, (Λογ^{ος} δὲ ἐστὶ φωνὴ σημαντικὴ - - ἥς τῶν μερῶν ΤΙ σημαντικὸν ἐστὶ ΚΕΧΩΡΙΣΜΕΝΟΝ,) he immediately proceeds to explain the expressions; declaring what sort of significant part he means. "Significant," he says, "as the word ἀνθρωπ^{ος} is; that is, κεχωρισμένον, by itself; not as, ἀνθρωπ^{ος} ἐστὶ, or ἄν ἐστὶ, which signify as assertive sentences, nor yet, as a syllable, or part of a simple word, (like ὄ in μου,) or, even as a word making part of a compound word*."

Now, what Aristotle there expresses fully, he meant, I think, to say, more briefly, in the words, ΜΕΡΟΣ μὲντοι αἰεὶ ΤΙ σημαίνειν ἔχει· οἷον ἐν τῷ, Βαδίζει Κλεων, ὁ Κλεων. [sc. σημαίνει.]

See Hermes, I. 2. p. 21, note (d).

NOTE 177.

P. 165. A DISCOURSE MAY BE ONE, IN TWO SENSES, &c.

Compare, περι Ερμην. cap. v. p. 38. — Analyt. Post. lib. ii. cap. 10. p. 169, E. — Metaphys. VII. 4. p. 910, D. (where he uses τῷ συνεχεῖ, as equivalent to συνεσφυ) and VIII. 6. p. 931, C.

* Cap. iv. p. 38.

NOTE 178.

P. 165. LIKE MANY OF THOSE USED BY THE MEGALİOTÆ ---.

I have read, in some ludicrous book, of a country that was "lost by the ignorance of geographers." This seems to have been the case of these Megaliotæ, if such a people ever existed. They are nowhere recorded. — Dacier reads, μειγαριζοντων — "ceux qui disent de grandes choses : and cites Hesychius — Μειγαριζοντις — μειγαλα λεγοντις. But this is too distant from the present reading, Μεγαλιωτων. Mr. Winstanley's conjecture — μειγαλειων, ως^a, is somewhat nearer, and, in other respects, preferable : but it is, I think, a strong presumption against its truth, that Aristotle constantly uses οιον, when he gives an instance ; never, as far as I recollect, ως.

I have sometimes thought it not very improbable, that the passage might originally have stood thus : των μειγαλα ΔιωΚΟΝτων : i. e. of those who affect, aim at, are fond of, grandeur and pomp of expression ; who love hard words, as we say. Nothing more common than this sense of διωκειν. They who are versed in emendatory criticism, and the theory of transcriptive blunders, know it to have been one source of corruption in antient manuscripts, that the transcribers, when they found vacuities

^a Ed. Ox. 1780, p. 298.

vacuities and lacunæ which they could not fill up, rather than reduce the price of their copy by visible imperfection, often chose to write the passage as if there had been no such chasms; especially when that could be done, as in this case, with some passable appearance of a meaning^b. And thus, here, if we suppose the letters I have distinguished by capitals to have been destroyed, or rendered illegible, in the original MS, ὑπο νοτίας καὶ σήτων^c, they would leave exactly the letters we now have—μῆγαλιωτων.

If a commentator, harassed by obscurity and perplexity, can now and then relieve his labour by treating a passage of desperate corruption as a riddle, and can amuse himself by guessing the meaning, when he cannot inform his readers by discovering it, who will envy him this harmless privilege? I have here hazarded my guess with others; but I give it for what it is. None of us, I believe, have yet deprived our successors of the same amusement. The riddle, probably, still remains, and will remain, till the arrival of those "codices expectandi" of which the critics talk so much; those precious manuscripts, that are always to be waited for, and never to be expected.

^b See Le Clerc's Ars Critica, P. III. S. I. C. XVI. parag. 7.

^c See the passage from Strabo, given in the preface.

NOTE 179.

P. 165. BY COMMON WORDS, I MEAN, &c. --

Κυρίων.—I have translated this, common, not proper, because this last term would convey a wrong idea; for κυρίων here is plainly opposed, not to μεταφορά only, but to all the other species of words just enumerated: not to what is figurative only, as the Latin proprium is, but to whatever is unusual. This appears indeed from the definition—"a word that every body uses." What we call proper words are only one sort of the κυρία ὀνόματα of Aristotle. The expression must even include all those words, which, though originally metaphorical, are, as Mr. Harris says, "so naturalized" by common use, "that ceasing to be metaphors, they are become, (as it were,) the proper words^a." That is, as an excellent writer has expressed it, "they have nothing of the effect of metaphor upon the hearer. On the contrary, like proper terms, they suggest directly to his mind, without the intervention of any image, the ideas which the speaker proposed to convey by them^b."

The same clear opposition of κυρίων to whatever is uncommon in speech appears throughout the next chapter,

^a Phil. Inq. p. 198. He gives for instances—the foot of a mountain—the bed of a river. He, also, has rendered κυρίων by common, p. 191, note.

^b Philos. of Rhet. vol. ii. p. 185, 186. See Demet. Περὶ Εἰςσημίας, Sect. 88.

chapter, where γλωττα, μεταφορα, &c. are all said to be ΠΑΡΑ τὸ κυριον, and included under one common term of ξενικα.—See also Rhet. III. 2. p. 585, A.

NOTE 180.

P. 166. SO THAT THE SAME WORD MAY BE BOTH COMMON AND FOREIGN, &c.

If κυριον here meant only native, in opposition to foreign, (γλωττα) as some commentators have supposed ^a, it would be arrant trifling to observe, that the same word might be, at the same time, γλωττα and κυριον, i. e. foreign and native, to different nations. For it could not possibly be otherwise; as Robortelli observes, and calls the observation, which he explains as Aristotle's, "magnoperè adnotandum, et PULCHRUM SCITU." p. 246. Dacier follows him: "Cela ne sçauroit être autrement, le même mot qui est étranger pour celui qui l'emprunte, ne peut qu'être propre pour celui qui le prête."—But, if it must be so, why does Aristotle say it may be so?—εἰς δυνατόν?—The truth is, that a foreign word is not necessarily a common word, in his sense of κυριον, among the people to whom it is native; it may, or may not, be so; it cannot, indeed, be to them γλωττα, but it may be a metaphorical word, or a word of any of the other species enumerated as ΠΑΡΑ τὸ κυριον ^b.—Aristotle seems to have added
this

^a Robortelli, and Castelvetro after him. ^b Cap. xxii.

this observation on purpose to prevent the very mistake which these expositors have made: to prevent κυριον from being taken merely as the opposite to γλωττα.

NOTE 181.

P. 166. A THOUSAND IS A CERTAIN DEFINITE MANY. - - -

Το γὰρ μυρίον, πολὺ ἴστί.—Here, I may venture, I believe, for once, to adopt the positive tone of emendatory criticism. Legendum omnino, πολὺ ΤΙ ἴστί. The sense, indeed, no one can mistake: but the text, as it stands, does not express that sense. It says only, “for a thousand is many, which he “now uses instead of many.” There can be no doubt, that Aristotle added ΤΙ here, as in all the other instances, ἱκαναὶ ΤΙ—ἀφελαν ΤΙ. But, to put the matter beyond all doubt, he afterwards, speaking of the same sort of metaphor, says, το γὰρ Παντες ἀντι τῶ πολλοι, κατὰ μεταφοραν, εἰρηται· το γὰρ Παν, ΠΟΛΥ ΤΙ. Cap. xxv.—I am surprised that so very obvious an error should have escaped the notice of all the commentators I am acquainted with.

NOTE 182.

P. 167. FOR HERE, THE POET USES ταμην - - - INSTEAD OF ἀρυσαι, &c.

Here a commentator is not perplexed by a little glimmering of light, that promises to shew him 7 something,

something, and shews him nothing; but is relieved at once from all trouble by a total and comfortable obscurity. The quotations are so short, and, in all probability, so incorrect, that it seems impossible to apply to them Aristotle's 'definition of this metaphor, or to see how, where the Poet has used ταμειν, ἀρυσαι would have been the proper word, and vice versa. Yet the commentators slide over this difficulty. Victorius, however, has noticed it, and, giving up the quotations as inexplicable and incorrigible, proposes a more intelligible example from the Rhetoric, III. 2.—το φαναι, τον μιν πτωχευοντα, ευχεσθαι· τον δε ευχομενον, πτωχευειν· οτι αμφοι αιτησις. Dacier has entirely omitted the passage, and substituted another from the Rhet. III. II. p. 597, B.—Not, however, that he did not understand the passage; it was an inviolable rule with him always to understand his author: but only, it seems, because the example could not conveniently be expressed in French—" il ne peut être traduit " en nôtre langue."

Castelvetro gives a very pleasant illustration. He does not pretend to see how ταμειν and ἀρυσαι are put for each other in the Greek examples: but he says, that, to draw, and to cut off, might be thus metaphorically put for each other; if, for example, we should say, "Take this pruning-hook, " and draw some branches from the olive-tree: " or, Take this pail, and cut off some water from
" the

"the fountain*."—Undoubtedly any man may speak in this way, who chuses it.

NOTE 183.

P. 167. IN THE WAY OF ANALOGY, WHEN, OF FOUR TERMS, &c.

The difficulty here is, to distinguish clearly this, which Aristotle calls the analogical or proportional metaphor, from the metaphor which precedes it—that from species to species: for as to the two first sorts, that from genus to species, and vice versâ, they plainly belong, as has been observed, to the trope since denominated Synecdoche; the word metaphora being clearly used by Aristotle in its most general sense, including all the tropes—all the ways in which a word is transferred to a meaning different from its proper meaning. See Cic. Or. cap. xxvii. Of the four species of metaphoras here mentioned, only the two last seem to answer to our METAPHOR—the metaphor founded on some resemblance between the thing from which, and that to which, the term is transferred.

The difference between these two sorts of metaphors, as far as I am able to comprehend it, appears to me to be only this. Each of them is founded on some resemblance; but in the first, the resemblance perceived is between the two things

* "Prendi quella falce, e attigni de'rami dell' ulivo;
"o vero, Prendi quella secchia, e taglia dell' acqua del
"fonte." p. 453.

things themselves; in the other, between the relations which they, respectively, bear to two other things *. Those are metaphors κατ' εἶδους ἐπὶ εἶδους, where the likeness is perceived, as Aristotle elsewhere expresses it, “by the genus,” that is, where the common quality, which constitutes the likeness, immediately occurs, and it is, therefore, sufficient simply to substitute the one word for the other. Those are metaphors κατ' ἀναλογίαν, where the resemblance is not thus perceived by the common quality, but by the common relation, of the two things; where, therefore, that relation must be pointed out, more or less expressly. Thus, to take Aristotle's own examples, when old age, or rather, an old man, is called “stubble,” the resemblance is sufficiently perceived, by a comparison of the things themselves; in Aristotle's language, we perceive it, “by the genus:—ἴταν γὰρ εἶπη [Ὁμηρ.] τὸ γῆρας ΚΑΛΑΜΗΝ, ἔποιησε μαθησὶν καὶ γῶσιν διὰ τὴν γένεσιν” ΑΜΦΩ γὰρ ΑΠΗΝΘΗΚΟΤΑ ^b. But when old age is called “evening,” what strikes us is the resemblance with respect to two other things, life, and day; a resemblance of relation.

In

* ἡ γὰρ ΑΝΑΛΟΓΙΑ ἰσότης ἐστὶ λόγου, ΚΑΙ ΕΝ ΤΕΤΤΑΡ-ΣΙΝ ΕΛΑΧΙΣΤΟΙΣ. i. e. “Analogy, or proportion, is “equality of ratio, or relation, and requires four terms at “least.” Ethic. Nicom. V. 3.

^b Rhet. III. 10. p. 593. The passage of Homer alluded to is in Od. E. 214, 215. See Harris's Philol. Inq. p. 191. For the force of the expression, ἔποιησε μαθησιν, see NOTE 22. in vol. i.

In this idea of the analogical metaphor I have the concurrence of Piccolomini. "La metafora di proportione è quella, che sopra la somiglianza dei rispetti che hanno l'une cose con l'altre, sarà fondata;" &c. See his annotations, p. 305, and his clear and useful, though prolix, Parafrase della Retor. d'Arist. tom. iii. p. 52, &c. In the rest of his explanation he does not satisfy me.

NOTE 184.

P. 167. AND, SOMETIMES, THE PROPER TERM IS ALSO INTRODUCED, BESIDES ITS RELATIVE TERM.

—Καὶ ἐνίοτε προστιθεασιν αὐτῷ ἢ λέγει πρὸς ὁ ἴσιν.—
No words can well be more obscure and perplexing. Taking them as they are, they seem to admit, fairly, of only one sense—that which Victorius gives them. "Et quandoque apponunt, pro quo "dicit ad quod est." That is, as he explains this literal and obscure version, they add, "ad quod "refertur illud nomen quod omittunt, et pro quo "aliud vocabulum usurpant." Προστιθεασιν, πρὸς ὁ ἴσιν [sc. τῷ] αὐτῷ ἢ λέγει: i. e. they add, to the substituted word (cup), the word to which the proper word (shield) relates; i. e. Mars. They not only name cup, instead of shield, but call it the cup of Mars.

My objection to this sense of the passage is, that it seems to confound the analogical metaphor with that from species to species, in which one word word is simply put in the room of the other, as καλαμη is used in the passage of Homer, referred to by Aristotle as an example of that sort of metaphor*:

ΑΛΛ' ἐμπης καλαμην γε σ' οἶμαι εἰσορουντα

Γινωσκειν. - - - - - Od. ε. 214.

For if, "sometimes," ἔνιοι, this addition is made, it is implied, that not only sometimes, but generally, and for the most part, the analogical metaphor is used in the same manner as that ἀπ' εἰδης &c. and cup is merely called shield, and old age, evening. But, if I understand the matter rightly, it is essential to this kind of metaphor to express two terms, at least, of the four which constitute the analogy; i. e. to express with the metaphorical word, either the thing to which the proper word belongs, (as, evening of life,) or, as Aristotle presently after says, a negative epithet. See NOTE 189.

And the philosopher himself seems to have said this, (for I confess the passage is not perfectly clear,) in the following words: ΑΙΕΙ γὰρ ΕΚ ΔΥΟΙΝ λεγονται [sc. αἱ εἰκονες, comparisons], ΩΣΠΕΡ Ἡ ΑΝΑΛΟΓΟΝ ΜΕΤΑΦΟΡΑ· οἶον, ἡ ἀσπὶς, φερειν, ἐστὶ ΦΙΑΛΗ ΑΡΕΟΣ, καὶ, τοξον, ΦΟΡΜΙΓΞ ΑΧΟΡΔΟΣ·

ἔτι

* He does not, indeed, expressly call it, ἀπ' εἰδης ἐπιειδῶς; but that it is so, seems sufficiently clear from his expressions, ἐποίησε μάθησιν διὰ τὴν ΓΕΝΟΤΣ—and, ΑΜΦΩ γὰρ ἀπληθυστα, which answers to ἀμφω γὰρ ἀφελειν τι ἐστὶ, here.

ἔτω μὲν ὅν λεγουσιν, ΟΥΧ' ἈΠΛΟΤΝ· το δ' εἶπειν το τοξον "φορμιγγα," ἢ την ἀσπίδα "φιαλην," ἈΠΛΟΤΝ^b.
Thus "capitis nives," for gray hairs; evening of life; morning of the year; eye of day; and, among many instances in the Rhetoric, ἡμῶς ῥοπαλον— λημῆ τε Πειραιεως—ὁδὸς^c των λογων, &c.^d.—The fact, indeed, seems to be, that this analogical metaphor is only a way of stating metaphors founded on resemblance*, when that resemblance, depending wholly, or chiefly, on relation, would not be obvious, and the metaphor, consequently, would be harsh and obscure, unless the relation were, by some means or other, pointed out.—Victorius himself allows, that, in Aristotle's own examples, the mere substitution of cup for shield, and of evening for old age, would be "nimis durum."

I think,

^b Rhet. III. 11. p. 596, E. ^c Quintil. VIII. 6.

^d Rhet. III. 10.—Instances abound in Homer:— ἡνιοχὸς τοῦ—ἔλας ἀρχῆς—πομπὰ λαῶν—σπερμα πυρὸς— a seed of fire, for a spark. (Od. E. 490.) &c.—See the Life of Homer, commonly attributed to Dion. Halic. and given in vol. v. of the ed. of Homer by Ernestus, p. 162.

* It seems, that any instance of the metaphora à specie &c. may be stated analogically: thus, "old age, we "may say, is to man, what stubble is to corn," &c. And, on the other hand, converting an analogical metaphor into a metaphor from species to species, we may say, evening and old age are, both of them, ends of certain por- tions of time.—It was, perhaps, the vicinity of these two species of metaphor, and their convertibility, that induced later writers to drop the distinction, though they made many other distinctions which Aristotle did not.

I think, then, that Aristotle meant to say, and, in some way or other, had said, "And sometimes," (ἰσως), now and then, for the sake of clearness, "they add the proper word, (the word, αἰδ'—for which, the metaphorical word is put,) to, "or besides, the προς ὃ ἐστ—i. e. that to which the "proper word relates." They not only call the shield, the cup of Mars, but they mention shield also, and say, the shield is the cup of Mars: or, taking the other instance, old age is the evening of life°. Thus all will follow naturally: ΚΑΙ ἔτι—And, sometimes, they add the proper term, &c. Ἐποὶς δὲ, ἐκ ἑστὶν ὄνομα—ἀναλογον.—But, in some analogical metaphors, there is no proper term; in that case, therefore, the metaphor cannot be so used: yet it may be used in the first, and most common way, as well as if such proper term subsisted; it is still an analogical metaphor, and may be used as such:—ἔδεν ἥττον, ὁμοίως [i. e. ἀναλογως, as Castelvetro rightly explains it,] λεχθῆσεται. Thus, in the metaphor exemplified, of sowing, applied to the sun, we may say the sun sows his rays, though we cannot assign any proper term, for which sows is put—any word appropriated to the dispersion of light from the sun, as, to sow, is appropriated to the dispersion of seed.—Such appears

* Thus Homer uses the analogical metaphor in the following line:

‘Οὐδ’ εἰς ἑστμα, τα τε πτερά νηυσὶ πελοῦνται. Od. A. 124.
“Oars, which are the wings of ships.”

appears to me to be the connection of this passage.

It will, undoubtedly, be objected, that the sense I would give the words προσθιασι &c. cannot be fairly obtained from them as they now stand: and I confess it cannot; unless we might be allowed to render the words thus, taking προς as a repetition of the preposition in προστιθεσιν: "they add the word, for which they use, or say, the metaphorical word, (ἀνθ' ἃ ΛΕΓΕΙ,) το ὃ ΕΣΤΙ—to what it is—to the word which is used: they add the word that should be to the word that is." But this appears to me so harsh and improbable a construction, that I would rather suppose the passage to be defective. Perhaps it might originally be thus:—Και ἵνατε προστιθ. ἀνθ' ἃ λεγει, ΠΑΡΑ [το] προς ὃ ἐστὶ—i.e. besides adding the thing to which the proper term relates^f. But there seems to be still another fault in the passage. I cannot reconcile the plural προστιθεσιν, with the singular, λεγει. Goulston renders "apponit;" and I am surprised that no MS. should exhibit προστιθησιν. That λεγει is right, is highly probable, from the singular verb ἔρει, repeatedly used here, and the εἰποί, afterwards: εἰ τὴν ἄσπινδα Εἰποί—κ. τ. ἀλλ.

^f The transcribers, seeing two prepositions, παρα προς, unusually put together, and not understanding the relative sense of προς ὃ, might reject the first as redundant.

NOTE 185.

P. 167. THE SHIELD, THE CUP OF MARS, &c.

Φιάλην Ἀρεως.—The φιάλη seems to have been a large, expanded, (ἐκπεταλον,) kind of vessel, like a ewer. See Il. ψ. 270, and the notes. Hesych. v. Ἀμφιθετός.—It had also, sometimes, an ὀμφαλος, or umbo. See Athen. p. 501. It had probably, therefore, some resemblance to a shield, which makes the metaphor appear less strange; as Piccolomini has remarked, p. 306: who also observes, very well, that this kind of metaphor is then most clear and perfect, when the resemblance of relation is aided by some degree of resemblance between the things themselves: and that here, for example, if lance were used instead of shield, the metaphor would be spoiled, though the common relation would still subsist.

This seems to have been a favourite instance of this sort of metaphor; for it occurs several times in the Rhetoric. See III. 4. p. 588, and 11. p. 596, E. In the former of these passages Aristotle says, that an analogical metaphor ought to admit of inversion: thus, says he, if we may call the cup the shield of Bacchus, we may, with equal propriety, call the shield the cup of Mars. But Demetrius observes, alluding to that passage of the Rhetoric, that this is not the case of every such metaphor: ἐπεὶ τὴν ὑπάρειαν μὲν τῆς ἰδέας, ποῶτα

ἔξῃ εἶπεν τὸν ποιητὴν², τὸν δὲ τὴ ἀνθρώπου ποδᾶ, ἐκεῖ ὑπὸρειαν εἶπεν. Sect. 79.

NOTE 186.

P. 167. OR AS EMPEDOCLES HAS EXPRESSED IT, LIFE'S SETTING SUN.

Δυσμας βίη.—Victorius has pointed out this expression in Plato's sixth book De Legibus, where the Athenian says, ἡμεῖς δ' ἐν δυσμαῖς τε βίη, οἱ δὲ, ὡς πρὸς ἡμᾶς, νεοί²: probably alluding, in Plato's usual manner, to the very passage of Empedocles. See also Ælian, Var. Hist. II. 34.—ἐπὶ δυσμαῖς ἴσμεν: where, as the metaphor was sufficiently explained by the subject of the conversation, the word βίη is not added. Victorius remarks, also, the βίη ΔΥΝΤΟΣ αὐγαῖς of Æschylus, Agamem. v. 1132. The rest of that passage is very obscure^b; but this expression seems, clearly enough, to describe the dying eye, that opens, for the last time, upon the light:—

Βλεψαί πρὸς ΑΥΓΑΣ βελεται τὰς ἡλίου,
Ὡς ἐποτ' αὐθις, ἀλλὰ νυν πανυσατον,
Ακτινα, κυκλονθ', ἡλίου προσοψεται.

Eurip. Alcest. 203.

or,

² Il. B. 824.

² Ed. Serr. tom. ii. p. 770.

^b I am inclined to read, and point the passage thus:

- - - - - ἀτε καὶ δορί πτωσίΜΟΤΕ

Ξυκαυνται, βίη δυντ' αὐγαῖς.

i.e. "such as destroys, dispatches (as we say,) those who "fall by the spear, in the last gleams of setting life."

or, in the finest picture of the kind, I think, that Poetry affords,

- - - - - oculisque errantibus, alto
Quæsitv cœlo lucem, ingemuitque repertâ.

Æn. iv. 691.

—The poetical reader, I believe, will pardon me, if I wander so much farther from my subject, as to take occasion, from these beautiful passages, to point out three lines of Petrarch, which shew, that his powers were not confined to the expression of amorous tenderness, but were capable of rising, on occasion, to the true sublime. In the sonnet, “Se lamentar augelli,” &c*. written after the death of Laura, he imagines himself to hear her voice, in his solitude, consoling him for his loss, in these lines :

Di me non pianger tu ; ch’ i miei dî fersi
Morendo eterni ; e, NEL ETERNO LUME, Quando mostrai di chiuder gli’ occhi, APERSI !—

NOTE 187.

P. 167. THERE IS NO PROPER ANALOGOUS TERM, &c.

Ονομα κειμενον.—Κειμενον, here, is equivalent to κυριον ; a word established by common usage.—Ετι, εἰ ΜΗ ΚΕΙΜΕΝΟΙΣ ὀνομασι χρηται, ὁιον Πλατων, ὀφρυοσκιον, τον ὀφθαλμον. - - - - παν γαρ ἀσαφες το ΜΗ ΕΙΩΘΟΣ.—Topic. VI. 2. p. 242.—See also, Categ. c. vii. p. 23, C.

* Ed. di Gesualdo, p. 288.

NOTE 188.

P. 168. - - - - - SOWING ABROAD

HIS HEAVEN-CREATED FLAME.—

Σπειρών θεοκτίσαν φλογα.—Part of an Iambic verse, and probably from some Tragic Poet. The commentators quote Virgil's "Spargebat lumine " terras." This, however, is not exactly applicable, because spargere does not, I think, appear to have been the proper, specific word, for sowing, as σπειρειν was. The passage of Lucretius is more apposite :

Sol etiam summo de vertice dissupat omnes
Ardorem in partes, et lumine CONSERIT arva.

II., 211.

Every reader will recollect Milton's beautiful application of this metaphor to the stars :

And sow'd with stars the heav'n, thick as a field.—

P. L., VII. 358.

— and to the dew-drops, metaphorized into pearls, v. 1.

But the idea of pouring, applied to the great fountain of light, seems both a more just, and a more elevated, metaphor. It is happily touched by Virgil in this line :—

Jam sole infuso, jam rebus luce relectis.

Æn. IX. 461.

—a sketch which Thomson has finely filled up, and finished :

----- young

- - - - young day pours in apace,
And opens all the latvny prospect wide :
 The dripping rock, the mountain's misty top,
 Swell on the sight, and brighten with the dawn;
 Blue, thro' the dusk; the smoking currents shine.

Summer, 52.

In his hymn, he has taken up the metaphor in a sublimer tone :

Great source of day! best image here below
 Of thy Creator, ever POURING wide,
 • From world to world, the vital ocean round ! v. 66.

—To which I cannot restrain myself from adding a fine passage of the same kind in the hymn of Dionysius to the sun :

Ἀκτινα πολυςρεφον ἀμπλεκων,

Ἀιγλας πολυδερχα * ΠΑΓΑΝ

Περι γαιαν ἀπασαν ἐλίσσων.

ΠΟΤΑΜΟΙ δὲ σεθεν ΠΥΡΟΣ ΑΜΒΡΟΤΟΥ

Τικτεσιν ἐπηρατον αἰμεραν.

* M. Burette prefers πολυκερδεα, a reading of a French MS.; and he translates it, "une riche source." He should have said, "a cunning source;" for I do not believe there is good authority for any other sense of πολυκερδης.—See Mem. de l'Acad. des Inscript. tome vii. Dissert. sur la Melopée, &c.—The reader may see the hymn, at the end of the Ox. Aratus, and in Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 90, with a translation. There is, also, a translation in Dodsley's Miscellany, vol. v. But, however partial I may be thought, I must give the bays on this occasion to my friend. He is no professed Poet; but his version has, surely, far more of the animation, enthusiasm,

NOTE 189.

P. 168. THE WINELESS CUP.—

Αοινων. This emendation of Victorius, (instead of ἀλλὰ οἶνα, the reading of all the editions and MSS.) seems confirmed, beyond all doubt, by Rhet. III. 6. p. 590, A. and 11. p. 597, A.

Metaphors, from their nature, are in danger of being obscure, or forced, though it is essential to their beauty and effect, that they should be clear and apposite. For this purpose, a metaphor may be guarded in various ways. If the simple substitution of the improper, for the proper, term, would be obscure, or harsh, the metaphor may be converted into an image, or *comparison; it may be used analogically, and we may say, φιάλη ΑΠΕΟΣ, or φιάλη ΑΟΙΝΟΣ; or, if that be not sufficient for perspicuity—that is, if the meaning be not sufficiently pointed out by the manner, or circumstances, in which the expression is introduced, we may join these, (φιάλη Ἀπεῖο ἀοινῶς,) or even add to either of them the proper word itself^b.

There

enthusiasm, and solemnity of the original. No Persian, indeed, could have entered more thoroughly into the spirit of solar adoration.

* See Demet. Sect. 80.—And, again, Sect. 86, of the negative epithet used for the same purpose.

^b See above, NOTE 184.

There is a fine instance of this negative mode of explaining a metaphor, in Isaiah, li. 21. "Thou " drunken, but not with wine *."

The same end is often answered by an epithet, affirming of the thing expressed some quality belonging to the thing signified; thus, ships are "floating bulwarks," and the lyre a "chorded shell," where Dryden has made the same use of the affirmative epithet, chorded, that Theognis did of the negative, ἀχρῶς, in his metaphorical expression for a bow—φορμιγξ ἀχρῶς^d. Sometimes the explanatory epithet is itself a metaphor; as in the πτερωτοὶ ἄρμασι of Euripides;—"winged " chariots." Here we have a double metaphor; chariot for ship, and wing for sail.

It should be remembered, that these negative epithets are very common in the Greek Poets. Victorius points out many instances: as κωμον ἀναυλοτατον, Eurip. Phæniss. 818.—θιασον ἀβακχευτον, Orest. 319.—μηνυτηρ ἀφθιγκτη, Æsch. Eumen. 245.—ἀπτεροις πωτημασιν, ibid. 250, &c.

NOTE 190.

P. 168. - - - AN INVENTED WORD, &c.

Between this and the preceding definition Aristotle must have placed that of Κοσμος—the ornament, or ornamental word. That it was purposely passed over-

* See Bp. Lowth's Comm. on Isaiah.

c Mr. Mason's Ode to the Naval Officers.

^d Demet. Sect. 86.—Arist. Rhet. III. 11. p. 597.

over by him is hardly credible. This is, most probably, one of the lamentable διαβρωματα that Strabo talks of^a.

The commentators differ widely as to the meaning of κοσμη. Castelvetro says, the word admits, here, of five different senses, which he sets up, like nine-pins, for the pleasure of knocking them all down.—The only reasonable account of the matter seems to be that given by Dacier from Victorius. It seems clear enough, that what Aristotle here calls κοσμη, is included, at least, under what he calls οικειον in the Rhetoric. For he says, at the end of the next chapter (cap. xxii.) speaking of those species of words that are used in prose, that they are these three, το κυριον, και μεταφορα, και ΚΟΣΜΟΣ: and in the Rhetoric, after referring to the very enumeration of words in this chapter, and setting aside such as he calls poetical, (i. e. γλωτται, διπλα ονοματα, &c.) he says, το δε κυριον, και το ΟΙΚΕΙΟΝ, και μεταφοραι, μοναι χρησιμοι προς την των ψιλων λογων λεξιν: παντες γαρ μεταφοραις διαλεγονται, και τοις ΟΙΚΕΙΟΙΣ, και τοις κυριοις^b. And these οικεια ονοματα, again, seem plainly synonymous with ἐπιθετα, mentioned presently after:—δει δε και τα ἐπιθετα και τας μεταφ. κ. τ. λ.—By οικεια and ἐπιθετα, Aristotle seems to have expressed the genus, of which, κοσμη, the ornamental or embellishing epithet, was a species.

But

^a See the passage in the Preface.

^b Rhet. III. 2. 585.

But as he has not, by any means, explained himself fully, nor given any definition either of οἰκειότης or ἐπιθετον, the mist which he has left upon this subject must remain. I shall only remark, that the word κοσμή is once, (and I think but once,) used by him in his Rhetoric, apparently in the same sense as in this chapter. For, speaking of the propriety of diction, and its correspondence to the subject, he observes, that “an ornament should not be applied to a mean word; for this,” says he, “has the appearance of burlesque; which is the case with Cleophon, who has used expressions of this sort as ridiculous, as it would be to talk of an “AUGUST fig-tree.” The word κοσμή here, and the example by which he explains it, seem to prove, that κοσμή, in the treatise on Poetry; means such an epithet as embellishes or elevates the thing to which it is applied. For I do not imagine that the term includes what the Grammarians call perpetual epithets, such as “humida vina,” γαλα λευκον, &c. because Aristotle expressly says, that the κοσμή is used in common speech: now these redundant epithets are banished, both by him, and by Quintilian^d, even from oratory; much more from ordinary discourse.

It

^c — μὴτ' ἐπὶ τῷ εὐτελεὶ ὀνοματὶ ἐπὶ ΚΟΣΜΟΣ· εἰ δὲ μὴ, κωμῳδία φαίνεται· ὅσον ποιεῖ Κλεοφῶν· ὁμοίως γὰρ ἓνια ἔλεγε, καὶ εἰ εἶπεν ἄν, ΠΟΤΝΙΑ ΣΥΤΗΗ.—III. 7. p. 590.

^d Rhet. III. 3. p. 587, C.—Quintil. De Instit. Or. VIII. 6.

It may be objected, as it has been objected by Piccolomini (p. 337), that, as an epithet may, at the same time, be a foreign word, a metaphorical, an extended, or of any of the other sorts, it could not be enumerated by Aristotle as a distinct species of words among the rest. But the truth is, that he is not there enumerating so many distinct species of words, which exclude each other, but only a number of distinct properties of words, several of which may subsist together in the same word. Thus, an extended word may, manifestly, be, at the same time, a metaphorical, or a foreign word, or both: a metaphorical word may be, also, an invented, extended, altered word, &c. But none of these words can be, at the same time, supra, common words; and the only exclusive distinction that Aristotle intended, is between the common word, and the others; all of which are words, on some account or other, uncommon.

NOTE 191.

P. 169. NOUNS ARE DIVIDED, &c.

In passages where great corruption and little importance meet, a commentator may be reasonably indulged in silence, or brevity. What all this has to do in the midst of an analysis of poetical language, as distinguished from that of prose, I confess myself totally unable to see.

The defects of the passage have been fully pointed out by almost all the annotators. See

Mr. Winstanley's note, p. 300, ed. Ox. 1780.— But we have lately been told, that all the commentators have entirely mistaken the sense of the passage, and supposed it, without reason, to be imperfect, merely because they did not see, that Aristotle here speaks, not as a Grammarian, but as a Philosopher, and is considering, not the conventional gender of verbal inflection, but the real gender of the things signified. Thus, it is admitted, indeed, that all words ending in ν, and ρ, are not masculine; yet, if we examine the nature of the things denoted by words of those terminations, we shall find, it seems, that they are masculine, though the words themselves are regarded as feminine *. Let us try, then. ΜΗΤΗΡ, for example, ends in ρ. Did Aristotle's philosophy lead him to consider a mother as of the masculine gender?

NOTE 192.

P. 170. THE EXCELLENCE OF DICTION CONSISTS IN BEING PERSPICUOUS, WITHOUT BEING MEAN.

Λεξις ἀγενή—i. e. of diction, or language, in general; not, "elocutionis Poeticæ," as Goulston and others render it. For Aristotle gives the same definition of the excellence of oratorical diction, in in his Rhetoric; adding, only, with respect to the degree of elevation, such a restriction as his subject there required ^a. Now had he intended here a definition of the language of Poetry, as discriminated from that of Prose, he would hardly have confined himself to two characters common to both; viz. that it should be perspicuous, and yet not mean, or low, like colloquial language, consisting only of common and proper words, without metaphors, or any of the other ornamental words which he enumerates; some of which he makes essential to the excellence (ἀρετήν) and proper elevation, even of prose elocution ^b. For, that this is the force of ταπεινὴ, is clear from his own explanation.

* "Non enim omnia quæ desinunt in ν et ρ sunt masculina; nisi ad sensum earum rerum quas denotant respicias, qui mas est, licet ipsa nomina feminina habeantur." Ed. Camb. 1785, p. 156.

Still, it is obvious to ask, why the philosopher, when his subject was the excellence of poetic diction, should thus set out with a general definition, instead of giving us, at once, the definition of the species.—The reason, I suppose, was, that he conceived the poetic to differ from the rhetorical language, only in the degree of elevation above ordinary speech ^c; and to define degrees is not easy. Nor, indeed, was even this difference common to all Poetry. If the diction of the Dithyrambic and other Lyric kinds, and the Heroic, with their pompous apparatus of compound epithets, foreign and antiquated words, and boldness
of

^a Rhet. II. 2. p. 584. ^b See Rhet. III. 2. p. 585.

^c See the ch. of the Rhet. last referred to.

of metaphor, rose far above the highest elevation of prose diction ; on the other hand, that of Tragedy, we know, frequently descended, in its lowest parts, even below what Aristotle assigns as the proper level of rhetorical speech, to a style differing from common speech in no other circumstance but that of metre^d.—Dacier, with the stiff and inflexible dignity of French Tragedy before his eyes, appears to have been shocked at the expression, μη ταπεινή; for he translates, not the words only, but the ideas, of his author, into French: “ La vertu de l’expression consiste dans “ la netteté et dans LA NOBLESSE.”

NOTE 193.

P. 170. SUCH IS THE POETRY OF CLEOPHON - - -.

See NOTE 14. in vol. i. From what Aristotle says of this Poet in the Rhetoric^a, it appears, that he sometimes variegated his vulgarity with a dash of bombast. He gave fine epithets to low words. The εὐτελες ὄνομα, there, agrees with what is said of him here.

What is there said of Cleophon, La Motte says of HOMER himself. — “ Homere emploie quel“ quefois les mots les plus vils, et il les releve “ aussitôt par des epithetes magnifiques^b.” It must,
indeed,

^d See what is said at the end of this chapter, (cap. xxii.) about the Tragic and other species ; and NOTE 209.

^a III. 7.—See NOTE 190, p. 297. ^b Disc. sur l’Iliade.

indeed, be confessed, that, after all the apologies of critics and commentators, Homer's Διὸς ὑποβόσκῃ—"divine swineherd"—has not, to our ears, a much better effect than πορνία συκῆ. The only reasonable way of defending Homer, is, surely, to content ourselves with saying, in general, that the expression could not have the same incongruous appearance in Homer's time; as, in that case, he certainly would not have used it. At least, this would be a better apology, than to assert, with Boileau, that συβωτῆς is one of the finest words in the Greek language."

NOTE 194.

P. 170. AND THAT OF STHENELUS.

This seems to explain a fragment of Aristophanes, in which the Poet, alluding probably to the ^c Reflex. 9, sur Longin.—"Il n'y a peut-être pas dans "le Grec deux plus beaux mots que συβωτῆς & βουκολῆς."—Le Bossu, the admired Le Bossu, apologizes in a different way. The passage is a morsel of such rare and exquisite absurdity, that I cannot withhold it from the reader. "Nous trouvons de grandes bassesses dans les termes de "chaudrons & de marmites, dans le sang, dans les graisses, "dans les intestins & autres parties des animaux; par- "ceque tout cela n'est plus que dans nos cuisines & dans "nos boucheries, & que ces choses nous font bondir le "cœur. Et nous ne prenons pas garde, que tout cela, au "temps d'Homere et de Virgile, étoit au goût du S. Esprit "même, qui n'a jamais pu l'avoir mauvais; que Dieu "avoit très-soigneusement ordonné toutes ces choses à "Moïse," &c. Traité du Poëme Epique, VI. 8.

the flatness and insipidity of the diction of Sthenelus, as wanting the poetic seasoning of metaphor, &c. introduces some hungry fellow saying, that "he could make shift to eat even some of the words of Sthenelus, if they were but dipped in salt, or vinegar."

Και πως ἔγω Σθενελὺ φαγοίμ' ἐν ῥήματι,

Εἰς ὅξος ἐμβαπτομενον ἢ λευκὴς ἀλας.

Athen. ix. init.

NOTE 195.

P. 170. AN ÆNIGMA, IF COMPOSED OF METAPHORS—.

"Ut modicus autem atque opportunus ejus usus illustrat orationem, ita, frequens et obscurat et tædio complet; continuus verò in allegoriam et ænigma exit."—Quintil. VIII. 6.

NOTE 196.

P. 170. THE ESSENCE OF AN ÆNIGMA CONSISTS, &c.

I can neither assent to the emendation proposed by Mr. Winstanley, nor see the least want of any emendation. The passage appears to me perfectly clear and unexceptionable, as it is. Τα ὑπαρχοντα must, by no means, be joined with ἀδυνατα. It evidently means here, in a sense very usual, things that actually exist—i. e. are true. As, Rhet. II. 25, λυεῖται δὲ καὶ τὰ σημεῖα, - - - καὶ μὴ ὑπαρχοντα: where, ὑπαρχοντα is synonymous with with ἀληθείς, in lib. i. cap. ii. p. 517—λυτον δὲ, καὶ ἀληθὲς ᾗ.

The passage is accurately and closely rendered by Piccolomini. “La forma e l’essentia dell’ “enigma consiste in questo, che nel dir cose, che “VERAMENTE SIANO, si congiunghino insieme
“cose ch’ appaiano impossibili à star’ insieme.”—
And this is an exact definition of an ænigma—such an ænigma, at least, as Aristotle means. But in the other way of constructing the passage, which is that of Castelvetro, and some other interpreters, it is no definition at all. For if the essence of a riddle consists merely in “putting together things “that are incompatible and impossible,”—τα ὑπαρχοντα ἀδύνατα συναψαι—then the Italian Poet made a riddle, when he described a man fighting after he was cut in two:

- - - - - del colpo non accorto,
Andava combattendo, ed era morto*.

NOTE 197.

P. 170. NOW THIS CANNOT BE EFFECTED BY THE MERE ARRANGEMENT OF THE WORDS, &c.

Κατὰ μὲν ἐν τῇ τῶν ὀνομάτων συνθεσιν.—Heinsius— τῇ τῶν ΚΥΡΙΩΝ ὀνομάτων.— But the κυριον ὄνομα, as I have already observed, is, throughout, opposed by Aristotle, not to μεταφορά only, but to all the other words. He would hardly, therefore, have used

* Berni, Orlando Innamorato, lib. ii. canto 24, stanza 60.

used it here in a different sense, as opposed to metaphor only. If any emendation were necessary, I should think ΑΛΛΩΝ ὀνομάτων more probable^a. But perhaps no word is wanting. Aristotle had used the expression, ἀδύνατα ΣΤΝΑΨΑΙ—"to put together things impossible." This might lead to suppose, that an ænigma might be made by the mere συνθεσις ὀνομάτων—by a certain arrangement or construction of the words only. Therefore he adds—"this cannot be done by the mere arrangement of the words; by the metaphorical use of them it may."

As this sense seems sufficiently clear^b, supposes no defect in the text, and, after all, coincides, in the main, with that of Heinsius, (for we must necessarily understand, an arrangement of words not metaphorical—) I have adopted it in my translation, after Dacier, and Batteux.

^a So, I find, Piccolomini translates:—"dell' altre parole."

^b It seems also to result, most naturally, from Aristotle's expression; in which, κατὰ τὴν τῶν ὀΝΟΜΑΤΩΝ ΣΤΝΘΕΣΙΝ, and, κατὰ ΜΕΤΑΦΟΡΑΝ, seem opposed:—"by construction—by metaphor."—If he had written κατὰ τὴν τῶν ΑΛΛΩΝ (or ΚΤΡΙΩΝ) ὀνομ. συνθ. he would probably have written also —κατὰ δὲ τὴν τῶν μεταφορῶΝ (sc. συνθεσιν.)

NOTE 198.

P. 170. A MAN I ONCE BEHELD, &c.

See Rhet. III. 2. p. 586, where this is called an approved, or admired, riddle:—ἐν τῷ αἰνιγματὶ τῷ εὐδοκίμῳ— I wish it may εὐδοκίμῳ with a modern reader. In Athenæus another line appears :

Ἀνδρ' εἶδον πυρὶ χαλκὸν ἐπ' ἀνερὶ κολλησάντα,
 Οὕτω συγκολλῶς ὥς τε συναίμα ποιεῖν.

Lib. ix. p. 452.

But Casaubon seems right in supposing this pentameter to have been a modern addition ; for it is not found, I believe, in any more antient writer. Even in Plutarch, I observe, that the hexameter not only appears by itself, as in Aristotle, but is plainly given as the whole. See his Symposium, p. 267, ed. H. St. It appears from that passage to have been the production of a lady, Eumetis. I doubt whether, in these “ degenerate days,” it would have gained her a prize in the Lady's Diary.

The Greeks were fond of these puzzles. The reader may find some curious specimens of this sort of wit in Athenæus, X. 448, &c.

NOTE 199.

P. 171. AS OLD EUCLID DID, OBJECTING, &c.

Fontenelle talks in the same way. “ Du tems “ d'Homere c'étoit une grande merveille qu'un “ homme

“ homme pût assujettir son discours à des mesures, à des sillabes longues et breves, & faire en même tems quelque chose de raisonnable. On donnoit donc aux Poetes des licences infinies, & on se tenoit encore trop heureux d’avoir des vers. Homere pouvoit parler dans un seul vers cinq langues differentes; prendre le dialecte Dorique quand l’Ionique ne l’accommodoit pas; au défaut de tous les deux, prendre l’Attique, l’Eolique, ou le commun; c’est-à-dire, parler en même tems, Picard, Gascon, Normand, Breton, & François commun. Il pouvoit allonger un mot s’il étoit trop court, l’accourcir s’il étoit trop long; personne n’y trouvoit à redire *.”

But, could this ingenious and sensible writer seriously suppose, that the language of Homer’s poems had at all the same effect to a hearer, or reader, of his time, that an English poem would now have, if composed of all the provincial dialects of Great Britain?—We are always told, how Homer enriched his language by “visiting all the principal nations of Greece, and learning the peculiarities of their speech^b.” Just as if an English

* Digression sur les Anc. et les Mod.

^b Blackwell’s Enquiry, &c. p. 292.—And so, indeed, the author of the treatise De Hom. Poes.—Λέξει δὲ ποικίλην μεχρήμεν[©], τὴν ἀπὸ πάσης διαλέκτου τῶν Ἑλλήνων χαρακτικῆς ἐγναταμξεν, ἐξ ὧν δηλ[©] ἐστὶ, κασαν μὲν Ἑλλάδα ἐπελθων και παν ἰδν[©].

English poet, because he had resided some time in Yorkshire, or Lancashire, might, in his next poem, put neet for night, loise for lose, or a halliblash, a very well-sounding Lancashire word, for a blaze.

This account makes the language of Homer no other than the κοινὸν which Quintilian reprobrates, among the *vitia orationis: something worse than the "Babylonish dialect" of Hudibras;

- - - - "a party-colour'd dress

"Of patch'd and piebald languages.

"- - - - -

"It had an odd promiscuous tone,

"As if he'd talk'd three parts in one;

"Which made some think, when he did gabble,

"They had heard three labourers of Babel;

"Or Cerberus himself pronounce

"A leash of languages at once."

With such an idea of Homer's language, Fontenelle might well add—"Cette étrange confusion de
"langues, cet assemblage bisarre de mots tout
"défigurés, étoit la langue des dieux; du moins
"il

* "Κοινὸν quoque appellatur quædam mista ex
"variâ ratione linguarum oratio; ut si Atticis Dorica, " Ionica, Æolica etiam dicta confundas. Cui simile vitium
"est apud nos, si quis sublimia humilibus, vetera novis,
"poetica vulgaribus misceat."

De Inst. Or. VIII. 3. p. 396, ed. Gibs.

Quintilian certainly did not intend this for a description of Homer's language.

“ il est bien sûr que ce n'étoit pas celle des hommes.”

—And, indeed, I firmly believe with Lord Monboddo, that “such a mongrel dialect was never written by any man;” and that “Homer wrote, either the language that was spoken in the country where he was born and educated, or that was used by the poets that had written before him, and was the established language of Poetry.”

NOTE 200.

P. 171. AND THEN GIVING A BURLESQUE EXAMPLE OF THAT SORT OF DICTION.

ἱαμβοποιῆσας ἐν αὐτῇ τῇ λέξει.—Two senses have been given to the word ἱαμβοποιῆσας; both of them, I think, far from satisfactory. Some render it—making Iambic verses: “Iambis usus est.” [Vict.] But, is it likely, that Euclid, meaning to ridicule Homer’s hexameters, should do it in Iambic verse?—Besides that the lines themselves, such as we find them, have not the least air of Iambics, but fall easily enough, with a little help, into hexameters. In this I perfectly agree with Dacier; though I see no reason to suppose with him, that Euclid had composed—“un ouvrage en vers heroïques.”

Others,

^a Orig. and Prog. of Lang. vol. iii. p. 19.—And see the rational account given of this matter, and of the progress and intermixture of the Greek dialects in general, by Mr. Burgess, in his valuable edition of the Miscell. Crit. of Dawes, Pref. xxi. and p. 405.

Others, and Madius in particular, understand the word to mean, satirizing, ridiculing, the Poet;—" se moque de lui." [Dac.] A meaning that, undoubtedly, suits the passage better; whether it suits the word itself I much doubt, but will not venture to decide. As Aristotle uses ιαμβοποιος, in the sense of a *satiric Poet—a maker of the ιαμβος, or satiric poem, he may possibly have used the verb, ιαμβοποιειν, here, in the correspondent sense of making a satire upon, or burlesquing:—ιαμβοποιησας εν αυτη τη λεξει—" having ridiculed him in that sort of diction," in the following manner, &c.—As this sense appears to me, on the whole, far more eligible than the other, I have followed it: for I see no third sense that can, with any shew of probability, be extracted from the present text. But that it is defective, and that ιαμβοποιησας is an error, I have very little doubt. If conjecture might be indulged, I should be inclined to suppose, that what Aristotle had said was this;—" that it is an easy matter to versify, even in common speech, (εν αυτη τη λεξει,) if one may be allowed to extend syllables and words at pleasure, so as to convert, for instance, an Iambic foot, which is continually occurring in common conversation^b, into an Heroic. or Spondee." And the examples that follow, were probably two prose sentences so converted, or convertible, into hexameters.

But

* See cap. ix.

^b Cap. iv.—μαλιστα γαρ λεκτικον, &c.

But as to the manner in which Aristotle had expressed this in the text, I have no conjecture to offer that is satisfactory, even to myself.—Of the mangled lines which follow, with their perplexing variety of indeterminable readings, I shall say with Victorius, “veritate desperatâ, nihil amplius curæ de hac re suscipere volui.” It is some comfort however, as M. Batteux has observed, that both the objection of Euclid, and Aristotle’s answer, are clear enough, independently of the examples.

I ought to mention, that Castelvetro has explained this passage, without supposing the text wrong, in a manner different from any other interpreter, and which, in part, accords with my idea. By ιαυβοποιειν he understands neither saturizing, nor making Iambic verses; but, making Iambic feet instead of spondees, in hexameter verse. And the sense he gives the whole passage is this: “It would be a very easy thing to write heroic verse, if this liberty of extension were allowed; for then, a Poet might put Iambic feet in the room of Spondees, and commit no fault, because the short syllables might be lengthened at pleasure.” And the lines that follow he supposes to be examples of such defective hexameters.

There is somewhat ingenious in this explanation, as there is in many others of this acute writer; but it has likewise the fault, which many of his explanations have; that of being by no means reconcileable with the original.—See his comment. p. 481.

NOTE 201.

P. 172. WHEN THESE LICENCES APPEAR TO BE THUS PURPOSELY USED - - - -.

—Το μὲν ἔν. ΦΑΙΝΕΣΘΑΙ πως χρωμενον, κ. τ. αλ.—
The force, both of φαίνεσθαι, which I understand to be emphatic here, and of πως, seems perfectly well explained by Castelvetro. “Non so perchè “alcuni vogliono rimuovere di questo testo, πως, “essendoci stato posto per dimostrare, che allora
“il vizio si scopre, e’ l’riso si muove, quando si “comincia in alcun modo a riconoscere, che il “poeta ha usata a studio, e ricercata questa maniera di parole.” p. 482.

So, too, Piccolomini’s translation — “l’esser veduto - - - usar così fatto modo di locutione.”—
For πως, I once suspected we should read ΑΙΠΕ-πως; as presently after—χρωμεν^ο ἀπριπως. But I believe πως is right:—aliquo modo.

NOTE 202.

P. 172. HOW GREAT A DIFFERENCE IS MADE, &c.

Ὅσον διαφέρει.—Not “quantum excellat,” as Goulston and others translate; but, “what a difference the proper use of such words makes” —“how different the effect is.” As, above, cap. x.

ΔΙΑΦΕΡΕΙ γὰρ πολὺ—"it makes a great difference:" and, cap. xviii. τὶ ΔΙΑΦΕΡΕΙ.—Nothing more common than this use of the word. The difference here expressed, is, plainly, between the ἀρμόττον, and the ἀπρεπώς, in the use of such words: χρωμεν^Θ ΑΠΡΕΠΩΣ—τὸ αὐτὸ ἀν' ἀπεργασαίτο· ΤΟ ΔΕ 'ΑΡΜΟΤΤΟΝ ὅσον' διαφέρει—κ. τ. λ.

NOTE 203.

P. 172. - - - AND TEMPERATE USE OF SUCH WORDS—.

—Ἐπιθεμενῶν τῶν ὀνομάτων εἰς τὸ μέτρον :—literally, "the words being put into the metre?" i. e. as Victorius and others explain it, "taking care, " that, in changing the words, you do it 'salvo " metro.'" A very unnecessary caution surely; besides that the Greek hardly says that, whatever it may mean. Let us try its meaning by the fairest test, that of strict and literal translation; for we can sometimes see nonsense in English, which we cannot see in Greek. "But what difference is made by a proper use of such words, " may be observed in hexameter verse, when the " words are put into (i. e. as it is explained, " adapted to—) the metre."—What words?—Metaphorical, foreign, extended, &c. of which he had just been speaking. Very well. But how—put in, or adapted to, the metre?—for not a word has yet been said about changing the words. Goulston understands, putting in these poetical words words *instead of the proper and common words. I see nothing of this in the original.

In short, it appears to me, that nothing tolerable can be made of the phrase, εἰς τὸ μετρον, taken in this sense. If it might be taken, as some have taken it^b, adverbially, for μετρίως—to a moderate degree—all would be well. “Let it be considered in heroic verse, what a difference is made by such words, when properly used, and not inserted, or introduced, too frequently.” But I cannot think that the expression will admit of this sense, though somewhat favoured, perhaps, by the circumstance of μετρον having been just before used in the sense of moderation: τὸ δὲ μετρον, κοινὸν ἀπαντῶν, &c. If the article τὸ were omitted, the adverbial sense would be less improbable; but, εἰς τὸ μετρον, can only, I think, mean—into the metre. Still, however, I incline to think this was Aristotle’s meaning, and that he probably wrote εἰς τὸ ΜΕΤΡΙΟΝ. A single letter makes all the difference. The word μετρίων, as far as that may add any probability to my conjecture, occurs in that part of the Rhetoric where he is treating of the very same subject—the proper and moderate use of metaphors, epithets, and other tropical and ornamental words, in oratory. Thus, III. 2. p. 586, speaking of epithets and diminutives,

* See the notes on his Latin version.

^b Castelvetro—Dacier —(“mises avec mesure.”) and the editor of the unaccented Ox. ed. of 1760.

tives, he says, εὐλαβείσθαι δὲ δεῖ, καὶ παρατηρεῖν ἐν αἰμοφῶν TO METPION. And again, of epithets—δεῖ στοχαζίσθαι TOY METPIOT. p. 587.

As this was the only satisfactory sense I could make of the words, I have ventured to give it in my version,

NOTE 204.

P. 172. FOR A COMMON AND USUAL WORD ---.

Κυρίῃ εἰωθότῳ. As κυρίον, in Aristotle's sense, is common, the addition of εἰωθότῳ, (usual), seems, at first view, to be mere tautology. But the case, as it is very well explained by Victorius, appears to have been this. The word ἰσθίει, which he here calls κυρίον εἰωθότῳ, was not strictly κυρίον, but only a common metaphor; that is, a word which, though originally metaphorical, had acquired, by constant use as a surgical term*, the effect of a proper word. [See NOTE 179.] As κυρίον, therefore, in Aristotle's enumeration, was opposed to μεταφορά, as well as to γλῶττα, and the rest of the poetical words, the application of it here, to a word that was evidently metaphorical in its original use, might seem inconsistent: the word εἰωθότῳ was therefore, probably, added, to obviate, in his short way, this objection.

I cannot

* Aristotle, probably, would not have given the denomination of κυρίον, at all, to the same word in this line of Homer:

Τὸς ἅμα σοὶ πάντας πυρ ἰσθίει.—

Il. Ψ. 182,

I cannot guess what induced Dacier to render γλωτται, here, by "not metaphorique;" or Castelvetro to assert, that Aristotle calls θεινται a foreign word, only on account of the boldness of the metaphor. By γλωτται, I think, we are to understand, any word that belongs either to another language, or another dialect of the same language, and that is not naturalized by common and popular use. For foreign words, by long usage, become common and popular words; like entire, dame, and a great number of other French words in our language, which were γλωτται when first introduced, and for a considerable time afterwards; but have now, for many years, ceased to be considered as foreign words. Such words in the Greek language Aristotle, I apprehend, did not comprehend under the term γλωτται, as not being strange, uncommon, ξενικα. This is evident from a passage in his Rhetoric: αἱ μὲν γὰρ ΓΛΩΤΤΑΙ, ΑΓΝΩΤΕΣ· τὰ δὲ ΚΥΡΙΑ, ΙΣΜΕΝ^b.

There is, however, one sort of poetic words not distinctly provided for in Aristotle's enumeration; I mean, obsolete words. Yet these make so considerable a part of the privileged language of verse, that we can hardly suppose him to have overlooked them. Γλωτται seems the only class to which they can possibly be referred: yet his definition of γλωτται is, "a word, ὃ χρῆνται ΕΤΕΡΟΙ;" which is not applicable to an obsolete word, word, used by nobody. Perhaps he did not think it worth while to distinguish between words belonging to another language, or dialect, and words that once belonged to the native language, but which, having long fallen into disuse, have, when occasionally revived, the effect of foreign words.

^b Rhet. III. 10. init.

NOTE 205.

P. 172. THE CANKEROUS WOUND THAT EATS MY FLESH.

— Φαγιδαινα ἢ με σαρκας ισθιει ποδῶ.— We should read, probably, for the sake of the metre, either Φαγιδαινα γ' ἢ, as it is corrected in the Oxford Euripides, or, which seems still better, φαγιδαινα δη, which is Du Pauw's emendation. And σαρκας, for the same reason, must have been altered to σαρχα, in the verse of Euripides, as, I see, it is given in the Oxford edition.

Had Aristotle told us no more about these two lines, than that one of them was of Æschylus, and the other of Euripides, what critic would not have confidently given the θοινεται to Æschylus?

NOTE 206.

P. 173. Νυν δε μ' ἰων ΟΛΙΓΟΣ τε και ΟΥΤΙΑΔΑΝΟΣ και ΑΚΙΚΥΣ.

Od. IX. 515.—In the altered line, thus:

Νυν δε μ' ἰων ΜΙΚΡΟΣ τε και ΑΣΘΕΝΙΚΟΣ
και ΑΕΙΔΗΣ.

Among

Among these substituted terms, that μικρὸς answers to ἄλιγος is clear enough; but how αἰδής answers to ἀκίχης, it is not easy to make out. This difficulty struck me, long before I had seen the comment of Victorius, who makes the same remark; and I had accounted for the mistake in the same way that he does: for, if ἀκίχης be the true reading, the commentators must, probably, have been misled by taking it for granted, that the substituted words must necessarily correspond, in order, as well as meaning, to the original words*. But it is easy to see, that αἰδής, ugly, or deformed, cannot answer to ἀκίχης, which is weak; and that ἀσθενικός does exactly answer to it. Ἀκίχης—ἈΣΘΕΝΗΣ, ἀδυνατός. Hesych.—But my difficulty goes still farther. I do not see how αἰδής can correspond, in meaning, to ὑτίδαν. I once thought it should be ΑΕΙΚΗΣ.—Ουτίδαν—ἔδον—ἔξιν. Hesych. Αεικελίας — εὐτελείς, ΟΥΔΕΝΟΣ ΑΞΙΟΥΣ: and, ΑΕΙΚΕΣ—ΕΥΚΑΤΑΦΡΟΝΗΤΟΝ. Id. So Suidas; Αεικελίας — ὁ εὐκαταφρονητός. But, notwithstanding the authority of lexicographers, and the common derivation of the two words, αεικής and αεικελίας, I question whether the former is ever used by Homer in the sense of ὑτίδαν, contemptible, mean, &c. though αεικελίας is. Αεικής seems seems always to mean, indignus, unworthy, sad, shocking, shameful, &c. It is a word of serious indignation^b. Αἰκελίον seems to be used sometimes in that sense^c, and sometimes in the contemptuous sense^d, as in the line of Homer which Aristotle next produces. The only passages that I have found in Homer, where αἰκνῆς will admit well of this sense, are Od. Π. 199, and Od. Ω. 249, in the expressions, αἰκνῆα ἴσσο, and, αἰκνῆα ἴσσαι: yet even there, it is not necessary to render it "meanly clad;" it may be, as in other places, sadly, unbecomingly, indignè, &c.

* —“Aristotelem, ordinem Homericorum verborum in immutatione eorum non servasse; atque id facisse, ut metrum servaret; et, quum inquit, ἀσθενικός, quod secundum apud ipsum est, tertium apud poetam exprimere voluisse.” Vict. Comment. p. 237.

With respect to the word ἐτιδαν^e, Hesychius gives ἀσθενῆς as one of its meanings; and ἀσθενικ^e might well enough answer to it here, were it not for the stronger claim of the word ἀκικνῆς; which, however, after all, may possibly be a mistake. We know how variously Homer was read and quoted by the antients. Three Medicean manuscripts here give αἰιδῆς, instead of ἀκικνῆς^f; and so, the ed. Ald. and the version of Valla. This reading is also mentioned by Eustathius. Perhaps, then, αἰιδῆς might be the reading of Aristotle's copy—the precious copy ἐκ παρθενῆς^g, of which we hear so much; and he might mean to exemplify his proposed experiment of substituting common, for poetical, expression, only in the two first words; repeating the last, αἰιδῆς, merely to complete his verse.

^b Vide indices Homericos. ^c As Od. Δ. 244. ε. 32. δ. 231.

^d Ind. Homer.

^e See Mr. Winstanley's edition.

verse. But whatever becomes of this conjecture, one thing I cannot help just observing—that this reading, αἰδης, is favoured by the preceding lines in Homer. Polyphemus says—

ΑΛΛ' αἰεὶ τινα φῶτα ΜΕΓΑΝ καὶ ΚΑΛΟΝ ἔδεγμην Ἐνθαδ' ἔλευσεσθαι, μεγαλήν ἐπιειμένον ΑΛΚΗΝ.

Νυν δὲ μ', ἔων ΟΛΙΓΘΣ τε καὶ ΟΥΤΙΔΑΝΟΣ καὶ ΑΚΙΚΥΣ, &c. v. 513.

One would expect the three words in this last line to answer, as opposites, to great, handsome, and strong, in the two first: which they will not do, if we read ἀκικυς; for ὑτιδαν, though it may very well be opposed to μεγαλήν ἐπιειμένον ἄλκην, cannot be, with any propriety, opposed to καλόν. Whereas, if αἰδης be substituted for ἀκικυς, all will answer exactly; ὀλιγ, to μεγαν, ὑτιδαν, to μεγαλήν ἐπιειμένον ἄλκην, and αἰδης, to καλόν.

In these examples, it is not always easy to ascertain the particular class, to which Aristotle would have referred the words which he changes. We learn, however, that all these Homeric words were ξενικά, uncommon, and poetical; and that all the substituted words were κυρία—words in common and familiar use.

NOTE 207.

P. 174. FOR IT IS THIS ALONE, WHICH CANNOT BE ACQUIRED, &c.

Well translated, though very freely, by M. Batteux. “C'est la seule chose qu'on ne puisse “emprunter

"emprunter d'ailleurs. C'est la production du
 "génie, le coup-d'œil d'un esprit qui voit les rap-
 "ports." Compare Rhet. III. 2. p. 585, D. and 11. p. 595, E. where it is observed, that, καὶ ἐν
 φιλοσοφίᾳ, τὸ ὍΜΟΙΟΝ, ΚΑΙ ΕΝ ΠΟΛΥ ΔΙΕΧΟΤΕΙ, θεωρεῖν, εὐστοχεῖ. — See Mr. Harris's Philol. Inq.
 p. 186, 187, where all these passages are quoted and translated.

NOTE 208.

P. 175. THE DOUBLE ARE BEST SUITED TO DITHYRAMBIC POETRY, &c.

—Χρησιμωτατὴ ἡ διπλὴ λέξις τοῖς διθυραμβοῖς· οὗτοι γὰρ ψωφῶδεις· αἱ δὲ γλωτταὶ, τοῖς ἐποποιῖς· σέμνον γὰρ καὶ αὐθαδὲς· ἡ μεταφορὰ δὲ, τοῖς ἱαμβείοις. Rhet. III. 3. p. 587.

NOTE 209.

P. 175. BUT TO IAMBIC VERSE, WHICH IS,
 AS MUCH AS MAY BE, AN IMITATION OF COMMON SPEECH - - -

This, as I have already observed*, is the only passage in these three chapters concerning the diction, that strictly relates to the subject—the diction of Tragedy, as distinguished from that of the Epic, and other species. It is a hint only; but a pregnant hint, and one that might furnish matter for a dissertation of some length. How frequently,

* NOTE 166.

frequently, even in the best Tragedies, do we see the Poet, as it were, through the actor; hear him indulging himself in his own language, instead of imitating that of his characters; substituting declamation for passion, describing when he should express^b; and, in the unrestrained and epic elevation of his diction, losing all sight of that natural language, of which, undoubtedly, the language of Tragedy should be, according to the precept here implied by Aristotle, only an improved imitation. This improvement, indeed, admits of more or less, but should, at least, bear always the same proportion to what we conceive would be the natural language^{*} of the persons who speak, in

^b See Diss. I. vol. i. p. 25, &c.

^{*} What I here call natural language is, by no means, confined to simple and familiar language. See NOTE 226, and Dr. Hurd's note on v. 94 of the Ep. to the Pisos, there referred to. To which I must add the judicious observations communicated to the public, long after this note was written, by Mr. Mason, in his memoirs of Mr. Whitehead, p. 58, 59, 60. I perfectly agree with what is there said—that the Tragic style not only admits, but demands, “the use of strong images, metaphors, and “figures;” that “it cannot, indeed, be truly impassioned “without them;” and that “while it discards unmeaning epithets, it should be liberal of those, that add force “and vigour to the sentiment.” Nor is all this in any degree incompatible with such imitation, such improved imitation, of common speech, (ΟΤΙΜΑΛΙΕΤΑ λεγειν φυσικωτα,) as Aristotle attributes to Tragic diction, which he does not require to be confined to common and ordinary expression, in the situation, whatever it may be, of the scene before us. For this last circumstance makes a great difference. Tragedy has its ἀργα μέρη, its comparatively “idle parts,” as well as the Epic Poem*; and, considering how rare the talent is of true poetic fancy, and poetic expression, the critic, who would rigorously exclude them from every part of Tragedy, must be an Ariphrades, or a Euclid.—The first speech of Caractacus, in Mr. Mason’s exquisite drama, is highly poetical. Possibly, a severe critic might wish it somewhat less so;—but we have so little of such Poetry!—No Poet, however, knows better than Mr. Mason, when the simpler tone of nature and passion should take place. When Caractacus is exhorted by the Druids to “bethink him”—

- - - - - if ought on this vain earth
Still holds too firm an union with his soul; Estranging it from peace - - -
he answers,

- - - - - I had a Queen:—
Bear with my weakness, Druid!—This tough breast
Must heave a sigh—for she is unreveng’d.
And can I taste true peace, she unreveng’d?
—So chaste, so lov’d a queen!—ah, Evelina,

Hang

expression, (κυρία), but expressly allows it to use also metaphors, and epithets: το κυριον, και ΜΕΤΑΦΟΡΑ, και ΚΟΣΜΟΣ. cap. xxii.

* Cap. xxiv. Transl. Part III. Sept. 6.

Hang not thus weeping on the feeble arm
That could not save thy mother. - - -

The reader will find some excellent observations on this subject in Dr. Beattie's Essay on Poetry, &c. Part II. chap. i. Sect. 1. p. 224, &c. and Sect. 3. p. 267, 268, where a charming example of simple Tragic language is given from Othello^d.

With respect to the Greek Tragedy, its earliest language appears to have been of a low and burlesque kind—the λεξις γελοια of its satyric origin, conveyed in the suitable vehicle of the dancing tetrameter^e. When it was reformed and dignified, (ἀπεισιμνωθη,) Homer was the model; and ÆSCHYLUS, with a conception naturally sublime, and the Iliad before him, raised the tone of Tragedy above its proper pitch, not only to the pomp of the Epic, but even, frequently, to the wild, and tumid, and dark audacity of the Dithyrambic: so that, sometimes, as extremes will meet, the λεξις γελοια, which he took so much pains to avoid, came round and met him, in the shape of bombast, at the very moment when he thought himself at the greatest distance from it. There could not well be any thing in the theatrical cart of Thespis more

^d In his note, Dr. Beattie has “translated it into the finical style.” But we see plainly, that he is by much too good a Poet to succeed well in spoiling good Poetry.

^e Cap. iv. Transl. Part I. Sect. 7.

more laughable, than to call smoke "the brother of fire," and dust, the "brother of mud."*

SOPHOCLES reduced the general language of his dialogue to a more equable and sober dignity, but still, Homer, we know, was his great model[†]; and of his diction it may, perhaps, be said, that it is often Epic, though his measure is Iambic. Most modern readers, however, will, I believe, think it, (as we are told many antient readers did[‡];) more adapted to the genius of Tragedy than

* Πυρῷ κασιν. Sept. contra Theb. v. 500.—κασίς, πῦρ--- κούης. Agam. 503.—The commentators are very amusing, when they admire this, and tell us, it is the same thing as the beautiful expression of χρυσίας τεκνον ἐκπιδῶ, applied to the Oracle, in the Oedipus of Sophocles, [v. 161], the παμφορὰ γαίας τεκνα of Æschylus, applied to flowers [Pers. 620.] or the "Sylvæ filia nobilis," of Horace. [See Burton's Pentalogia, and Stanley's notes on Æschylus.] De Pauw, indeed, finds fault; but he is equally diverting in another way. His note upon κασίς, πῦρ, is—
 "Inepte: pulvis ille est ipsum lutum arefactum et com-minutum: oculati vident statim."—It is to be observed, that both these metaphors of Æschylus are in the dialogue part. Dante has a riddling metaphorical expression of the same kind, but much more poetical. He calls a hoar frost, the sister of snow.

Quando la brina in su la terra assempra
 L' imagine di sua sorella bianca.

Inferno, Canto xxiv. v. 4, 5.

• † Ὅμηρον μὲν, Σοφοκλέα ἐπικόν, Σοφοκλέα δὲ, Ὅμηρον τραγικόν.
Suidas, v. POLEMON. Diog. Laert. IV. 20.—το παν Ὅμηρικὸς ἄνματ' ἐ. Auctor Vitæ Sophoclis.

‡ Namque is, (Euripides;) et in sermone (quod ipsum reprehendunt quibus gravitas et cothurnus et sonus Sophoclis videtur than that of EURIPIDES; who seems to have been regarded by the antients as the first who brought down the language of Tragedy into unison with the measure, so that the one bore the same degree of resemblance to common speech in its expressions, as the other did in its rhythm. At least, this appears to have been Aristotle's opinion, from a passage in his Rhetoric, where, after having explained the difference between the diction of Oratory and that of Poetry, and the foundation of that difference, he observes, that such a degree of embellishment as forces on the hearer the idea of art, and labour, and preparation, is to be avoided, not only by the Orator, but even by the Poet, if he would be natural and affecting: and he compares such evidently artificial language to the voices of the generality of actors, as opposed to the voice of Theodorus, which always appeared to be the real voice of the character he personated; whereas their voices were evidently feigned¹. He then adds—"The best way to conceal

 " artifice, and make your language appear easy
 " and natural, is, by forming it, chiefly, of the " words and phrases of customary speech, properly selected; as EURIPIDES does, who first
 " set the example²."

A pas-videtur esse sublimior,) magis accedit oratorio generi.—

 Quintil. X. 1.

¹ See Diss. I. vol. i. p. 61. note ¹.

² — ΔΕΙ ΛΑΝΘΑΝΕΙΝ ΠΟΙΗΤΑΣ, ΚΑΙ ΜΗ ΔΟΚΕΙΝ ΛΕΓΕΙΝ ΠΕΠΛΑΣΜΕΝΩΣ, ΑΛΛΑ ΠΕΦΥΚΩΤΩΣ· ΤΕΤΟ ΓΑΡ ΚΙΘΑΡΟΝ· ΕΝΕΙΝΟ ΔΕ, Τ' ΕΥΑΥΤΙΟΝ· — — —

και

A passage that precedes this, deserves to be given entire, from its close connection with the subject of this part of the treatise on Poetry, and the curious, though short, sketch it contains of the history of Tragic diction.

“ As the Poets appeared to owe their reputation to their language, which never failed to be admired, however foolish and absurd the matter it conveyed; on this account, even prose diction was, at first, poetical, like that of Gorgias. And even now, they, who use such language, are looked upon, by illiterate people, as the finest speakers; which is far from being true; for oratorical diction, and poetical diction, are different things. And as a proof of this, we see what has actually happened: for now, even among the Poets themselves, those who write Tragedy no longer make use of that sort of language; but, as they had exchanged the Trochaic verse for the Iambic, because this, of all metres, approaches the nearest to common speech; so now, they have also discarded all those words and phrases, so remote from common speech, with which the earlier Tragic Poets used to embellish their diction, and which are still employed και οἷον ἡ Θεοδωρε φωνη πεπονθε προς την των ἄλλων ὑποκριται· ἡ μὲν γὰρ, τε λεγοντι εἰσμεν εἶναι. αἱ δ' ἄλλοτριαι. κλεπτεται δ' εὐ, ἵαν τις ἐκ τῆς εἰωθυίας διαλεκτῆς ἐκλεγων συντίθη· ὅπερ Εὐριπίδης ποιῶι, ΚΑΙ ΤΙΕΔΕΙΞΕ ΠΡΩΤΟΣ. Rhet. III. 2. p. 585, B.

“ ployed by those who write Hexameters. It “ would be ridiculous, therefore, to imitate the “ Poets in a language, which they themselves have “ abandoned as improper¹.”

The Abbé Batteux, by understanding ιαμβίοις here to mean Iambic, or satirical, Poems, has, unluckily, thrown away the only passage in these three chapters, that was strictly to Aristotle's purpose. He has, also, with Dacier, misrepresented his meaning, by rendering—“ ne peut recevoir que “ ce qui est employé dans la conversation.” We are, undoubtedly, to understand, ΜΑΛΙΣΤΑ ἀρμόττει, as before: for that Aristotle did not mean absolutely to exclude the other Poetic words—the double, the foreign, &c. from every part of the Tragic dialogue, is plain from his allowing the occasional use of them even in prose. Rhet. III. 2. p. 585, C. 7. p. 590, E. 591, A.

¹ — ἐπεὶ δὲ οἱ ποιεῖται, λεγόντες εἴηθι, δια τὴν λεγ. ἔδοκεν πορισθῆναι τὴνδε τὴν δοξάν· δια τὸτο, ποιητικὴ πρώτη ἐγένετο λέξις, ὅσον ἡ Γοργίσι· καὶ νυν ἐτι οἱ πολλοὶ τῶν ἀπαυδεντῶν τρεῖς τοιαύτας οἰοῦνται διαλεγέσθαι καλλίστα. Τὸτο δὲ ἐκ ἐστίν, ἀλλ' ἕτερα λογὴ καὶ ποιησεὺς λέξις ἐστίν. Δηλοὶ δὲ το συμβαίνειν· ἐδε γὰρ οἱ τὰς Τραγῳδίας ποιῶντες ἐτι χρῶνται τὸν αὐτὸν τρόπον· ἀλλ' ὥσπερ καὶ ἐκ τετραμμετρῶν εἰς τὸ ἰαμβεῖον μετεβῆσαν, δια τὸ τῷ λογῷ τῶν μετρῶν ὁμοιοτάτον εἶναι τῶν ἄλλων· ἔτω καὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων ἀφῆκασιν, ὅσα παρὰ τὴν διαλεκτὸν ἐστίν· οἷς δ' οἱ πρῶτον ἐκοσμεν, καὶ ἐτι νυν οἱ τὰ ἐξαμετρα ποιῶντες, ἀφῆκασιν. [The repetition of ἀφῆκασιν, here, has much the appearance of error. I suspect we should read thus: ἔτω καὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων, ὅσα παρὰ τὴν διαλεκτὸν ἐστίν, οἷς Θ', or, οἷς ΤΕ, οἱ πρῶτον ἐκοσμεν καὶ—ποιῶντες, ἀφῆκασιν.] διὸ γελοῖον μμεῖσθαι ταύτας, οἱ αὐτῶν ἐτι χρῶνται ἐκείνῳ τῷ τρόπῳ. Rhet. III. 1. p. 584.

NOTE 210.

P. 177. EVEN IN THIS, THEREFORE, &c.

ἤδη καὶ ταύτη.—ἤδη—already—even in the first operation of his genius—the very choice of his subject, and formation of his plan. Such appears to me to be the force of ἤδη in this passage, which, I think, is injured by those commentators who punctuate—ὥσπερ εἶπομεν ἤδη—“as we have already said.”

NOTE 211.

P. 177. HE HAS, FROM THE REST, INTRODUCED MANY EPISODES—.

Νυν δὲ, ἐν μέρει ἀπολαβὼν, ἐπεισοδίοις κίχρηται ΑΤΤΩΝ πολλοίς.—i. e. as the commentators explain it, of the other parts of the war. But, what should we think of this English—“Selecting one part of the war, he introduces many episodes of them?” If Aristotle meant the other parts of the war, αὐτῶν must, surely, be wrong: if αὐτῶν be right, I confess I cannot see what he meant. I wish we had manuscript authority for the αὐτῶν of Heinsius, which is adopted and explained by Le Bossu, II. 5, and 6.—But a learned friend has suggested to me a conjecture still more probable; that Aristotle wrote ΑΛΛΩΝ. Νυν δὲ, ἔν μέρει ἀπολαβὼν, ἐπεισοδίοις κίχρηται ΑΛΛΩΝ [sc. μέρων] πολλοίς. “Selecting one part only of the war, he has, from other parts, introduced many Episodes,” &c.

NOTE 212.

P. 178. THE AUTHOR OF THE CYPRIACS, AND OF THE LITTLE ILIAD.

To the authors usually referred to on the subject of these Poems, it may now be useful to add Heyne, Excursu primo ad Æn. II. p. 228, 229—a very learned and curious dissertation concerning the writers on the Trojan war.

NOTE 213.

P. 179. THE FALL OF TROY.

See Heyne, Excursu primo ad Æn. II. p. 230, 231.

NOTE 214.

P. 179. HOMER GAVE BOTH THE FIRST, AND THE MOST PERFECT, EXAMPLE.

Ὅς ἀπασιν Ὅμηρος κειμήται, καὶ πρῶτος, καὶ ἰκανός.—“ Neque quemquam alium, cujus operis “ primus auctor fuerit, in eo perfectissimum, “ præter HOMERUM, et Archilochum, reperie-“ mus.” Vell. Patérculus, I. 5.

Victorius, and other commentators, have, I think, done some injustice to the force of Aristotle's expression here, by taking the adverb, ἰκανός, too literally. They render it—“ ita ut satis putari debeat.” (Vict.)—“ accurate satis.” (Goulston.) &c.—This gives the word, indeed, but falls short of the meaning, which Castelvetro alone has,

according to my idea, adequately expressed:
 “ Gran lode è quella, che è data da Aristotele ad “ Homero, che egli sia stato il primo, che abbia “ usate tutte e quattro le spetie dell’ Epopea, &c.— “ e le habbia usate benie & perfettamente.” And his translation is—“ Le quali cose tutte Homero “ usò, e primiero, e perfettamente.” Undoubtedly, the literal meaning of ixavac is, sufficiently well;
 but in Poetry nothing is sufficiently well, that is not as well, or nearly as well, as possible: and,
 farther, if I am not mistaken, the Greek writers, not unfrequently, use ixai⊙, and ixavac, as the Italians use the word assai; sometimes for enough, (which, I suppose, is the primary signification of assai,) and sometimes for much, a great deal, very, &c. Ἰκανὸν—ἀρκούν, ΠΟΛΛΗΝ. Hesych.

NOTE 215.

P. 180. IF THE EPIC POEM WERE REDUCED FROM ITS ANTIENT LENGTH, SO AS NOT TO EXCEED THAT OF SUCH A NUMBER OF TRA-GEDIES AS ARE PERFORMED SUCCESSIVELY AT ONE HEARING.

If we knew certainly, how many Tragedies were performed at one hearing, (εἰς μίαν ἀκρόασιν,) we should know, with equal certainty, to what length Aristotle thought the Epic Poem ought to be reduced, in order to be perfectly, or sufficiently, ἐγγυνοπτον. But, unfortunately, the premises here
 are

are not less obscure than the conclusion; the information to be picked up in antient authors, relative to the Tragic contests and the Tetralogiæ, being extremely imperfect and unsatisfactory. Let us however try, what little glimmering of light may be thrown upon this subject, from those authors, or from the nature of the thing itself.

The general principle, upon which Aristotle here fixes the length of an Epic Poem, is the same with that, upon which he fixes the length of a Tragedy: viz. "that it should be such as to admit of our comprehending, at one view, the beginning and the end. And this," he goes on, "would be the case, were it reduced from its antient length, so as not to exceed that of such a number of Tragedies, as are performed successively at one hearing." Here then is a rule, which, at the time he wrote it, was as clear and determinate, as if he had expressly said, that an Epic Poem ought not to exceed a certain number of verses. But, as an ingenious friend has suggested to me, "he probably chose to put his rule in the way he has put it, rather than in this latter way, as wishing to convey an intimation, that the length of an Epic Poem should be such, as would admit of its being fairly recited, or read, in a single day."

It seems to have been a commonly received opinion, that the four dramas of each Poet, which composed the Tetralogiæ, were always performed
at

at one hearing—in one day*. In this case, if one Poet only produced his Tetralogia, there could be but four Tragedies; if two, there must be eight; if three, twelve, and so on: there could be no intermediate numbers. In so obscure a subject, I certainly shall not take upon me to decide. The passage, however, commonly adduced, I believe, as the principal authority in this matter, from Diogenes Laërtius, appears to me to be against this supposition. The words are these: Εκείνοι [sc. Tragici] τετρασι δραμασιν ἡγωνίζοντο, Διονυσίοις, Ἀθηναίοις, Παναθηναίοις, Χυτρίοις, ὡς το τετραγον ἢ σατυρικόν· τα δὲ τεττερα δραματα ἱκαλεῖτο Τετραλογία†.—Here are four festivals, and four dramas; and the most obvious meaning of the passage, surely, is, that each contending Poet produced, not his entire Tetralogia at the same festival, but one Tragedy only at each different festival. And so Is. Casaubon appears to have understood it. “Quot Athenis Liberalia agitantur, tot fabulas diversas a Tragicis Poetis doceri solitas legimus”‡. But it seems difficult to reconcile this account with what is generally, I think, said, and what Casaubon himself has elsewhere said, of the satyric piece; viz. that it was played between, or after, the serious Tragedies, on each festival, by way of relaxation and relief.

* See Dacier, p. 118.

† Diog. Laert. III. 56.

‡ De Satyr. Græc. Poes. lib. i. cap. 5.

relief^c. For, to say, that of the four dramas exhibited by each Poet on the four different festivals, the fourth was a satyric drama, (ὁ 79 TETAPTON ἢ σατυρικόν,) is to say, pretty plainly, that all the satyric pieces were performed together at the fourth and last festival, the Xurpoi. And so indeed some commentators seem to have understood it^d. Perhaps the matter might, not unreasonably, be compromised, by supposing the rule, in fact, to have been, that, of the different Poets contending on each day, one should always produce the satyric drama of his Tetralogia, and that drama always close the exhibition of the day.—But I forbear to indulge conjecture farther upon this dark subject. Let us return to Aristotle and his rule.

Dacier tells us, very gravely, that twelve, and sometimes sixteen, Tragedies were performed in one day^e: an account, which, upon the very face of it, exceeds all bounds of probability. It is rather rather difficult to conceive, that the representation of a single Tragedy could take up less time than three hours. If however we suppose it to have taken up only two, and also, what could hardly be the case, that Tragedy succeeded Tragedy without any intermission, just as scene succeeded scene in the same piece, the whole exhibition of the day, according to Dacier's lowest statement, would have taken up 24, and according to his highest, 32 hours. But is it conceivable, that any audience, however intemperate their fondness for this amusement, could sit so many hours together to hear Tragedies, and to hear them attentively, so as to judge of, and decide upon, their comparative merits?—This account, therefore, of Dacier, that the number of Tragedies performed “at one hearing,” and to the same audience, (for that is implied,) amounted to twelve, we may venture at once to reject as the most palpable impossibility. Shall we then suppose eight, the next lowest number possible, on the supposition, that the four dramas of the Tetralogia were exhibited in one day? The representation of eight Tragedies, we may venture to say, could not possibly take up less time than sixteen hours. Let any man conceive himself sitting in a Theatre, and hearing Tragedy after Tragedy, from six o'clock in the morning till ten at night, and then pronounce as to the probability of even this supposition. If we reject this number, and still adhere to the common notion notion of these exhibitions, we shall be reduced to a single Tetralogia; in which case there can have been no rival exhibition on the same day. It seems therefore impossible to adjust this matter in any reasonable way, without supposing, that the four dramas of the Tetralogia were exhibited on different festivals: a supposition, I think, fairly deducible from the passage of Diog. Laertius above quoted. A supposition too, which seems to be rendered more probable from the very nature of rival exhibitions; as each contending Poet would then produce his drama at the same hearing, each hearing would be a distinct day of contest, and there would be, at each contest, a sufficient ground of judgment upon the comparative merits of each performance. This idea will allow us to assign about twelve hours, as the utmost time taken up by the whole exhibition of the day; and the great difference of length, which we observe in the Greek Tragedies that are extant, will also allow us to conclude, that, occasionally, five, or possibly even six Tragedies, might be brought within that compass, or nearly so¹. On this ground, then,

^c De Satyr. Græc. Poes. lib. i. cap. iii. p. 128.

^d Chyris] Genus hoc certaminis satyrici fuit, ut ex Laertii verbis apparet, in quo, dramate satyrorum proprio certaretur. Dio. Laert. ed. Mcib. III. 56, note 205.

^e P. 118, note 15.—This reminds one of the account given of Chinese plays, “dont la representation dure dix ou douze jours de suite, en y comprenant la nuit, jusqu’ à ce que les spectateurs & les acteurs las de se succéder éternellement, en allant boire, manger, dormir, & continuer la piece, ou assister au spectacle, sans que rien y soit interrompu, se retirent enfin tous, comme de concert.” Brumoy, Theatre des Grecs, I. 53.

it

¹ See NOTE 64. p. 54. There are not 1100 verses in any of the seven Tragedies of Æschylus, except the Agamemnon. Some of those of Euripides fall short of 1200 lines: e.g.—the Alcestis, Heraclides, Rhesus. Several are within 1300. It should also be considered, that the satyric dramas, which probably closed the entertainment of the day, were, perhaps, considerably shorter than the serious

it will appear, I believe, that the extent, to which Aristotle proposed to limit the Epic Poem, could hardly exceed that of about 7000 lines.

But, if we admit this, we must of course admit, that he meant to include the Poems of Homer in the number of those which he regarded as too long. And that he did so mean, however unwilking Dacier and other commentators are to allow it, I have no doubt*. For, 1. The actual length of those Poems seems sufficiently to prove this. The number of lines in the Iliad is nearly 15,000; in the Odyssey, nearly 12,000. Now whoever can believe it possible, that an audience could sit, and make a common practice of sitting, 22, or even 18 hours together, to hear Tragedies, (which, at the lowest allowance, of two hours only for the performance of each piece, must have been the case, if Homer's Poems fell within Aristotle's rule,) may believe, that he thought those Poems of a proper length. Dacier, indeed, tells serious Tragedies, as is the case with our farces; at least, if we may judge from the only drama extant of the kind, the Cyclops of Euripides, in which there are but 709 verses.

* Beni and Piccolomini are of my opinion. See their commentaries. Victorius, too, though by ἄρχαυον he understands the Poets before Homer's time, yet, by his explanation of Aristotle's rule, plainly supposes Homer to be glanced at; for he makes the time, allowed by the critic for the recitation of an Epic Poem, to be only eight hours. P. 250.

tells us, that even the Iliad may be read through in a single day ^b. For a wager, indeed, I will not say what might be done, if we had reading races at Newmarket. But, 2. Had Aristotle meant to except Homer, why not expressly except him? Gladly as he appears to seize every opportunity of giving the Poet his just praise, would he not, here also, have opposed his conduct to that of other Poets, as he has done in so many other instances? Or why, indeed, refer us to the number of Tragedies successively performed in one day, when he might as well have referred at once to the Iliad, or the Odyssey? All this seems to leave no doubt, that he thought those Poems drawn out to too great a length. And this is also conformable to what he afterwards says, of the advantage which the Tragic has above the Epic Poem in this circumstance, that it effects its purpose "in a shorter compass" — ἐν ἑλαττοῖς μέτρει ¹. I do not forget what he had said in the preceding chapter—that if Homer had taken the whole war for his subject, his Poem would not have been εὐσυνοπτον: which, it may be urged, implies, that he thought it was εὐσυνοπτον as Homer had managed it, and therefore not too long. But the contradiction here is merely apparent.

^b — "L'Iliade, l'Odyssée, & l'Eneïde, sont entièrement conformes à la règle d'Aristote: elles peuvent être lues chacune dans un seul jour." P. 415.

¹ Cap. ult. — The proverbial expression, μακροτέρως διαδιδάσκει, is well known.

apparent. The εἰσυνοπτον admits of degrees; and all that Aristotle appears to mean, in the passage before us, is, that the Poems of Homer would have been more εἰσυνοπτα, and, in that respect, more perfect, had they been shorter.

But, to return once more to the dramatic exhibitions—the time of twelve hours seems to be the very utmost that can reasonably be allowed, and is more, I believe, than will readily be allowed, without considering the particular character of the Athenians, and the circumstances attending these theatrical exhibitions. The intemperate fondness of that people for these amusements is well known; and Aristotle himself gives us a pretty strong picture of it, when he says, though only in the way of hyperbolical supposition, “if A HUNDRED Tragedies were to be exhibited in concurrence^k.” We must, also, consider the variety of subjects in the different Tragedies performed, and, indeed, the variety resulting from the very nature of the Greek drama, with its choral troop, its odes, its accompaniments of music and dance: the relief, also, of the satyric drama, which closed the performance by way of Farce; the pleasure of comparing the rival Poets and actors, the zeal of party in favour of this, or that, particular Poet or performer, &c.—And we may add to all this a curious circumstance in the dramatic history of the Greeks; that the people never sate ἀστικοὶ θεωροῦντες, but eat, and drank, drank, and regaled themselves with cakes, and nuts, and wine, during the performance, like an English audience at Sadler's Wells, or Bartholomew Fair¹.

^k Part II. Sect. 4.—Orig. cap. vii. See NOTE 64.

In the whole theatrical system of the antients, and every thing relating to it, all seems to have been proportionably vast, extravagant, and gigantic. Their immense theatres, their colossal dresses, the stilts, buskins, or heroic pattens, on which the actor was mounted^m, their masks that covered the whole head, their loud, chanting, and speaking-trumpet declamationⁿ—all this is upon the same scale with the intemperate eagerness of the people for these amusements, the number of Tragedies exhibited in one day, and, we may add, the almost incredible number said to have been written even by their best Poets.—Would not this last circumstance alone, supposing not a single drama to have been preserved, have furnished a reasonable proof, à priori, or, at least, a strong presumption, that the Greek Tragedy must have been, in many respects,

¹ See Athen. p. 464, F. and Casaub. Animadvers. p. 779, and the passage there cited from Aristotle's Ethic. Nicom.

^m The reader will find a curious description of the dress and figure of the antient Tragic actors in Lucian's treatise De Salt. p. 924. ed. Ben. and De Gymnas. p. 406, 415. But he will allow something for the exaggerations of a man of humour. See also, the Gallus, p. 263.

ⁿ See Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, I. p. 154, and Pl. IV. Fig. 1, 2, 3.

respects, a simple, unequal, imperfect thing, just such as, in fact, and prejudice apart, we find it to be? SOPHOCLES, confessedly the most correct and polished of the three great Tragic Poets, is said to have written above an hundred Tragedies[†].

NOTE 216.

P, 181. FOR, IN THIS RESPECT ALSO, THE NARRATIVE IMITATION IS ABUNDANT, AND VARIOUS, BEYOND THE REST.

Περιττή γὰρ καὶ ἡ διηγηματικὴ μίμησις τῶν ἄλλων.—
περιττή is rendered, by almost all the commentators, eximia, præstantior, more excellent, than the other imitations; which makes Aristotle directly contradict himself. And this Victorius allows, at the same time that he adheres to that sense:—“præstantiorem esse [hanc poesin] inter cæteras, et “altiozem locum tenere.” How this can be reconciled with the critic’s decided preference of Tragedy in the last chapter, I do not see. I believe Dacier is right, in giving to περιττή, in this passage, the sense of, more abundant—la plus excessive de toutes^{*}. The text, however, appears to [†] See NOTE 33. vol. i.

[†] 123: See Suidas. Fabric. Bib. Græc.—Casaub. in Athen. p. 496.

^{*} The same sense is given to the word by Robortelli; but he understands περιττή τῶν ἄλλων—abundant in other things also: a sense which, I believe, the phrase will not bear; besides that, for this purpose, the καὶ should be otherwise placed—καὶ τῶν ἄλλων.

to me to be defective: for what becomes of the και, which Dacier, and other translators, have been forced to neglect? The only fair version of the passage, as we now read it, is this:—"for the narrative imitation ALSO, is more abundant," &c, ΚΑΙ ἡ διηγ. μιμ.—of which I can make no reasonable sense.—Farther, some word seems wanting, to express in what the Epic is περιττη; and this Dacier found himself obliged to supply in his translation and note: en cela la plus excessive—. I cannot, therefore, help suspecting, that τατοις [sc. ξενικοις ὀνομασι], or rather ταυτη, has been omitted; and that we should read thus—περιττη γαρ, και ΤΑΥΤΗ, ἡ διηγηματικη μιμησις των ἄλλων^b. "In this respect too"—alluding to the several other respects mentioned in this chapter, in which the Epic imitation was περιττη των ἄλλων: as, in the time of its action, and the length of the Poem itself; in its Episodes, and the variety and μεγαλοπρεπεια arising from them, and from the admission of contemporary events; in the degree, also, to which it admits of the wonderful, and even the incredible^c. This, also, agrees perfectly with what he had said, cap. xxii. και ἐν μὲν τοις ἥρωικοις ΑΠΑΝΤΑ χρησιμα τα εἰρημενα.

^b So above, cap. xxiii.—ΚΑΙ ΤΑΥΤΗ, θεσπεσιον ἂν φανη Ομηρον παρα τας ἄλλας.

^c See what presently follows in this chapter: Part III, Sect. 4. of the translation.

NOTE 217.

P. 181. HAVE MORE MOTION.

Κινητικά. The scruple of Victorius, who proposed to read κίνητα, from a doubt, whether κίνητικα would admit of a passive sense, seems to have been ill-founded. The passage in Plutarch, De primo frigido, referred to by Goulston in his note, is this: ὡς βραδύνα καὶ ΣΤΑΣΙΜΟΣ [αντικίνηται] πρὸς ἐξυρρίσπον καὶ ΚΙΝΗΤΙΚΟΝ. p. 1755, ed. H. S. But the word is used in the same sense by Aristotle himself, in the 50th of the Harmonic Problems, p. 770, where κίνητικόν is applied to the acuter sound of a concord, on account of the velocity of its vibrations, and opposed to ἡρεμαίον, by which he characterizes the graver sound.

NOTE 218.

P. 181. THE OTHER, ADAPTED TO ACTION AND BUSINESS.

Πρακτικόν. See NOTE 45. p. 3. of this volume.

NOTE 219.

P. 182. THE POET, IN HIS OWN PERSON, &c.

The reader may compare Plato's account of Homer, De Rep. lib. iii. p. 393, ed. Serr. p. 178, ed. Massey.

NOTE 220.

P. 182. BUT EPIC POETRY ---- ADMITS
EVEN THE IMPROBABLE AND INCREDIBLE, FROM WHICH THE HIGHEST DEGREE OF THE SURPRISING RESULTS, BECAUSE, THERE, THE ACTION IS NOT SEEN.

Δει μὲν ἔν ἐν ταῖς Τραγῳδίαις ποιεῖν το θαυμαστονμαλλον δ' ἐνδεχεται ἐν τῇ ἐποποιῷα το ἀλογον, δι' ὃ συμβαίνει μαλιστα το θαυμαστον, δια το μη ὄραν εἰς τον πραττοντα.—Such is the reading which I have followed. The sense, which I have given it, accords very nearly, if not exactly, with that given by Victorius and Goulston, and adopted by Dacier and M. Batteux*. Victorius supports his emendation—ΑΛΟΓΟΝ, instead of ἀναλογον—by reasons of considerable cogency: viz. the difficulty, or, rather, the impossibility, of making any satisfactory sense of το ἀναλογον, as the rest of the passage stands^b; the explanatory instance itself,
which

* — “ Mais encore plus dans l'Épopée, qui va en “ cela jusq' au deraisonnable ; car, comme dans l'Épopée “ on ne voit pas les personnes qui agissent, tout ce qui “ passe les bornes de la raison est très propre à y pro“ duire l'admirable & le merveilleux.” Dacier.—
“ L'Épopée, pour étonner encore plus, va jusq' à l'in-“ croyable ; parce que ce qui se fait chez elle n'est point “ jugé par les yeux.”—Batteux.

^b If ἀναλογον be right, it can be understood no otherwise, I believe, than adverbially—ἀναλογως—in proportion ;

which immediately follows, and is, plainly, an instance of the ἀλογον, and even expressly called γελειον, ridiculously improbable; and the similar instance, presently after given, of the landing of Ulysses in the Odyssey, which he expressly calls, τα ἐν Οδυσσειᾳ ΑΛΟΓΑ, &c.

But, though I think the sense of the passage, thus read, and thus explained, is, in itself, unexceptionable, yet I can by no means rely with perfect confidence upon the reading from which it is obtained. All the manuscripts, it seems, give, with one consent, ΑΝΑΛΟΓΟΝ. This circumstance, as it has been understood by those commentators who have adhered to that reading. But, in proportion to what? Castelvetro explains it thus: “Ma, se si conviene fare la maraviglia nella Tragedia, molto più si conviene, ed è licito, à farla nell’ epopea secondo proportionem. Quasi dica—se in una attione ristretta al termino d’un giorno, & allo spatio d’un palco, [of a stage,] si fa maraviglia, che sia d’un grado, si dovrà fare in attione che sia, poggiamó, di trentasette giorni, e avvenuta in mare & in terra, quale è l’attione compresa nell’ Odissea, secondo proportionem, di trenta e sette gradi:—e, το ἀναλογον, è detto averbialmente, come se fosse, ἀναλογως.” p. 549.—I know not how the reader will relish this Rule of Three explanation.—But what is to be made of the διο, which follows?—“Wherefore” [i. e. because the Epic is more capable of the surprising than Tragedy] συμβαινει μαλιστα το θαυμαστον—“the surprising occurs, or is to be found, most in the Epic Poem, because there the action is not seen.”—I see no other fair translation of the passage, according to the old reading.

stance, in a passage not free, in other respects, from suspicion, should be sufficient to prevent our admitting the emendation of Victorius, however probable, without some reserve — “expectandi codices.” I should perhaps, therefore, have done better, had I omitted the doubtful part of the passage—the words, το ἀναλογον, διο μαλιστα συμβαινει το θαυμασον: for the omission will leave a clear and complete sense; and, moreover, a sense, in which the only meaning that can well be given to the words omitted, seems, in fact, to be implied. Δει μιν ἐν ἐν ταῖς τραγωδῖαις ποιεῖν το θαυμασον· μαλλον δ’ ἐνδεχεται ἐν τῇ ἐποποιῇ, — δια τα μη ὄραν εἰς τον πραττοντα. “The surprising is “necessary in Tragedy: but the Epic Poem “admits of it to a greater degree, — because, “there, the action is not seen.”

NOTE 221.

P. 183. ACHILLES MAKING SIGNS, &c.

The passage is this:

Λαοισιν δ’ ANENETE KAPHATI δι’ Αχιλλευς,
 Ουδ’ εἰα ἔμεναι ἐπὶ Ἑκτορι πικρα βελεμνα,
 Μη τις κυδ’ αἶροίτο βαλων, ὁ δὲ δευτεροῦ ἐλθοι.

Il. 22. 205.

NOTE 222.

P. 183-4. IT CONSISTS IN A SORT OF SOPHISM, &c.

In the words, δι’ ὃ δὴ ἀν — to προσθῆναι, inclusively, the text seems evidently mangled beyond all hope of conjectural restoration. This ulcus insanabile I presume not to touch, either as commentator, or as translator. I can make nothing consistent of it myself: I have seen nothing consistent made of it by others.

The words, τατα δε εστι ψευδος, are ambiguous. Victorius doubts, whether they mean, "this posterior fact is false," (the τοδι γινεται), or, "this conclusion is false"—namely, ει το υστερον εστι, και το προτερον ειναι. What follows, had it been tolerably clear, would, probably, have fixed the sense of ψευδος. As this is not the case, I have given it that sense which appears to me most obvious; and I think I am warranted by the very same expression used in the same sense, in the Rhetoric, II. 23. p. 579, A. where, εστι δε τατο ψευδος, clearly means, this is a false conclusion.

But the most important question is, in what manner Aristotle meant to apply this logical paralogism to Homer's management of fiction. None of the commentators, whom I have seen, appear to me to have given any satisfactory explanation.

The paralogism παρ' επομεινον, α consequenti, here alluded to, the reader will find clearly explained in several parts of the philosopher's other works*. It consists in taking a proposition as convertible, that is not so. Because rain wets the ground, we conclude, when we see the ground wet, that it must

* Tom. I. p. 286, A. and B. Sect. 6, 7, 8.—Rhet. II. 24. p. 580, E. ed. Duval.

must have rained. Because every man in a fever is hot, we conclude, that a person who is hot must be in a fever: ἀνάγκη ΚΑΙ τον θερμον πυρεττειν^b. These are some of Aristotle's own explanatory instances.—Now, he tells us here, that Homer's art of lying—ψευδη λεγειν ὡς δει—consists in imposing his marvellous fictions upon the reader's imagination by a sort of poetic sophism, similar to this logical sophism. And this is all he says. He has left us to make out the similitude as well as we can. No writer, I believe, ever paid more frequent compliments of this kind to the sagacity of his readers.

Dacier, with other commentators, seems to understand nothing more, than that artful intermixture of historical, or acknowledged, truth, which, by throwing the mind, as it were, into a posture of belief and conviction, has its effect even upon what we know to be feigned, and makes the false pass glibly with the true. But I cannot think, that this comes up to Aristotle's meaning, nor that his observation, here, amounts only to that of Strabo:—ἐκ μηδενος ἀληθους ἀναπτειν καινην τερατολογιαν, ἔχ Ομηρικον, κ.τ.αλ^c. For no one has attempted to shew, and I believe no one can shew, how that, which Aristotle says of the particular paralogism denominated παρ' ἐπομενον, is applicable applicable to the intermixture—the mere juxtaposition, of fact and fiction.

^b Tom. I. ubi supra.

^c Lib. I.—And see Dacier's note, p. 427.

The similitude of the logical and poetic sophism appears to me to be this. It is not merely, that, where there is a mixture of history and fiction, the truth makes the fiction pass; but the comparison, I think, relates to the connection between the fictions of the Poet, considered as cause and effect, as antecedent and consequent. The Poet invents certain extraordinary characters, incidents, and situations. When the actions, and the language, of those characters, and, in general, the consequences of those events, or situations, as drawn out into detail by the Poet, are such as we know, or think, to be true—that is to say, poetically true, or natural; such, as we are satisfied must necessarily, or would probably, follow, if such characters and situations actually existed; this probability, nature, or truth, of representation, imposes on us, sufficiently for the purposes of Poetry. It induces us to believe, with hypothetical and voluntary faith, the existence of those false events, and imaginary personages, those αἰδυνάτα, ἀλογα, ψευδη—those marvellous and incredible fictions, which, otherwise managed, we should have rejected: that is, their improbability, or impossibility, would have so forced themselves upon our notice, as to destroy, or disturb, even the slight and willing illusion of the moment.

Whenever,

Whenever, says the philosopher, supposing such a thing to be, it would certainly be followed by such effects; if we see those effects, we are disposed to infer the existence of that cause. And thus, in Poetry, and all fiction, this is the logic of that temporary imposition on which depends our pleasure. The reader of a play, or a novel, does not, indeed, syllogize, and say to himself-- "Such beings as are here supposed, had they existed, must have acted and spoken exactly in this manner; therefore, I believe they have existed:"—but he feels the truth of the premises, and he consents to feel the truth of the conclusion; he does not revolt from the imagination of such beings. Every thing follows so naturally, and, even, as it seems, so necessarily, that the probability and truth of nature, in the consequences, steals, in a manner, from our view, even the impossibility of the cause, and flings an air of truth over the whole. With respect to fact, indeed, all is equally ψευδῆς; for if the causes exist not, neither can the effects. But the consequent lies are so told, as to impose on us, for the moment, the belief of the antecedent, or fundamental lie^d.

For instances of this art, no reader can be at a loss. He will find them, not only in almost all the ^d Hobbes, with his usual acuteness, observes, that "probable fiction is similar to reasoning rightly from a false principle." p. 13, of his works, Sect. 9.

the "speciosa miracula" of Homer, but even in the wilder and more absurd miracles of Ariosto; whose poem is, indeed, a striking example of the most improbable, and, in themselves, revolting *lies, to which, however, every poetical reader willingly throws open his imagination; principally, I believe, from the easy charm of his language and versification, and the remarkable distinctness of his painting; but, partly too, from the truth and nature which he has contrived to fling into the detail of his description. But were I to chuse, from the productions of poetic genius at large, an example, which would, singly, illustrate this passage of Aristotle, more than any other that I recollect, it should be the Caliban of Shakspeare.

I shall only add, without troubling the reader with any comment of mine, one passage of the Rhetoric, which may serve, both to illustrate the parallogism itself, here alluded to, and to confirm the application which I have given it. In that passage, Aristotle applies the parallogism παρ' ἐπομινον, to the effect of oratorical elocution, in producing persuasion and conviction in the hearers.

----- Πιθανοὶ δὲ τὸ πρᾶγμα, καὶ ἡ οἰκία λέξις.
ΠΑΡΑΛΟΓΙΖΕΤΑΙ γὰρ ἡ ψυχὴ, ὡς κληθὼς λεγόντων, ὅτι,

* It may be said of this Poet, in the language of Shakspeare's Coriolanus, that he has—

Murder'd impossibility, to make

What cannot be, slight work.— Act v. Sc. 3.

ὅτι, ἐπὶ τοῖς τοῖστοις, ἔτως ἔχεται ὥς οἰόνται, εἰ καὶ μη ἔτως ἔχῃ, ὥς ὁ λέγων, τα πρᾶγματα, ἔτως ἔχον^f.—

“What the Orator says, is, likewise, rendered “probable and credible by a suitable diction and “elocution. For we are cheated into the per“suasion, that the orator speaks truly, merely “because we know that men, so circumstanced “as he assumes to be, are actually affected in “that manner: so that we take it for granted, “that things are really as the speaker represents “them to be, when, in fact, they are not so.”

The art here pointed out by Aristotle, as eminent in Homer's poetry, evidently extends to fiction in general; but, by ψευδή, I understand him to allude, chiefly, to fictions of the extraordinary, marvellous, and improbable kind—such as require the utmost art and management of the Poet to make them pass. The connection of the whole passage, if I am not mistaken, shews this to be the author's meaning; the application of ψευδή being fixed, both by the terms θαυμασον, and ἄλογον, in what precedes, and by the ἀδυνατα καὶ εἰκότα which follow, and which I take to be, or, at least, to include, those very ψευδῆ λεγόμενα ὥς δα, of which he had, immediately before, been speaking.

^f Rhet. III. 7. p. 590.—See also, ib. cap. xvi. p. 603, E. ἐτι, ἐκ τῶν παθητικῶν, &c. a passage, which Victorius cites as illustrating the words—διὰ γὰρ το εἶδεναι, &c.

NOTE 223.

P. 186. IF, HOWEVER, ANY THING OF THIS KIND, &c.

I much doubt of the integrity of the text. The sense I have given seems to be the only one, which the passage as it now stands, will reasonably bear. Dacier, after Victorius, understands—"if the admission of one improbable circumstance be the means of giving more probability to the rest." I do not well comprehend this. I am sure it is not what Aristotle has said. His words are, ἀν δε θεη, και φαινηται εὐλογωτερον—i. e. "if he has introduced such a circumstance, or incident, and it (not the rest, the whole) has some appearance of probability," &c.

I suppose Aristotle meant to say, that, though improbabilities are certainly faults, and ought to be carefully avoided in the first choice and structure of a fable, yet, they might be so well managed by a Poet of genius, (especially in the Epic, which is here the subject,) as to appear rather probable—εὐλογωτερον;—to pass with some shew of probability; and, in this case, should be admitted, or tolerated, even though pushed to the ἀτοπον, or absurd. This sense accords perfectly with what immediately follows, which is precisely an instance of such management; of absurdity, or, at least, improbability, (τα ἐν Οδυσσῆα ἀλογα—) veiled by the charms of poetry, and finding almost as ready an admission into the imagination of the reader, under the passport of the beauties by which it is accompanied, as if it were, in itself, ever so consonant to nature and experience. With respect to the words—ἰνδισθαι και ἀτοπον—it seems necessary to adopt one, or the other of the two manuscript readings—ἰνδισθαι, or ἀποδισθαι. The former of these verbs Mr. Winstanley takes in the sense of ἀπαργεν, κωλυειν, upon the authority of Suidas. But in the very passage adduced by that lexicographer, the immediate sense of ἰνδισθαι is, to receive. Γερρα τε παρατιταγμένα ἦν, εἰς το ΕΚΔΕΧΕΣΘΑΙ τα των βαρβαρων τοξευματα. i.e. to receive them; and by receiving them to keep them off from their bodies. Arcere, here, is only what we may call the consequential meaning of the word. I do not see, that it may not, in this place, very well bear the sense of receiving, admitting, or, rather, tolerating: but of this I would not be understood to speak positively. This seems, at least, to be the sense, which the purport of the passage requires; and it refers, I think, not to the Poet himself, as some understand it, but to the audience, or the reader. When Aristotle has just said, ἀν δε θη—i.e. “but “if he has introduced, or admitted it,” how can he be understood to add, “he should admit it?” Farther, the word ἀνεκτα, (tolerabilia,) which, in the instance immediately subjoined, clearly relates to the hearer, or reader, seems sufficiently to fix the

the same reference of the correspondent word, ἰκδεχίσθαι, or ἀποδεχίσθαι, here.

Mr. Harris, in his Philol. Inquiries, p. 220, though he has not quoted, or translated, this particular passage, appears, pretty clearly, to allude to it, and to have understood the verb as here explained. He says, speaking of improbabilities in the drama—" 'Tis true, indeed, did such plays exist," [ἀν δε θη—] "and were their other dramatic requisites good, these improbabilities might be endured, and the plays be still admired."

The version of Piccolomini agrees with mine:—
"Ma se, ponendovisi poi qualche cosa, che in se
"habbia del non ragionevole, si adorerà, e si
"tratterà, in maniera, ch'ella apparir possa ragio-
"nevole, potrà, in tal caso, trovarvi luogo." p. 392.

NOTE 224.

P. 186. THE ABSURDITY IS CONCEALED UNDER THE VARIOUS BEAUTIES, &c.

In the language of Pindar,—

Και πε τι και βροτων φρενας, ὑπερ τον ἀληθη λογον, δεδαυδαλμενοι ψευδεσι ποικιλοις ἐξαπατωντι μυθοι.

XAPIΣ

-
- “ L’homme est de glace aux verités, “ Il est de feu pour les mensonges.”

La Fontaine, Fab. 174.

Α Α 2

ΧΑΡΙΣ δ', ἅπερ ἅπαντα τευ-
 -χει τα μείλιχα θνατοῖς,
 ἐπιφεροῖσα τιμάν,
 ΚΑΙ ΑΠΙΣΤΟΝ ἘΜΗΣΑΤΟ ΠΙΣΤΟΝ
 ΕΜΜΕΝΑΙ - - - - - . Olymp. I.

The reader, I believe, will be pleased with the comparison of a poetical passage so remarkably apposite to this observation of the philosopher; and, indeed, to all this part of his treatise, relative to the management of fiction.

On account of the same general relation to the subject, I may be excused for adding these agreeable lines of Plautus:—

Sed quasi Poeta, tabulas cum cepit sibi,
 Quærit quod nusquam est gentium, reperit tamen,
Facit illud verisimile quod mendacium est,— Nunc ego Poeta fiam. Pseud. Act I. Sc. 4.

NOTE 225.

P. 186. THE IDLE PARTS OF THE POEM—.

ἌΡΓΑ μνη. The expression is best explained, according to my idea of it, by Castelvetro.—
 “Dobbiamo — intendere per parti otiose, “quelle, nelle quali il poeta parla di sua persona,
 “e con favella sua ci fa vedere quello che si fa:
 “le quali perciò si domandano, μνη ἄργα, che “non sono in atto, ed operanti, come sono “quelle, le quali sono rappresentate in palco, e “quelle, nelle quali per gli poeti epopei sono “introdotte

“ introdotte le persone à favellare ; le quali parti, “ perche paiono pressochè montare in palco, ed “ operare, si contrapongono alle parti otiose, e “ contengono, principalmente, le sententie, ed, “ accessoriamente, i costumi.” p. 578.

Dacier’s “ parties foibles,” in which he is followed by M. Batteux, presents a different, and, I think, a wrong idea.

NOTE 226.

P. 186-7. IN WHICH NEITHER MANNERS
 NOR SENTIMENTS PREVAIL.

It has been inquired, why Aristotle here passes over in silence the passionate parts of the Poem ; to which a laboured and splendid diction seems as ill suited, as it is to the expression of manners and sentiments. This inquiry has produced another ; whether he did, or did not, mean to include the passionate parts in διανοητικαῖς. Madius contends that he did : Victorius, that he did not. I believe the latter is right. For if we take διανοία, here, in that wide sense which is given it in cap. xix *. it will include “ whatever is the object of speech ;”—“ every thing,” as Mr. Harris has explained it, “ for which men employ language.” If, therefore, the μετὰ διανοητικὰ, here, comprehend those thoughts which express passion, they will also comprehend such as express manners, or character ;
 from

* Transl. p. 159. vol. i. ^b Philol. Inq. p. 173, &c.

from which Aristotle expressly distinguishes them :
 μητε ἠθικοῖς, μητε διανοητικοῖς.

But, whether he did, or did not, mean to include the passionate parts of the Poem, it seems true, and he would probably have allowed it, that such a diction as he here describes is improper for the expression of passion : nor is this at all inconsistent, as, on a superficial view, it may seem to be, with the following passage in his Rhetoric.—Τα δὲ ὀνόματα, τὰ ἐπιθετά, καὶ διπλά πλείω, καὶ τὰ ξένα, μάλιστα ἀρμόττει λεγόντι ΠΑΘΗΤΙΚΩΣ· συγγνωμὴ γὰρ ἔργιζομένῳ, κακὸν φαναι “ ἄρανομηκες, ἢ πελωρίον” εἶπειν^c, &c. The strong and figurative language, and, what may be called, the natural Poetry of passion—a sort of Poetry which we every day hear from the mouths of those, who never made, and scarce, perhaps, ever read, a verse—this is a very different thing from the ΔΙΑΠΟΝΕΙΝ λέξει, the ΔΙΑΝ ΛΑΜΠΠΑ λέξις, of which the philosopher here speaks.—But, for an exact, though short, discussion of this subject, with its proper distinctions and limitations, I must refer the reader to an excellent note on v. 94, of Horace’s Epistle to the Pisos^d. It will be found, I think, perfectly consistent with both the passages of Aristotle here considered, and will afford the best support to the above remarks.—See NOTE 209.

^c Rhet. III. 7. p. 590, E.

^d Dr. Hurd’s Horace, vol. i. See, particularly, p. 79, 80.

NOTE 227.

P. 187. OBSCURED BY TOO SPLENDID A DICTION.

ΑΠΟΚΡΥΠΤΕΙ γὰρ παλιν ἡ λίαν λαμπρά λεξις τὰ ἤθη καὶ τὰς διανοίας.—In the same sense, in which ἐγκρυπτεται is used, in a similar passage of Longinus, Sect. 15.—where, speaking of the effect of lively imagery, in stealing one's attention from argument, he says, Φυσεὶ δὲ πως, ἐν τοῖς τοιςτοῖς ἀπάσιν, αἱ τε κρείττονες ἀκρομῶν ὄθεν, ἀπὸ τε ἀποδεικτικῆς περιελκομένη εἰς τὸ κατὰ φαντασίαν ἐκπληκτικόν, ὃ τὸ πραγματικόν ΕΓΚΡΥΠΤΕΤΑΙ ΠΕΡΙΛΑΜΠΟΜΕΝΟΝ.—So also, Sect. 17. —ΑΠΕΚΡΥΨΕ τὸ σχῆμα — — τῷ ΦΩΤΙ ΑΥΤΩ.—And again—διὰ ΛΑΜΠΡΟΤΗΤΑ — — τὴν τέχνην ΑΠΟΣΚΙΑΖΕΙ, καὶ οἷον ἐν ΚΑΤΑΚΑΛΥΨΕΙ τηρεῖ.

The following passage of the Rhetoric, concerning the mixture of the argumentative with the pathetic, will also help to illustrate that before us.—Καὶ ὅταν παθὼ ποιῆς, μὴ λεγὲ ἐνθυμημα· ἡ γὰρ ἐκκρεσσεὶ τὸ παθὼ, ἡ μάτην εἰρημενὸν εἶσαι, τὸ ἐνθυμημα· ἐκκρεσσει γὰρ αἱ κινήσεις ἀλλήλας, αἱ ἀμα· καὶ, ἡ ΑΦΑΝΙΖΟΥΣΙΝ, ἡ ἀσθενεῖς ποιεῖσιν, Rhet. III. 17. p. 604, E.

In the same manner the expression of Aristotle is well explained by Piccolomini, in his commentary, p. 394.

NOTE 228.

P. 189. IN WORDS, EITHER COMMON, OR FOREIGN, &c.

Λεξει ἡ καὶ γλωτταις—. Heins. ΚΥΡΙΑ: λεξει, ἡ καὶ γλωτταις. The insertion seems necessary, but would, perhaps, be better thus: λεξει, Ἡ ΚΥΡΙΑ, ἡ καὶ γλωτταις, &c. Victorius and other commentators suppose κυρια to be understood. But this I cannot conceive. Λεξις appears clearly to be used here, as in cap. xxii. for diction in general, including, as in that chapter, every sort of words.

NOTE 229.

P. 189. WHICH ARE THE PRIVILEGE OF POETS.

ΔΙΔΟΜΕΝ γὰρ ταῦτα τοῖς ποιηταῖς. The same expression is made use of by Isocrates, in the following passage, to which I referred in NOTE 5. vol. i. p. 239, and in which the privileges and advantages of the Poet are well set forth, and the importance of verse to the effect of even the best poetry, is strongly insisted on.

Τοῖς μὲν γὰρ ποιηταῖς πολλοὶ ΔΕΔΟΝΤΑΙ κοσμοί. Καὶ γὰρ πλησιαζοντας τοῖς ἀνθρώποις τῆς θεῆς οἶοντ' αὐτοῖς ἐς ποιησαι, καὶ διαλεγόμενες, καὶ συναγωνιζόμενες, οἷς ἂν βεληθῶσι· καὶ περὶ τετῶν δηλωσαι, μὴ μόνον τοῖς τεταγμένοις^a ὀνομασιν, ὀνομασιν, ἀλλὰ, τὰ μὲν, ξενοῖς, τὰ δὲ, καινοῖς, τὰ δὲ, μεταφοραῖς· καὶ μὴδὲν παραλιπεῖν, ἀλλὰ πᾶσι τοῖς εἶδεσι διαποικίλαι τὴν ποιησιν. Τοῖς δὲ περὶ τῆς λογῆς ὕδεν ἔξεσι τῶν τοικτῶν· ἀλλ' ἀποτομῶς, καὶ τῶν ὀνομάτων τοῖς πολιτικοῖς^δ, καὶ τῶν ἐνθυμημάτων τοῖς περὶ αὐτάς τας πράξεις, ἀναγκάσιον ἔστι χρῆσθαι. Πρὸς δὲ τούτοις, οἱ μὲν μετὰ μετρῶν καὶ ῥυθμῶν ἅπαντα ποιοῦσι· οἱ δὲ ὕδεν^ε τέτων κοινωνοῦσιν· ἃ τοσαύτην ἔχει χάριν, ὥς, ἂν καὶ τῇ λέξει, καὶ τοῖς ἐνθυμημασιν, ἔχῃ κακῶς, ὅμως ταῖς γε εὐρυθμίαις καὶ ταῖς συμμετρίαις ψυχαγωγῶσι τῆς ἀκκοῦτας. Καταμαθοὶ δ' ἂν τις ἐκείθεν τὴν δυνάμιν αὐτῶν· ἣν γὰρ τις τῶν ποιημάτων τῶν εὐδοκίμεντων τὰ μὲν ὀνόματα καὶ τὰς διανοίας καταλιπὴ, τὸ δὲ ΜΕΤΡΟΝ διαλύσῃ, φανήσεται πολὺ καταδέεσθαι τῆς δοξῆς, ἥς νῦν ἔχομεν περὶ αὐτῶν^ε. See NOTE 5. vol. i. p. 240, the passage from Plato.

^a τεταγμένοις, here, is equivalent to Aristotle's κυριοῖς; as, κεινοῖς, to his πεποιημένοις, and ξηνοῖς, to his γλωτταις.

NOTE 230.

P. 189. WHAT IS RIGHT IN THE POETIC ART, IS A DISTINCT CONSIDERATION FROM WHAT IS RIGHT IN THE POLITICAL, OR ANY OTHER ART.

This is one of those passages, which the commentators appear to me to have darkened by illustration. See, particularly, Dacier's note. His account of the difference between Poetry and all other ^δ See note 57. p. 36.

^ε Enag. circ. init.

other arts, seems evidently false. What Aristotle says of Poetry—that it has two kinds of faults, essential, and incidental—is, at least, true of all other imitative arts. It is even true, as Beni has shewn, of Rhetoric and Logic*. — Aristotle only ~~says~~ (to give the passage literally,) “the rightness of the poetic, and the rightness of the political art, are not the same; nor of any other art and the poetic art.” The plain meaning of which appears to me to be that which I have given—that the ῥητορικὴ, or rectitude, of Poetry itself, is not to be confounded with that of Politics, nor of any other art that may be the incidental subject of the Poetry, which, in itself, may be good, and even excellent, though it may deliver things false or inaccurate in Politics, Natural History, Navigation, Geography, &c. This sense of the passage seems clear of all the difficulties with which the common explanation is embarrassed, and leads naturally to the following division of the faults of Poetry, into essential and incidental.—Castelvetro is the only one, of the commentators I have consulted, who appears to agree with me, if I understand stand him rightly, in this explanation of the passage ^b.

* “Nam Rhetorica & Dialectica suos egredi fines solent, & in alienos campos excurrere, perinde ferè ac nos de Poeticâ docemus. Temerè igitur Aristoteles, quod inter Poeticam & Politicam notavit discrimen, idem inter Poeticam, rursus, ac cæteras artes, notasset: nam Rhetorica & Dialectica ejusdem videri possunt rectitudinis cum Poeticâ.” Benii Comm. in Arist. Poet. p. 460.

The allusion, here, to the severe objections of PLATO, who would allow of Poetry no farther than as it could be made to coincide with the views of his own strict and moral legislation, has been sufficiently pointed out. The reader may see, particularly, a fine passage to this purpose in the seventh book of his Laws, [p. 817, ed. Serr.] where, addressing the Tragic Poets, he refuses to admit them into his republic, till the magistrates have satisfied themselves, by inspection of their poems, that they contain nothing but what is in perfect unison with the laws and moral discipline of the state.—Μη δὲ δοξήτε ἡμᾶς ῥαδίως γε ἔτις ὑμᾶς ποτε παρ' ἡμῖν ἔασειν, σκηνας τε πηξάντας κατ' αἶγοραν, καὶ καλλιφώνες ὑποκριτὰς εἰσαγομένους, μείζον φθειγγομένους ἡμῶν, ἐπιτρέψειν ὑμῖν δημηγορεῖν πρὸς παῖδας τε καὶ γυναῖκας καὶ τὸν πάντα ὄχλον, τῶν αὐτῶν λεγόντας ἐπιτηδεύματων περὶ μὴ τὰ αὐτὰ ἀπὲρ ἡμεῖς, ἀλλ', ὥς το πολὺ, καὶ ἐναντία τῇ πλείσῃ. Σχιδὸν γὰρ τοὶ κ' αὖ μαινομένηα τελείως ἡμεῖς τε καὶ ἀπῶσα ἡ πόλις, ἥτις ἐν ὑμῖν ἐπιτρέποι δρᾶν τὰ νῦν λεγόμενα, πρὶν κριναὶ τὰς ἀρχὰς, εἴτε ῥήτα καὶ ἐπιτηδεῖα πεποιηκατέ λεγειν εἰς τὸ μέσον, εἴτε μὴ. Νῦν ἂν, ὦ παῖδες μαλακῶν μῦθων ἐκγόνοι, ἐπιδεικνύμενοι τοῖς ἀρχαῖσι πρῶτον τὰς ὑμετέρας παρὰ τὰς ἡμετέρας ὥδας, ἂν μὲν τὰ αὐτὰ γε, ἢ καὶ βελτίω, τὰ παρ' ὑμῶν φαίνεται λεγόμενα, δώσομεν ὑμῖν χορὸν· εἰ δὲ μὴ, ὦ φίλοι, ἐκ' αὖ ποτε δυναιμένηα.—

De

^b See p. 592, and 599, of his commentary.

De Leg. VII. p. 817.—To this way of talking it was a plain and direct answer, to say—Οὐχ' ἡ αὕτη ὀρθότης^c ἐστὶ τῆς ΠΟΛΙΤΙΚΗΣ καὶ τῆς ΠΟΙΗΤΙΚΗΣ.

In what is added—ἐπεὶ ἄλλης τεχνῆς καὶ ποιητικῆς—Aristotle may, I think, be supposed to glance more particularly at that part of the tenth book of Plato's Republic, where he exposes the idle notion, current among the rhapsodists, that Homer was a perfect master of all arts and sciences. And with respect to the absurdity of this notion, Aristotle undoubtedly agreed with him. But there was danger, lest the credit of Homer should suffer from the manner in which Plato combated this idea. For those extravagant admirers of Homer not only asserted the fact, that he had an accurate knowledge of every art and science on which he touched, but they went farther, and maintained, that such accuracy was essential to a good Poet: Αναγκη γὰρ, they urged, τὸν ἀγαθὸν ποιητὴν, εἰ μέλλει περὶ ὧν αὐτὸς ποιῇ, καλῶς ποιῆσειν, εἰδοτὰ ἄρα ποιεῖν, ἢ μὴ οἶοντε εἶναι ποιεῖν^d. Now Plato, whose object here is to vindicate his rigid exclusion exclusion of all mimetic poetry, and that of Homer in particular, from his republic, confutes the fact, without confuting the general position. While he shews the pretensions of the Homerists to be false, he seems, at least, to allow, that they ought to be true. For he flings in no savings; he no where says, what Aristotle has here said for him—that the want of this supposed accurate knowledge of arts and sciences no way affects the character of Homer as a Poet. By denying that he had that knowledge, and, at the same time, not denying, or not expressly denying, that he ought to have it, he leaves the reader to understand, that he meant to detract, on this account, from his merit as an imitator. And this, indeed, is perfectly consonant to the whole design of this part of his work, which was, to discredit poetic imitation in general, by shewing the distance of its representations from truth ^c.

^c This very word, ὀρθότης, is often used by Plato; and, particularly, in this passage, which perhaps Aristotle had in his view—Καίτοι λεγούσι γε οἱ πλείους, μουσικῆς ὀρθότης εἶναι τὴν ἡδονὴν ταῖς ψυχαῖς πορίζουσαν δύναμιν.—An idea which he rejects with abhorrence. The word μουσικῆ here is used in its widest acceptation, including Poetry. De Leg. ii. 655.

^d Rep. X. p. 598, E. ed. Serr.

^c This fanciful argument is thus shortly and clearly stated in the Comment. on the Ep. to the Pisos, &c. vol. i. p. 254. “Poetical expression,” says the philosopher [Plato], “is the copy of the Poet’s own conceptions; the Poet’s conception, of things, and things, of the standing archetype, as existing in the divine mind. Thus the Poet’s expression is a copy at third hand, from the primary, original truth.”—See Plato De Rep. 10. p. 597, 598.—To prove his point the better, he shews, that the Poet’s conceptions are distant even from the truth of things, because his knowledge of those things is imperfect and inaccurate. p. 598, 599.

NOTE 231.

P. 189. THE FAULTS OF POETRY, &c.

The original is—ΑΤΤΗΣ δὲ τῆς ποιητικῆς διττὴ ἡ ἁμαρτία. The word αὐτῆς appears to me to make strange confusion. For Aristotle is here distinguishing two sorts of faults in Poetry, essential and accidental; and his expression, presently after, for the former, is ΑΤΤΗΣ ἡ ἁμαρτία—"a fault of the "Poetry itself." As the text stands, therefore, it is just as if he had said—"There are two faults "of the Poetry itself: one, of the Poetry itself, "and the other, incidental."—Accordingly Dacier, Batteux, and almost all the translators, neglect the word αὐτῆς. Possibly it might, originally, have stood thus:—ἐδὲ ἄλλης τεχνῆς, καὶ ποιητικῆς αὐτῆς. Τῆς ΔΕ ποιητικῆς, &c.

NOTE 232.

P. 189. IF THE POET HAS UNDERTAKEN TO IMITATE WITHOUT TALENTS FOR IMITATION - - -

Εἰ μὴ γὰρ προεῖλετο μιμησασθαι ἀδυναμῖαν.—So, the MSS. But ἀδυναμία never, I believe, means impossibility, but *want of power, incapacity. This was, long ago, sufficiently proved by Victorius. If the word be right, some preposition must be wanting.

* Ἀδυναμία δὲ ἐστὶ ΣΤΕΡΗΣΙΣ ΔΥΝΑΜΕΩΣ. Metaph. V. 12. p. 893, C.

wanting. Heinsius supplies — KAT' ἀδυναμiam. The credit of the conjecture is due to Castelvetro^b. Still the phrase, μιμησασθαι κατ' ἀδυναμiam, for imitating without ability, or talents, for imitation, is harsh, and, as far as I know, unsupported by any other example. It seems not improbable, that Aristotle might have written it—ΠΑΡΑ ΔΥΝΑΜΙΝ. Supposing the three first letters of the preposition to have been destroyed, the passage would stand thus — μιμησασθαι * * ΑΔΥΝΑΜΙΝ: which it was obvious enough for the transcriber to miscorrect into ἀδυναμiam. The phrase, προελετο μιμησασθαι παρα δυναμιν, would be clear and unexceptionable. So, cap. ix.—παρα την δυναμιν παρατειναντες μυθον.

Victorius remarks, and, I think, justly, that Horace probably had his eye upon this passage, in the lines—

Sumite materiam vestris, qui scribitis, æquam
Viribus; et versate diu, quid ferre recusent, Quid valeant, humeri. Cui lecta potenter erit res, &c. Epist. ad Pis. v. 38, &c.

—where Aristotle's προαιρεσθαι, he thinks, is expressed by “sumite materiam,” and, “lecta res :” and κατ' ἀδυναμiam glanced at in the other expressions, but, particularly, in the adverb — “potenter.”

^b P. 602, of his commentary.

NOTE 233.

P. 190. TO HAVE REPRESENTED THINGS IMPOSSIBLE WITH RESPECT TO SOME OTHER ART, &c.

No interpretation that I have seen, or been able to devise, of this whole ambiguous, perplexed, and, probably, mangled passage, is without its difficulties. All I could do was, to chuse that, which, after the closest attention to the original, and to the best comments, appeared to me “minimis urgeri.” I will not attempt to drag the reader after me, through the detail of my own doubts and embarrassments. But lest my version, from that degree of closeness, to which, in all passages where the meaning is doubtful, I have thought it right to confine myself, should retain, in some degree, the ambiguity, or obscurity, of the original, some explanation may be necessary.

By the various expressions, μυνησασθαι κατ' ἀδυναμiam—ἀμαρτια ἢ καθ' αὐτην—αὐτης—καθ' ἑαυτην, and, above all, by ΚΑΚΟΜΙΜΗΤΩΣ ἐγραψι, which seems to fix clearly the sense of the rest, Aristotle means, I think, to indicate all such faults as are incompatible with good imitation—that is, in his view, with good Poetry. All other faults he denominates, κατα συμβεβηκε—incidental. Faults he allows them to be; but smaller, and more pardonable, faults: ΕΛΑΤΤΟΝ γαρ, εἰ μὴ ἦδι, &c. In this class he reckons, τα ἀδυνάτα— things

things impossible. The expression is unhappily ambiguous: for we may understand either ἀδύνατα in general, or, ἀδύνατα κατ' ἰατρικὴν ἢ ἄλλην τέχνην. The commentators are divided. I cannot be of their party, who adopt the first of these senses. I see not how impossibilities, or absurdities*, in general, could, consistently with Aristotle's principles, be admitted by him into the number of merely incidental faults*—κατὰ συμβεβηκός—such as affected not the Poetry itself. We must, I think, understand—ἁμαρτηματα ἢ ἀδύνατα—things inaccurate, or, what is worse, impossible, καθ' ἑκάστην τέχνην—upon the principles of some other art^b.

Aristotle then goes on, and applies his solution, founded on the foregoing distinction, to the worst species of such incidental faults—to things ἀδύνατα. Take, he says, the worst: suppose the Poet to have represented something impossible, with respect to some particular art, as that of medicine, geography, &c. This, strictly speaking, is a fault; but

* That the ἀδύνατα here meant are not what he afterwards calls πιθανὰ ἀδύνατα, probable impossibilities, but such as he denominates ἀλογα, is plain from his instance; παράδειγμα, ἢ τὸ Ἐκτορος διωξίς, which he had, in the preceding chapter, expressly given as an instance of the ἀλογον. See Transl. p. 182, 183. vol. i.

* In recapitulating the different critical objections to which Poets were exposed, he expressly selects improbability, and vicious manners, as the justest grounds of censure. Ὅρθη δὲ ἐπιτιμησις, καὶ ἈΛΟΓΙΑ καὶ μοχθηρία, Cap. penult.

^b So M. Batteux; see his note on the passage.

but it is a fault that may even be justified (βέβαιον ἔχει,) if, by means of it, the Poet has answered, better than he could have done without it, the end of his own art, &c.—Still, he continues, supposing this not to be the case, we are to consider, whether the fault, admitting it to be a fault, be τὴν κατὰ τὴν τέχνην, ἢ κατ' ἄλλο συμβεβηκυῖαν, &c.—If the pursuit of Hector cannot be absolutely justified by the θαυμαστον, the ἐκπληξις which is produced by it, still it is not κακομιμητῶς γεγραμμενον; the Poetry is good, and the end of Poetry, the pleasure arising from the wonderful and the striking, is actually attained, though it be true, that it might have been attained without the fault in question.

By the expression, τα πρὸς αὐτὴν τὴν τέχνην ἀδυνατῶν, I understand—with respect to the art of which the Poet speaks; not, with respect to the art of Poetry itself: though I confess the latter sense to be that, which the words, αὐτὴν τὴν τέχνην, the art itself, most naturally present. But this sense of the expression seems to me to be utterly irreconcilable with the sense of the whole passage. In rejecting it I have the concurrence of Victorius, Piccolomini, and M. Batteux.—Besides, that the expression itself seems to be jargon. For, what are “things impossible to, (or, with respect to,) the art of Poetry itself?”—The only reasonable meaning of the phrase is—things, which it is beyond the power of the art to represent or imitate; as it is beyond the power of painting to imitate sounds.

2

sounds^c. But how can the phrase be applied, as Dacier applies it, to the ἀλογον, "deraisonnable—"tout ce qui est absurde?" Is it not just as possible for Poetry to represent a horse flying, as a ship sailing?—The sense, which I have given, seems also supported by the antithetic expression that follows—τελῶ τοῖς ἄτθης—"its own purpose;" and still more by the clearer phrase which he presently after uses—τῇ περὶ τούτων τέχνῃ—"the art to which these things belong."

I must, however, repeat my confession, that no passage of this treatise appears to me to be of more desperate perplexity than this; nor is there any of the numerous and stubborn difficulties I have had to encounter, of which I wish to be understood to offer my solution with less confidence. Here, as in many other places, had I waited for perfect satisfaction, I might have stood still for ever:—

εἰκελῶ ἀνδρὶ

Κεῖνω, ὅς ἐν τριοδοῖσι πολυτριπτοῖσι κυρησας
Ἔσῃ ἐφορμαινων· κραδίη δὲ οἱ ἄλλοτε λαιην, Ἄλλοτε δεξιτερὴν ἐπιβαλλεται εἰς ὁδὸν ἐλθειν.
Παπταινει δ' ἑκατέρωθε· νοῶ δὲ οἱ ἥύτε κυμα
Ἐίλειται,—μαλα δ' ὄψε μίης ὠρεζατο βελῆς^d.

^c Plato uses—ἀδύνατα ἐν τῇ τέχνῃ, in this sense:—Κυβερνητικῆς ἀπρό, ἢ ἰατρῆς, τα τε ἀδύνατα ἐν τῇ ΤΕΧΝῇ, καὶ τα δύνατα, διασθάνεται. Rep. II. p. 360. ed. Serr.

^d Oppian. Ἀλιευτ. III. 501, &c.

NOTE 234.

P. 190. ACCORDING TO WHAT HAS BEEN ALREADY SAID OF THAT END.

Το γὰρ τελεῖται ΕΙΡΗΤΑΙ. This reading has been questioned ; but, I think, without sufficient reason. It may very well be understood to refer to all that Aristotle had said, or, at least, hinted, about the end of the art—the θαυμαστον, ch. xxiv.—ἐκπληξίς, cap. xiv. and xvi. &c. This is not the only instance in this treatise, of reference to something implied, as if it had been expressly said.—See NOTE 150, p. 226, 227. and note 6.

Victorius illustrates ἐκπληκτικώτερον by an apt quotation from Aristotle himself: Δοκεῖ δὲ ἡ ΕΚΠΑΛΗΞΙΣ ΘΑΥΜΑΣΙΟΤΗΣ εἶναι ΠΙΠΕΡΒΑΛΛΟΤΕΑ. Top. lib. iv.

Strabo says—Μυθεῖ ΤΕΛΟΣ, ἡδὲν καὶ ΕΚΠΑΛΗΞΙΝ. p. 25. ed. Cus.

NOTE 235.

P. 190. WHETHER A FAULT BE, &c.

Ποτέρων ἐστὶ τὸ ἁμαρτημαῖ· των κατὰ τὴν τέχνην, ἢ κατ' ἄλλο συμβεβηκαῖ.—I cannot perceive, that this wants any emendation ; much less, that it is, as Mr. Winstanley says, “nullo sensu.” He contends for the certainty of ΑΤΟΠΙΩΤΕΡΟΝ—a reading, which Robortelli says he found in all the manuscripts he consulted. I would only ask, whether
Aristotle

Aristotle can be conceived to have written such a sentence as this?—"A fault in the Poetry "itself is a more absurd thing than a fault in "some other incidental matter; FOR it is a less "fault," &c. Yet this, I think, is the plain English of the Greek—Ετι, ἀτοπώτερον ἐστὶ το αἵμαρτημα των κατα την τιχην, ἢ κατ' ἄλλο συμβε- βηκε· ἱλαττοι ΓΑΡ—κ.τ.λ.

. Victorius contends strongly, and, I think, with much better reason, for ποτερον. He says well—"Nam quæ adjunguntur videntur significare ita "prorsus legi debere: duo enim genera pecca- "torum contraria inter se indicant. Utrorum "igitur peccatorum id, cujus arguitur poeta, "videndum esse præcipit: alterum enim eorum "genus faciliorem excusationem habet." p. 274.

NOTE 236.

P. 191. HAS NOT REPRESENTED THINGS CONFORMABLY TO TRUTH—

Ὅνκ ἀληθῆ.—An ἐπιτιμησις very frequent in the mouth of PLATO, to whom, undoubtedly, Aristotle here alludes. "The Poets ought not," says Plato, speaking of the representations of Hesiod and Homer, "to be permitted to tell us—ὡς θεοὶ θεοὶς πολεμῶσι τε, καὶ ἐπιβιβασὶ καὶ μαχονται· ΟΥΔΕ γὰρ ΑΛΗΘΗ·"—They ought not, λοιδορεῖν ἀπλῶς εἶναι τὰ ἐν αἴθερ, ἀλλὰ, μᾶλλον, ἐπαινεῖν· ὡς ΟΥΤ'

^a. De Rep. II. p. 142. ed. Mass.

ΟΤΤ' ΑΛΗΘΗ λιγοντας, ἢτ' ὠφελίμῃ τοῖς μύλλοις μαχίμοις ἔσσεθαι^b.—So again, of Homer's account of the cruel treatment of the body of Hector by Achilles, and of his sacrificing twelve Trojan captives to the manes of Patroclus [Il. ψ.]:
ἔμπαντα ταῦτα ΟΤ φησόμεν ΑΛΗΘΗ εἰρησθαι.—
And again, presently after—ὡθ' ἴδεια ταῦτα, ΟΤΤ' ΑΛΗΘΗ^c. To all which objections, as appears from what follows, Aristotle's answer would have been—ὅτι ἄνω ΦΑΣΙΝ.

NOTE 237.

P. 191. SOPHOCLES—DREW MEN, SUCH AS THEY SHOULD BE; EURIPIDES, SUCH AS THEY ARE.

The difference here intended, between the two great Tragic Poets, seems to me to be rightly explained by Dacier in few words: “Sophocle “tâchoit de rendre ses imitations parfaites, en “suivant toujours bien plus ce qu' une belle na- “ture étoit capable de faire, que ce qu'elle faisoit.
“Au lieu qu' Euripide ne travailloit qu' à les “rendre semblables, en consultant davantage ce “que cette même nature faisoit, que ce qu'elle “étoit capable de faire.” p. 458.—It is thus indeed, that, by comparing different passages, we shall

^b De Rep. III. p. 160.—He alludes particularly to the famous declaration of Achilles, Od. Α. 487, which he immediately quotes; with other passages of the same kind.

^c Ibid. p. 174.

shall find Aristotle clearly explain himself. What he here means by ἀληθῆ, is sufficiently clear from the synonymous expressions, οἱοί εἰσι—εἶα ἦν, ἢ εἴην, in this chapter, and ὁμοίως—καθ' ἡμᾶς—and, εἰ νυν, in chapter ii. where he explains the different objects of poetic imitation^a. To these expressions are opposed another set of expressions, which I take to be synonymous with each other—δια εἶναι δε—οἷως δε, here; το βελτιον, and the παραδῶγμα ὑπεριχον, presently after; καλλίως, cap. xv^b.—βελτιονας ἢ καθ' ἡμᾶς—βελτιονας των νυν, cap. ii^c. All these expressions correspond to the various expressions of, improved nature—la belle nature—ideal beauty, &c. in modern writers.

The objection then, to which Aristotle here points out the best answer, I understand to be this—"Your imitation is not true; it is not an "exact copy of such nature as we see about us."—The answer is—"No: but it is an improved copy. "If I have not represented things as they are, I "have represented them as they ought to be."

A very different explanation of this passage has been given by an eminent critic; but, I confess, it appears to me to be irreconcilable with Aristotle's expressions, clearly interpreted, as I think they are, by comparison with each other. According to that explanation, the answer of Sophocles to the objection—ἐκ ἀληθῆ, and indeed

the

^a Transl. Part I. Sect. 3. ^b Transl. vol. i. p. 146, 147.

^c Part I. Sect. 3.

the sense of the objection itself, are very different from what Dacier, and, I believe, all the commentators, have represented them to be.—The explanation is this :

“ And this will further explain an essential “ difference, as we are told, between the two great “ rivals of the Greek stage. Sophocles, in re“ turn to such as objected a want of truth in his “ characters, used to plead, that he drew men “ such as they ought to be, Euripides such as they “ were. Σοφοκλῆς ἴφη, αὐτῷ μὲν οἷος δει ποιεῖν, “ Εὐριπίδης δὲ, οἷοι εἶσι. The meaning of which “ is, Sophocles, from his more extended commerce “ with mankind, had enlarged and widened the “ narrow, partial conception, arising from the “ contemplation of particular characters, into a “ complete comprehension of the kind. Whereas “ the philosophic Euripides, having been mostly “ conversant in the academy, when he came to “ look into life, keeping his eye too intent on “ single, really existing personages, sunk the kind “ in the individual; and so painted his charac“ ters naturally indeed, and truly, with regard “ to the objects in view, but sometimes without “ that general and universally striking likeness, “ which is demanded to the full exhibition of “ poetical truth^d.”—Again—after an illustration of this meaning, by a comparative examination of the Electra of Sophocles with that of Euripides,

^d Comment. on the Ep. to the Pisos, p. 255.

pides, the conclusion is—"Whether this representation of Sophocles be not ~~more~~ agreeable to truth, as collected from wide observation, i.e. from human nature at large, than that of Euripides, the capable reader will judge. If it be, the reason I suppose to have been, ~~that~~ Sophocles painted his characters, such as, from attending to numerous instances of the same kind, he would conclude they ought to be; Euripides, such, as a narrower sphere of observation had persuaded him they were."

From these two passages compared, it appears, I think, that by ὅσα δὲ εἰσὶν—such as they ought to be—the learned commentator understands, such as they ought to be in order to possess "that general and universally striking likeness, which is demanded to the full exhibition of poetical truth." But a comparison of Aristotle with himself, in the several passages above referred to, seems to fix the sense clearly to that ideal perfection, that poetic elevation and improvement of nature, which may be said, rather, to exclude such "general and universally striking likeness" of "human nature at large:" and this, I think, was the very objection made to Sophocles by the patrons of his rival.

According to the interpretation which I ~~can~~ taking the liberty to examine, Sophocles is made to answer the charge by denying its truth: for the answer,

^c Ibid. p. 259.

answer, as here stated, will be this—You say, my representations are not true, and those of Euripides are true. I deny this. You use the term improperly. My representations are “agreeable to truth,” because they are “collected from wide observation, i. e. from human nature at large;” those of Euripides are not agreeable to truth, because they are representations, not of the kind, but of individuals.—The answer, as I understand Aristotle, is very different. The charge is not denied[†], or explained away, but admitted and justified. Sophocles says, “If you would have men represented as they are—οὐκ αἶσι—you must, indeed, go to Euripides. I have not drawn them so—I never intended to draw them so. I have done better—I have delineated mankind, not such as they really are, but such as they ought to be.” Euripides does not appear to have been charged, by those objectors, with what may be termed individual improbability of imitation, but with too close and portrait-like delineation of general nature. In short, the difference, which I understand to be here intended, between the two Poets, cannot be more exactly expressed, than it is by the ingenious commentator commentator himself, in the beginning of the note to which I refer; where it is observed, [p. 253] that "truth may be followed too closely in works " of imitation, as is evident in two respects. For, " 1. the artist, when he would give a copy of " nature, may confine himself too scrupulously " to the exhibition of particulars, and so fail of " representing the general idea of the kind. Or, " 2. in applying himself to give the general idea, " he may collect it from an enlarged view of real " life, whereas it were still better taken from the " nobler conception of it as subsisting only in the " mind." Now, if we apply the latter of these differences to the two Poets in question—if we say, " In applying himself to give the general " idea, Euripides collected it from an enlarged " view of real life; whereas Sophocles took it " from the nobler conception of it, as subsisting " only in the mind"—this will express exactly what I take to be the sense of Aristotle.

[†] The reader will observe, that in all the objections, drawn from this source, the truth of the objections—the facts—“this is not true”—“this is neither true, nor as it ought to be,” &c. are all admitted. Οὐκ ἀληθὲς Ἀλλ’ οὐα δει.—Εἰ δὲ ΜΗΔΕΤΕΡΩΣ, ὅτι ἔτω φασιν.—Ἰσχυρὲς δὲ ὅτι βελτίον μὲν, Ἀλλ’ οὕτως εἶχεν.

To the support, which the common interpretation of this passage receives from Aristotle himself, may be added that which it receives, and, I believe, is generally acknowledged to receive, from the Tragedies themselves, which are extant, of the two Poets in question. That Euripides is, in general, liable to the censure of particular imitation—of "sinking the kind in the individual," I cannot say I have observed. But who can read this Poet without observing the examples, with which he every where abounds, of that very "general and universally striking likeness, which is demanded to the full exhibition of poetical truth?" In Sophocles, we find more elevation, more dignity, more of that improved likeness, and ideal perfection, which the philosopher expresses by his ὡς δὲ—πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον, &c. In Euripides, we find more of the ἀληθες, the ὁμοίον, &c.—we are oftener reminded of the common nature and common life, which we all see around us. And if this, in conjunction with other causes¹, be sometimes found to lower the imitations of this Poet, beneath the proper level of Tragic dignity, and to produce something of the καμῆδια τις ὑπολογυμένη, which Longinus¹ attributes to the Odyssey, the fault is amply redeemed, perhaps in those very parts, by the pleasure which results from the closeness and obviousness of the imitation; certainly, in many others, by those precious touches of nature, which must, at once, strike every individual of every audience; such, if I mistake not, as are much more rarely to be found in Sophocles, and such, perhaps, as, after all that we have heard about the beau idéal and improved nature, can only be produced by an exact transcript of nature, as it is; of what the Poet has actually felt himself, and actually seen in others.

with

The truth seems to be, that both in Poetry, and in Painting, if the sublime be aimed at, the Poet,

¹ Such as were mentioned in NOTE 33. vol. i. ¹ Sect. 9.

Poet, and the Artist, must look up to the δια ΔΕΙ σις; their eyes may "glance from earth to heaven," and they may "body forth the form of things unknown." But, if emotion and the pathetic be their object, they will, neither of them, attain their end, unless they submit to descend a little towards earth, and to copy with some closeness that nature which is before their eyes. We are told of Michael Angelo, that "his people are "a superior order of beings;" that "there is "nothing about them, nothing in the air of their "actions, or their attitudes, or the style and cast
"of their very limbs or features, that puts one
"in mind of their belonging to our own species".
If this be the character of that painter's works, I must confess, for my own part, that I should be disposed to turn from them to those of the charming artist, whose words I quote, where we see human nature improved, but not forgotten. I am very well content to be reminded of my own species, as he reminds me of them. But this, at least, is certain, that such a character, applied to a Tragic Poet, would be the severest censure that criticism could pronounce*.

* Sir Jos. Reynolds's Discourses, &c. p. 170.

* The writer just quoted, among other excellent observations on this subject, in his notes on Du Fresnoy, allows, that, even in painting, "a dash of individuality is "sometimes necessary to give an interest."

NOTE 238.

P. 191. BUT, AS XENOPHANES SAYS, &c.

Αλλ' ἔτυχεν, ὥσπερ Ξενοφάνης· ἀλλ' ἔΦΑΣΙ ταδε.
Thus all the MSS. and editions. Victorius proposed—ἀλλ' ἔ ΣΑΦΗ ταδε: and supported his conjecture by the following fragment of Xenophanes, preserved in Sext. Empiricus, to which he supposes Aristotle to allude:

Και το μὲν ἐν ΣΑΦΕΣ ἔτις ἀνὴρ ἰδὲν, κἄν τις ἔσται
Εἰδώς, ἀμφὶ θεῶν τε, καὶ ὅσα λεγὼ περὶ πάντων.
Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τὰ βαλίσαι ΤΥΧΟΙ τετελεσμένον εἶπω, αὐτῶς ἔκ οἶδε, δοκῶ δ' ἐπὶ πασι τέτυκται^a.

Few conjectural emendations invite assent by a more remarkable union of ingenuity and probability: and, as it appears to me, that, without some emendation, nothing consistent or satisfactory can be made of the passage, we need, I think, have little scruple in admitting the reading of Victorius as true, till manuscript authority produces something better.

Xenophanes is here introduced, probably, because he had written against the theology of HOMER and HESIOD^b. The following lines are quoted from him by Sextus Empiricus:

Πάντα

^a The sense is—"Concerning the nature of the Gods, and of the universe, nothing ever has been, or ever can be, clearly known by man. For should we even chance to guess the truth, we cannot know it to be the truth. All is mere opinion."

^b Diog. Laert. IX. 18.

Πάντα θεοὶς ἀνεθήκαν Ὅμηρος θ' Ἡσίοδος τε,
 Ὅσσα παρ' ἀνθρώποισιν ὄνεια καὶ ψογὸς ἐστὶ,
 ΚΛΕΙΠΤΕΙΝ, ΜΟΙΧΕΥΕΙΝ τε, καὶ ΑΛΛΗ-ΛΟΥΣ ΑΠΑΤΕΥΕΙΝ^c.

By alluding to those other verses, where he descants on the uncertainty and obscurity of all inquiries relative to the nature of the Gods, and asserts, that all, on that subject, is mere conjecture and opinion, Aristotle seems, sily enough, to have intended to make Xenophanes answer himself; and to excuse Homer's theology, even by the testimony of one who had been most forward to condemn it. "These may be opinions taken up " at random, as Xenophanes says; and his representation of the Gods may be the true:—but, " as he himself owns, these are matters not clearly known.—ΑΛΛ' ἔ σαφη ταῦτα.—Homer was therefore right, as a Poet, in following popular " tradition and belief^d."

Aristotle also alludes here, without doubt, to the objections of PLATO, De Repub. II. p. 150, &c. ed. Massey.

I cannot forbear to mention one curious maxim of Xenophanes about drinking, which we find in some pleasant elegiac lines preserved in Athenæus. It was his opinion, it seems, that no man had drunk too much, provided he was able to walk home without a guide.

Οὐχ'

^c See the Poesis Philosophica of H. Stephens, p. 36. where other fragments of this philosopher are collected.

^d See REMARK 32. p. 467 of this volume.

Οὐχ' ὕβρις πινεν δ' ῥῆσόν μιν ἔχων ἀφικαίῃ
Οἶκαδ' ΑΝΕΥ ΠΡΟΠΟΛΟΥ. - - -

Liben. p. 462.

And what says the severe and moral PLATO on this subject?—He forbids young men this indulgence, but allows it to old:—μεθης δε, και πολυοινας τοπαρπαν ΤΟΝ ΝΕΟΝ ἀπιχεισθαι. Till the age of 18, he allows no wine; for, to drink it at that time of life, he says, is “adding fire to fire, both in body and mind.”—πυρ ἐπι πυρ ὀχιτευαν, εἰς το το σωμα, και την ψυχην. From 18 to 30, a moderate use of wine might be allowed:—οἶνε γευσθαι τε ΜΕΤΡΙΟΥ. At 40, and after, it might be used in a jolly kind of way—εἰς παιδιαν.—ὥς ἀναβαν ἡμας, και δυσθυμιας ΛΗΘΗΝ γιγευσθαι, μαλακωτερον ἐκ σκληροτερον το της ψυχης ἡθῶ, καθαπερ εἰς πυρ σιδηρον ἐντεθεντα, γιγνομενον· και εἴως εὐπλαστοτερον εἶναι. For wine, says he, was given to man, as—φαρμακον - - - ἐπιχαρον της τε ΓΗΡΩΣ αὐστηροτητος.—De Leg. II. p. 666. ed. Serr.

NOTE 239.

P. 192. WHETHER WHAT IS SAID, OR DONE, &c.

I believe Victorius is right in referring this to the accusation, or ἐπιτιμησις, which Aristotle, at the end of the chapter, expresses by ὡς βλαβερα. “Arbitror autem rationem hanc pertinere ad formam eam, quam vocavit, ὡς βλαβερα. Docet “enim nunc, si poeta arguitur, quod personam
“aliquam

“ aliquam induxerit, quæ quippiam dixerit aut fecerit, quod meritò reprehendi possit, aut speciem habeat nocendi, quomodo illud defendi purgarique debeat.” p. 278. It is true, the word βλαβερον does not here occur: but Aristotle uses other words, as synonymous, at the conclusion of the chapter; as, μοχθηρια, πονηρια: and here, the same thing is sufficiently indicated by the moral expressions, μη καλως, and φ αυλον. And though this solution cannot, that I see, be considered as arising from the application of any of the three principles laid down at the beginning of the chapter, yet it seems plainly connected, as I have observed in the notes on the translation, with what precedes.

NOTE 240.

P. 193. FOR THE SOLUTION OF SOME OBJECTIONS, WE MUST HAVE RECOURSE TO THE DICTION.

Τα δε, προς την λεξιν ὄρωντα δι διαλυειν. So, undoubtedly, the passage should be punctuated; not, as in some editions, very absurdly, τα δε προς την λεξιν, ὄρωντα δι διαλυειν: of which the fair, and only fair, translation would be—“ Those objections, which relate to the diction, we must solve by looking at them!” Goulston, who adopts this perverse construction, is forced to supply:—
“ his

* “ Quæ verò ad dictionem pertinent, oportet intuendum solvere.” Ed. Cantab. 1785.

"his modis intuentem:" and Heinsius has inserted ἰτως in his text; on what authority, I know not. But the true construction certainly is, ὀφθαλμὸν πρὸς τὴν λέξιν—i. e. by having an eye to, or, considering, "the diction." And so the passage was, long ago, well explained by Victorius; who was followed by Castelvetro, Piccolomini, and Beni.—Dacier, though he translates rightly, mistakes the sense with those, whose translation is wrong. He supposes Aristotle here to be suggesting answers to objections against the diction. But the instances might have set him right; none of them appearing to be criticisms on the diction, but, all of them, objections to the sense, though the answers are drawn from the diction. Indeed Dacier seems to have seen this, and is therefore forced to make the diction, Λέξις, include the thoughts, διανοίαν; thus confounding Aristotle's clear distinction^b.

In this whole chapter, words are considered no farther, than as they afford the means of obviating objections against the sense.

NOTE 241.

P. 195. WHEN ON THE TROJAN PLAIN
HIS ANXIOUS EYE, &c.

The censure, here, is generally supposed to have fallen on the word ἀφρονεῖ, and the absurdity of making Agamemnon see the Trojan camp, and the ^b "La diction a deux parties; car elle comprend ordinairement les pensées & l'expression." p. 468. note 27.

the Grecian fleet, by night, and when he was shut up in his tent. To this, Aristotle is understood to reply, that the word is metaphorical; he saw with his mind's eye.—For my part, I would much rather confess, that I do not understand the instance at all, than suppose the philosopher capable of thus explaining away one of the finest descriptive touches in the whole Iliad. The entire passage is this:

Ητοι ὅτ' ἐς πεδῖον το Τρωϊκὸν ἀβησσει,
Θαυμαζεν πυρα πολλὰ, τὰ καίετο Ἰλιόθι προ,
Αυλῶν συριγγῶν τ' ἐνοπην, ἑμάδον τ' ἀνθρώπων.
Il. K. v. 11.

I can hardly think it possible for any man, of the least taste, to read these lines, and understand them to express merely the thoughts of Agamemnon. Mr. Pope, who has shewn so much taste in making the most of all Homer's picturesque descriptions*, has, in his translation, done ample justice to this. Yet, in the note^b, this cruel metaphorical sponge is applied, without compunction, upon the supposed authority of Aristotle; though, after all, the evident corruption and deficiency of this whole passage leaves it dubious, whether this,
or,

* See Diss. I. vol. i. p. 46, &c.

^b Il. X. v. 13. where, in the note, this explanation by metaphor is given with seeming acquiescence. In Clarke's Homer, too, it is adopted, and ἀβησσει is explained, "animo videret: secum circumspectaret. Κατὰ μεταφορὰν εἶπται. Aristot. Poetic. cap. xxv." or, indeed, any other meaning, assigned, or assignable, be the true one.

All, in this description, seems clearly literal. The verb, ἀθρῆσαι, is no where in Homer, I believe, applied to mental vision. Still less is θαυμάζειν applicable to mere thought, or recollection. And what, after all, is Agamemnon made to see? Only what he might easily see, even as he lay on his couch—the fires of the Trojan camp. Add to this, the sense still more evidently literal of what follows—of his hearing the military music^c, and “the busy-hum of men.”

There are few descriptions in Homer, that, to me, appear more beautiful than this little military night-scene. Whatever may be supposed with respect to Agamemnon, we, who read, are made to see, and hear. But, take away the literal sense, and you take away, with it, the whole beauty of the passage.—And, after all, what is the difficulty? Agamemnon, though retired to his tent, was kept awake by his anxiety. The enemy was not far off; and he apprehended the design of some nocturnal incursion^d. In this situation, is it difficult to imagine, that he might frequently rise, and look with an anxious eye

^c Pope has expressed this, I think, in a very happy line:—

“Hears in the passing wind their music blow.”

^d Δυσμένεες δ' ἄνδρες σχεδὸν ἵπταται, ἔδει τι ἰδμεν, Μὴ πῶς καὶ διὰ νύκτα μνηστῆροισι μαχεσθαι. υ. 100, 101.

eye towards the Trojan camp, and towards the ships?—for this is all which the expressions, ΕΣ πειδιον ἀθροισσε—ΕΣ νηας ἰδοι—here imply. Nor is it at all improbable, that he might have these views as he lay upon his bed, through windows, or apertures, made perhaps for that very purpose. The commentators seem to have thought only of a modern officer, snugly shut up in a close and comfortable tent, and disturbed by no fear, but that of a sore throat, or the rheumatism. The tents of the ancients were mere huts, or hovels*. The marquee of Achilles himself, as it is minutely described by Homer†, seems to have been little better than a cow-house.

As I have given the passage from Homer, the reader may not be displeased to compare that sketch with a far more finished and exquisite night-piece, but of the same kind, by our own great Poet.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of
The hum of either army stilly sounds, [night,
That the fix'd centinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch :
Fire answers fire ; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face :

Steed

* "Trojanis temporibus, tentoria nondum erant lintea.
" Achivorum μασχα stipitibus lignisque constabant, vimine
" intertexto, humoque aggesta ; adeoque tuguria potius."
Heyne ad Virgil. Æn. I. Excurs. 16.

† Il. Ω. 449. Pope's transl. XXIV. 553, and the note.

Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful neighs,
 Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the tents,
 The armourers, accomplishing the knights,
 With busy hammers closing rivets up,
 Give dreadful note of preparation ^ε. Henry V. Act iv.

NOTE 242.

P. 195. Αυλων συριγγων θ' ὁμαδον.—Il. K. v. 13.

—So Aristotle. In our editions of Homer, the whole line is—

Αυλων συριγγων τ' ἐνοπην, ὁμαδον τ' ἀνθρωπων.

I cannot agree with those commentators who take the objection here to fall upon the word ἐνοπην, which means, voice, “& ne se dit proprement,” says Dacier, “que des hommes.” This would be a mere verbal objection; for the meaning is plain enough. But Aristotle, as I have already observed, is not here considering criticisms on the diction, but, such criticisms on the διανοια, or thoughts, as may be obviated by means of the diction.

Farther; he is here shewing, how objections may be removed by having recourse to metaphor—by saying, “the expression is not to be taken in its proper, but, in its metaphorical sense.” But Dacier's explanation makes the objection to be, not the impropriety of the literal sense, (for that was out of the question here), but only the impropriety, or harshness, of the metaphor; metaphor; and the answer, according to him, is no other, than a denial of the charge, and a justification of the metaphor. And this will be equally the case, whether we take Aristotle's quotation as it stands—συριγγων θ' ὀμαδον—or suppose him to mean, συριγγων τ' ἐνεκην, as we read it in our editions: except, that the former would be much the bolder and harsher metaphor of the two.

^ε See REMARK 33. p. 467 of this vol.

So much then for, what the criticism was not. What it was, must always, I fear, in the present condition of the text, remain a problem. One conjecture only occurs to me, and that, such as I cannot take upon me to offer with any degree of confidence. Perhaps Aristotle had, originally, quoted, or meant, at least, to refer to, the whole verse, as we read it; and the censure might be pointed at the expression—ΟΜΑΔΟΝ τ' ἀνθρώπων. The proper and derivative sense of ὀμαδ seems to be that of *a crowd, a multitude, a heap; its secondary sense, by a common metonymy of cause for effect, the murmur, or tumult, occasioned by a multitude. So Hesychius: ὀμαδ—(1.) ΑΘΡΟΙΣΙΣ, (2.) ΘΟΡΤΒΟΣ. (1.) ΟΧΛΟΣ, (2.) ΤΑΡΑΧΟΣ.—ΣΤΡΑΤΟΣ, ἀπὸ τῆς ὀμῆς.—Perhaps, then, some hypercritic might take, or chuse to take, the word here in its primary sense, of multitude, and ask, how Agamemnon could, by night, night, perceive and “wonder at,” the multitude of men? θαυμάζειν—ὄμαδον ἀνθρώπων. To this it would be a proper answer, to say—you mistake the meaning of the word ὄμαδον: it is not used here in its proper sense, of a multitude, but, in its metaphorical sense, for the effect produced by the voices and the bustle of a multitude. The criticism, I confess, would be frivolous enough; yet not more so than many others, to which Aristotle has condescended to furnish answers. It will perhaps be thought a more solid objection to my conjecture, that the word, ὄμαδος, seems to be constantly used by Homer in the secondary sense. So, Il. M. 471.—B. 96. — Od. K. 556: Κινυμένων δ’ ἰταρῶν ΟΜΑΔΟΝ ΚΑΙ ΔΟΤΙΟΝ ΑΚΟΤΣΑΣ. Nor can I say, that I have found any instance in Homer, of this word used in its primary sense. The other sense may, therefore, appear too common and established to have admitted of any difficulty. But to this circumstance, a critic, disposed to cavil, and furnished with sufficient authorities for the primary sense from other authors, may easily be imagined to have paid no regard.

* In the Orphean Argonautics, v. 112, ψαμαθς ΟΜΑΔΟΣ, occurs, for “a heap of sand.” Apollon. Rhodius uses the word in the same sense—as, l. 347. IV. 198.

NOTE 243.

P. 195. ALL, IS PUT FOR MANY—.

ΤΟ γὰρ ΠΑΝΤΕΣ, ἀντι τῇ Πολλῇ, κατὰ μεταφορὰν εἰρηται. The word, παντες, does not occur in any of the preceding examples. But, says M. Batteux, it is virtually contained in the first example—

ΑΛΛΟΙ

ΑΛΛΟΙ μὲν ῥα θεοὶ τε καὶ ἄνθρωποι, &c.—for ἄλλοι means ΠΑΝΤΕΣ ἄλλοι. “Aristote traduit l'idée, & non le mot.” Dacier understands the passage in the same manner. This explanation appears to me forced and improbable. Aristotle says plainly, ΤΟ παντες - - εἴρηται—i. e. “the word παντες;” and I believe, with Victorius, Piccolomini, and Heinsius, that some corresponding example is lost, as the explanations of the other examples appear to be likewise.

NOTE 244.

P. 196. ΔΙΔΟΜΕΝ δε οἱ εὐχῶ ἀρεσθαι.

Καὶ το πρὶ το ἐνυπνιον τε Ἀγαμέμνονος, ὅτι
’ΟΥΚ ΑΤΤΟΣ ὁ Ζεὺς εἶπεν—

- - - δίδομεν δε οἱ εὐχῶ ἀρεσθαι.

ἀλλὰ ΤΩ ΕΝΤΗΝΙΩ ΕΝΕΤΕΛΑΕΤΟ δίδοναι.—

De Soph. Elench. p. 284, ed. Dicaal.—This clearly confirms the common explanation, which makes Hippias substitute δίδόμεν, the infinitive, (for δίδομεναι,) used imperatively, instead of δίδομεν, the first person plural of the present tense.

A very curious solution this. Jupiter tells no lie. He only orders the dream to lie for him: “Ce qui est très différent,” says Dacier; “car “alors le mensonge ne vient pas de Jupiter, il “vient du songe.”—Dacier tells us also, that this hemistich, which does not appear in our copies
of

of Homer ^a, was altered, "par une fraude pieuse." I cannot see any great piety in the fraud; because nothing appears to be added to the impiety of the passage by the words objected to, or to be taken from it, by the suppression of them. If the words were in Aristotle's Homer, they were probably in Plato's also. Yet, in the passage at the end of the second book of his Republic, where he alludes to this part of Homer, he, very properly, takes no notice of these words, but censures the whole circumstance, of Jupiter's being represented as sending such a deceitful dream:—την τε ἐνυπνίῃ ΠΟΜΠΗΝ ὑπὸ Διὸς τῷ Ἀγαμέμνονι ^b.—The theology, indeed, of this charming writer, was of a very different complexion from that of Hippias, or of Dacier.—Κομιδὴ ἄρα ὁ ΘΕΟΣ ἄπλυν καὶ ἀληθες, ἐν τε ἔργῳ, καὶ ἐν λόγῳ· καὶ ἔτι αὐτῷ μεδίσσεται, ἔτι ἄλλως ἔξκαταρ, ἔτι κατὰ φαντασίας, ἔτι κατὰ λόγους, ἔτι κατὰ σημείων πομπάς, εἴθ' ὑπάρ, εἴθ' ὄναρ ^c.

NOTE 245.

P. 196. Το μὲν ΟΥ καταπυθεται ἰμβρῶ.

This correction, also, of Hippias, is somewhat more explicitly mentioned, De Soph. Elench. p. 284. The passage was censured as absurd, (ὡς ἀτοπὸς εἰρηκότα) by those critics who read ἔ. But what
the

^a Instead of it, we read—Τρῳεῖσσι δὲ κηδὶ ἰρηπται. Il. B. 15.—See Clarke's note.

^b P. 154, ed. Mass.

^c Ibid.

the absurdity was, we are not told by Aristotle. His commentators tell us, that it consisted in first calling the post "dry," *αὐόν, and then saying— "where it was rotted by rain." I cannot say I comprehend this. Are rottenness and dryness, as Beni very well asks, incompatible?—Nor is it clear, what construction, or what sense, was given to the passage, by those who read ζ, instead of δ. —But the reader will hardly thank me for detaining him with a dissertation upon a rotten post.

NOTE 246.

P. 196. AND MIX'D BEFORE UNMIX'D.

Ζωρα τι τα πριν ΑΚΡΗΤΑ, [διαλλαττοντα κελουθας : for so the verse is completed, in Simplicius and Athenæus.] This seems the best and most authentic reading, and Dacier's the most reasonable explanation. The meaning of the words, ζωρον, ζωροτιρον, was matter of great dispute among the ancients themselves. See Plutarch's Sympos. Prob. V. 4.—M. Batteux, taking it to mean pure, unmixed, reads, consistently with that idea, for ακρητα, ΚΕΚΡΑΤΟ. But, that this word, whatever it was, meant unmixed, seems plain from the passage of Athenæus, p. 423, 424, about Theophrastus ; who, it seems, in a treatise on drunkenness,

* The lines are—

Εστηξεν ἔυλον αἶον, ὅσον τ' ὀργυῖ, ὑπερ αἶψας,
 Ἡ δ' αὖθις, ἡ πενικὴς, το μὲν ἔ καταπυθεται ὀμβρῳ.

Il. ψ. 327.

ness, adduced these very lines of Empedocles to prove, that the meaning of ζωροτερον was, not pure wine, but wine mixed with water.

The expression, διαλλαττοντα κεινους, seems to prove, as Dacier has explained it, that the second verse was not intended merely as explanatory repetition, in other terms, of the change described in the first, but as descriptive of a contrary change ; an interpretation which is somewhat supported by the two following lines of the same Poet, on the same subject ;—

ΑΛΛΟΤΕ μεν, φιλοτητι συνερχομεν' εις εν' απαντα, ΑΛΛΟΤΕ δ' ΑΥ, διχ' εκασα φορευμενα νεικε-ιχθα*.

—and, perhaps, still better, by the lines quoted by Aristotle, Phys. Auscult. VIII. p. 408. The expression—ΜΑΘΟΝ αθανατ' ειναι—is well explained by Casaubon, upon Athenæus, p. 718,—“ μαθον, “ pro ειωθισαν, aut επιφυκισαν :—didicerant esse, “ pro erant, vel solebant, esse,” &c. See also the verses just referred to, in the Phys. Auscult. where the same expression occurs—ΜΕΜΑΘΗΚΕ φυνεσθαι.

Of διαισεις and συνθεις, and the ambiguity of punctuation, as a source of sophistical argumentation, more may be seen, if it be thought worth seeing, Rhet. II. 24. p. 580. De Soph. Elench. p. 284, 288, 303, ed. Duval.

* Poes. Philos. H. Steph. p. 21.

NOTE 247.

P. 197. TO AMBIGUITY—.

Ἀμφιβολία, i. e. such ambiguity, as does not depend on the different senses of single words, (which Aristotle calls ὁμωνυμία,) but on the different senses, of which two or more words are capable, independently of their punctuation. See, De Soph. Elench. I. cap. iv. which clears up his distinctions, between διαίρεσις, ἀμφιβολία, ὁμωνυμία, &c.

NOTE 248.

P. 197. WHATEVER IS POURED OUT TO DRINK AS WINE.

Upon v. 363 of Od. Ω. (—κίρωντας αἶθοπα οἶνον—) Eustathius says—τῷ τισιν, ἐμβαλλοντας εἰς κρατῆρας : and Gataker remarks, on occasion of the same passage—“ το κίραν, sive κίρασαι, licet miscere “ proprie significet, usurpatur tamen simpliciter “ ἀντι τῆ, ἐγχύειν, καὶ δίδοναι πίνειν· pro infundere, “ in calicem scil. sive cyathum, et bibendum por- “ *rigere .” As a proof that the verb was so used, without the idea of mixing, we meet with it applied to nectar :

—ΚΕΡΑΣΣΕ δὲ νεκτάρ ἱερὺθρον. Od. E. 93.

The Gods hardly drank nectar and water.—But it is even applied to pure water itself :

Θυμῆρες ΚΕΡΑΣΑΣΑ κατὰ κρατῆ τε καὶ ὤμων.
i. e. pouring it over my head and shoulders.

Od. K. 362.

* See Clarke's Homer.

NOTE 249.

P. 197. HENCE GANYMEDE, &c.

I have adhered, without scruple, to the transposition mentioned in Mr. Winstanley's note *; which had been proposed, I know not by whom, before Victorius published his commentary. Victorius opposes it; but, I think, without sufficient reason. Piccolomini saw, and has well defended, the necessity of it, which appears to me to be obvious. I would read the whole passage thus: Τα δε, κατα το ἰθὺς της λεξιως· οἶον, τον [forte, TO] κειραμμενον, οἶνον φασιν εἶναι· ὅθεν εἴρηται ὁ Γανυμηδης,

Διὶ οἶνοχοευσεν,

ἔπινοντων οἶνον. Εἰη δ' ἂν τετο γε και κατα μεταφοραν. Και, Χαλκίας, τες τον σιδηρον ἱργαζομενες· ὅθεν πεποιηται, Κημικ νεοτευκτη κασσιτεροιο.

This differs from Mr. Winstanley's arrangement, only with respect to the words—εἰη δ' ἂν τετο γε, &c. which appear to me to belong to the single example immediately preceding them in the editions. The commentators agree, I think, in making them refer to all the examples. But I cannot be persuaded, that Aristotle, after formally proposing the ἰθὺς λεξιως, as a distinct solution, would immediately say, that all the instances he gives might might as well be defended κατα μεταφοραν. I understand him to say—“though this example, “indeed, may also be defended by metaphor.” The expression confirms this :—ἐν δ’ αὖ ΤΟΤΤΟ ΓΕ καὶ κατα μεταφοραν.

* Ed. Ox. 1780, p. 307.

Besides, there seems to be a pretty plain reason, why this instance might be considered as a metaphor, and the others not so. Nectar was the wine of the Gods; and the resemblance was sufficiently obvious, to make the substitution of the one for the other an easy metaphor. With the other examples the case is different. Brass and iron are indeed, each of them, species of metals. But the common genus is too general to constitute that obvious resemblance which is requisite to a metaphor. Their likeness, to use the philosopher’s own language, is not perceived by the genus^b. Oil and vinegar are both liquids; yet the substitution of the one for the other would make a very strange sort of metaphor; because they have no other resemblance to each other, but as liquids. Hence, Aristotle denominates such substitutions not metaphors, but customary modes of speech; both because the resemblance is not obvious enough for metaphor, and because, as the name implies, they are common and established expressions, (χυρια;) however, in themselves, improper.

^b See NOTE 183.

NOTE 250.

P. 198. THE MEANING IS, WAS STOPPED ONLY, OR REPELLED.

Dacier supposes the critics to have objected to the improbability of a long spear's remaining fixed in a shield, like an arrow, or light dart. I cannot so conceive it. The lines themselves are the best comment here.

Οὐδὲ τὸτ' Αἰνείας δαΐφρον' ὀβριμον ἔγχ.
 Ρηξέ σασσ' χρυσ' γὰρ ἔρυκακε, δῶρα θεοιο.
 Ἀλλὰ δύο μὲν ἔλασσε δια πτυχας, αἱ δ' αὖ ἐτι τρεῖς
 ἦσαν· ἐπεὶ πέντε πτυχας ἤλασσε Κυλλοποδίων, Τας δύο, χαλκείας, δύο δ' ἐνδοθι, κασσιτεροιο,
 Τὴν δὲ μίαν, χρυσην· τῇ ῥ' ἔσχετο χαλκεον ἔγχ.
 II. T. 267, &c.

The shield was composed of five plates; the two first, of brass; the two innermost, next the body, (for that seems to be the sense of ἐνδοθι^a;) of tin, κασσιτεροιο^b; and one in the middle, of gold; and there the spear was stopped: Τῇ ῥ' ἔσχετο. Now this might mean, stuck, or, was fastened, in it^c. But this, it was objected, would have ^a It may, however, mean—within the brass plates. If so, we must understand the two external plates, on the opposite sides of the shield, to have been brass, and the two iron, within, and contiguous to, them. In either case, the plate of gold will be the third and middle plate.

^b Meaning, I suppose, according to the ἑὸν λέξις, iron.

^c As, by the way, the same word clearly appears to mean have been a manifest contradiction; for Homer had said, not only that the gold stopped it—χρυσὸν γὰρ ἔρυσσεν—but, still more expressly, that the spear penetrated two of the plates, and that the three others remained unpierced. But the spear could not well be fixed, or fastened, in the plate of gold, which was the third, without piercing it.—And thus the objection appears to have been rightly understood by Victorius and Goulston.

NOTE 251.

P. 199. OF HOW MANY DIFFERENT SENSES, &c.

I may say with Victorius, "hic locus valdè me torsit." The words are these:—το δὲ, ποσαχὼς ἔνδεχεται, ὡς πῶς· μάλισ' ἂν τις ὑπολάβοι κατὰ τὴν κατ' ἀντίκρυ.—In this passage, as in many others, there is just glimpse enough of some meaning, to mock a commentator with the hopes of discovery, and to deprive him of the comfort of doing at once, what, after all his efforts, he will probably find himself obliged to do at last—of abandoning the passage as unintelligible. For my own part, I do not see one clear and satisfactory sense, that can be made of the words, without conjectural emendation; and if we open that door, we shall be,

mean in a similar passage, Il. H. 248. But, there, it is used with the preposition ἐν.

Ἐξ δὲ δια πτυχᾶς ἦλθε δαΐζων χαλκὸν ἀτρίης, ΕΝ Τῇ δ' ἰβδόματι ρίγη ΣΧΕΤΟ.

be, again, confounded by the number of different senses which ingenuity may propose, with equal pretensions to our acceptance.

Dacier translates thus: "Et le plus court moyen de se tirer de ces endroits, c'est de prendre le mot dans un sens tout contraire à celui qu'on lui donne ordinairement." Piccolomini and Beni understand it thus: "How many senses a word admits of, may best be known by considering the significations opposed to it:" a sense preferable, I think, at least, to any other that has been offered, because it certainly does receive some support from the fifteenth chapter of Aristotle's first book of *Topics; where he treats of Homonymy, or equivocation, and points out different means, by which we may discover, what, and how many, different senses a word will admit of; and among these is the rule here supposed to be alluded to; i. e. that any single word must admit of as many different significations as are opposed to it. As, for example, to the word acute, we oppose, sometimes grave, sometimes blunt, sometimes dull, or stupid. Acute therefore has, of course, three different senses, corresponding to those three opposite senses.

But though this explanation of the passage must be allowed to give an Aristotelic meaning, yet I cannot think it a meaning that arises, fairly and clearly, from the text. In particular, the expression,

* P. 189. See Sect. 2, 3.

sion, KATA τῷ [scil. σημασίᾳ—for so it is supplied—] KAT' ANTIKPT, has, to me, a very suspicious appearance. I much doubt, whether Aristotle would have used the word ἀντίκρυ to denote contrariety of meaning, or any thing but local opposition. I believe he would have used ἰαντίον, ὁ ἀντίκειμενον; as he does constantly in those parts of his logical works, where he treats of contrariety, and of the opposite senses of words^b; and where I have not found the phrase κατ' ἀντίκρυ, once made use of in that sense.—However, as this interpretation seems to be the least exceptionable of any, and I see nothing better to propose, I have admitted it in my version: but I should certainly not accuse any reader of being very fastidious, if he preferred a blank to this, or any other meaning, that has been given to this dark saying.—Emendatory conjectures, indeed, have occurred to me, as to others; but none of them plausible enough even to impose upon myself.

NOTE 252.

P. 199. ARGUE FROM THESE PREVIOUS DECISIONS OF THEIR OWN.

Αὐτοὶ ΚΑΤ'ΑΥΗΦΙΣΑΜΕΝΟΙ.—I cannot think this word so free from all difficulty as Mr. Winstanley does. He says, "Egregie dictum κατὰ ψηφισαμένοι, ut sensus sit: hi perinde ac judices"
" quidam

^b See Topic I. 15, above referred to; and, II. 7, 8, et passim.

"quidam decernentes retiocinantur," &c.—But the question is, whether the word will admit that sense, or any other, than that of condemning, passing sentence against, &c. which is not to Aristotle's purpose in this place. The fair sense of καταφρισμένοι συλλογίζονται, is, if I mistake not, "they argue, or form their conclusion, after, or, in consequence of, having condemned"—what?—We must necessarily understand them to have condemned, either the passage in question, or, the opinion of others about the sense of it. But Aristotle, in what follows, says plainly, that they condemned the passage, or the opinions of others relative to it, in consequence of their own preconceived and erroneous notions; and the idea of condemnation, or censure, here, would be only an awkward, tautological anticipation of the ΕΠΙΤΙΜΩΣΙΝ, ἀν' ἑπιναντίων ἢ τῇ αὐτῶν οἴσει, which follows. I think, therefore, that the proposed correction of Heinsius, καταξοφισμένοι, must be allowed the praise, both of ingenuity and probability. In my version, however, I have contented myself with making the best I could of that reading which has the authority of all the manuscripts, and all the commentators, except Heinsius, on its side.—Victorius thinks the word will bear the sense of "cum sententiam tulerint;" but he adds—"quamvis in præpositione, quæ verbo adjecta est, vis insit contra alios id faciendi."

NOTE 253.

P. 199-200. THE OBJECTION ITSELF, THEREFORE, IS PROBABLY FOUNDED ON A MISTAKE.

Δι' ἀμαρτημα δε το προβλημα εις το ισι. "Metuo
" ne hic locus corruptus mancusve sit." Victor.—
To give these words any meaning that may not easily be controverted, is, I believe, impossible. I have made them say, what it seems to me most probable that the author meant to say: "So far
" is this criticism from proving Homer to be " wrong, that it is, itself, probably, founded on a " mistake."

NOTE 254.

P. 200. THE IMITATIONS OF POETRY SHOULD RESEMBLE THE PAINTINGS OF ZEUXIS—.

Τοις τε δ' εἶναι, οἷς Ζευξίς ἔγραφεν, ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον· τὸ γὰρ παραδειγμα δεῖ ὑπερῆκειν.

M. Batteux proposes this arrangement:—
Ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς τὸ βέλτιον· τὸ γὰρ παραδειγμα δεῖ ὑπερῆκειν, τοις τε δ' εἶναι, οἷς Ζευξίς ἔγραφεν*.

That the words, τοις τε δ' εἶναι, οἷς Ζευξίς ἔγραφεν, belong to the second way of defending the impossible, by referring it to the βέλτιον—οἷα δεῖ εἶναι, &c.

seems

* So, at least, the passage is printed in the edition I use of M. Batteux's Quatre Poétiques, (Paris 1771,) not as they are quoted by Mr. Winstanley, p. 309.

seems clear. Nor is it any objection to this, as some have thought it ^b, that Aristotle had before mentioned the paintings of Zeuxis, as deficient in the expression of the manners^c. For it by no means follows, from this deficiency of Zeuxis as to manners, that he did not represent προς το βελτιον, with respect to beauty, grace, dignity of form ^d, &c. : and it seems to be this kind of improvement, in painting, by which Aristotle, here and elsewhere, illustrates the μιμησις βελτιον^e of poetry. Compare, particularly, cap. xv. Ἐπεὶ δὲ μιμησις ἐστὶ ἡ Τραγ. βελτ. &c.^f.

The story of the manner, in which Zeuxis is said to have collected the βελτιον for his famous picture of Helen, is well known. See Cic. de Inoent. II. 1. Plin. Nat. Hist. XXXV. 9. Bayle, art. ZEUXIS.

I agree, therefore, perfectly with Mr. Winstanley, that the words, τοις τες δ' εἶναι δις Ζ. ἰγρ. should be transposed : but I do not see, that any alteration, farther than the mere transposition, is necessary. I would read—Ἀλλὰ καὶ πρὸς το βελτιον [scil. δις ἀναγιν] τοις τες δ' εἶναι [scil. δις] ὡς Ζευξίς ἰγραφεὺς το γαρ παραδειγμα δις ὑπερχειν.

^b See Goulston's version and notes.

^c Cap. iii. Transl. vol. i. p. 119.

^d Zeuxis plus membris corporis dedit, id amplius atque augustius ratus, atque (ut existimant,) HOMERUM secutus, cui validissima quæque forma, etiam in foeminis, placet. Quintil. XII. 10. p. 627, ed. Gibs.

^e Transl. vol. i. p. 146.

NOTE 255.

P. 201. TO OPINION, OR WHAT IS SAID TO BE, MAY BE REFERRED, &c.

Προς ἃ φασι, τὰ ἀλογα : [scil. διὰ ἀνάγκην :] for so, I think, with Mr. Winstanley, the passage is to be understood ; and so it is explained and translated by Castelvetro. The expression, ἃ φασι, or εἰα φασι, is used by Aristotle as synonymous with δοξα, and εἰα δοκει. Thus,—εἰα ΦΑΣΙ καὶ ΔΟΚΕΙ, at the beginning of this chapter : and afterwards—ἐν τῷ φασιν.

But it will not, I think, be found possible to give this passage a consistent sense, unless we understand him to mean, what, as the text stands, he does not expressly say, i. e.—"By general opinion " we may excuse, not only the πιθανοὶ ἀδύνατοι, but " even such things as are manifestly improbable, " or absurd." As if he had written, προς ἃ φασι, ΚΑΙ τὰ ἀλογα. And thus Goulston has supplied :—
" Ad ea quæ aiunt, [rediguntur hæc quæ dixi ; et]
" illa, quæ sine ratione sunt."

NOTE 256.

P. 201. WHEN THINGS ARE SAID, WHICH APPEAR TO BE CONTRADICTORY.

Τὰ δ' ὑπεναντία ὡς εἰρημένα—. The words, ὡς εἰρημένα, have distressed all the commentators ; and no sense, which they have laboured to force upon the expression, is, to my apprehension, satisfactory. Heinsius corrected by transposition—Τα δ' ὡς ὑπεναντία εἰρημένα: “Ea, quæ tanquam “subcontraria dicta videntur.”—An easier and more probable emendation, I think, would be—Τα δ' THENANTIΩΣ εἰρημένα.

NOTE 257.

P. 201. AND IN THE SAME SENSE—.

The word is, ὡσαυτως: “simili modo,” as all the commentators render it. I cannot say I have been able thoroughly to satisfy myself, as to the precise meaning of the expression, from any thing I have found in Aristotle’s logical works*. If, “in the same manner,” does not mean, “in the same sense,” I confess I do not know what it means. I understand Aristotle to say, that, if the subject of the propositions, charged with being contradictory, be the same, and spoken of in the same respect, we must still examine, farther, whether the two propositions admit of a sense really and accurately opposite to each other; which cannot be the case, unless the same words, in each proposition, have exactly the same sense. And this meaning seems to be supported by the following passage from the treatise Περὶ Ἑρμηνείας:—Καὶ ἐν τῷ ΤΟΤΟ ΑΝΤΙΦΑΣΙΣ, (nempe) καταφασις καὶ ἀποφασις αἱ ἀντιτίθενται. Λέγω δὲ ἀντιτίθεσθαι, τὴν ΤΟΤΟ ΑΥΤΟΤ

κατὰ

* See De Sophist. Elench. 285, D. 287, E.

κατὰ τοῦ αὐτοῦ, μὴ ὀνομαστικῶς δὲ. That is, as it is well explained in the analytical Synopsis prefixed to Duval's edition:—"Affirmatio & negatio oppositæ, contradictionem faciunt. "Oppositio est ejusdem, de eodem, non homonymè; nam accipi debent termini in oppositione, EODEM MODO AC SENSU."

All that follows—viz. ὥς τε καὶ αὐτὸν, ἢ πρὸς αὐτὸν λαλεῖ, ἢ ὁ αὖ φρονιμὸς ὑποθῆται—is either so corrupt, or so darkly expressed, that I have only to confess myself unable even to guess what Aristotle meant to say. Commentators indeed have explained, and translators have translated; but I have seen no explanation that approaches to satisfaction, nor any translation, but what is either unintelligible, or unwarrantable, or both. I do not mean to except myself; for I had translated thus:—"We must also consider the person who speaks, and whether the contradiction be to what he himself said, or to what any reasonable man would understand him to have said." But, to wave other objections, which, no doubt, the learned reader will easily make for me, the verb,

^b Cap. vi. p. 39. Elsewhere he expresses this—ἡ ἀληθεῖς μὲν γὰρ ἐστὶν ἀντιφασίς τε αὐτὴ καὶ ἡ, ΜΗ ὀνομαστικῶς, ἀλλὰ ἱσχυρικῶς. De Soph. Elench. p. 285, D.

^c Alluding, as I supposed, to the former passage about the verbal ὑπεναντία, and Glauco's answer, viz. the contradiction is only to the critic's erroneous opinion, and misconception, of the passage: ἀλογως προῦπολαμβανουσι.

verb, ὑποθεσθαι, will, I believe, by no means bear this sense, of supposing, understanding—ὑπολαμβάνειν. At least, Aristotle seems always to use it in that of advising, suggesting, &c. So Rhet. I. 9. p. 533.—ὅταν ἰπαινεν βαλὴ, ὅρα τι αὖ ΤΠΟΘΟΙΟ· καὶ ὅταν ΤΠΟΘΕΣΘΑΙ, ὅρα τι αὖ ἰπαινισσίας. Accordingly, Goulston has given the word this sense in his version:—"videndumque, an eâ in re, quod prudens præceperit, secutus sit." But, of what force this circumstance is, or how it is to be applied to obviate the charge of contradiction, I do not see.

Being therefore obliged to reject the only version, which seemed to me to offer any tolerable meaning, I have left a blank in my translation.

NOTE 258.

P. 201. WHEN EXCUSED BY NO NECESSITY, &c.

—Ὅταν μὴ ἀνάγκης ἕσης, μὴθεν χρησεται τῷ ἀλόγῳ, ὥσπερ Εὐριπίδης τῷ Αἰγισίῳ πονηρίᾳ, ὥσπερ ἐν Ὁρέσῃ τῇ Μενελάῳ.—Such was the confused state in which Robortelli found the text, which he, very ingeniously and solidly, rectified thus:

—Ὅταν μὴ ἀνάγκης ἕσης μὴθεν, χρησεται τῷ ἀλόγῳ, ὥσπερ Εὐριπίδης ΕΝ τῷ ΑἰΓΕΙ· Τῇ πονηρίᾳ, ὥσπερ ἐν τῷ Ὁρέσῃ τῇ Μενελάῳ.

Some MSS. for Αἰγισίῳ, give Αἰγισίῃ, which, as Goulston has observed, suggests the true reading—ἐν τῷ ΑἰΓΕΙ, ἢ Τῇ πονηρίᾳ—κ. τ. λ.

By the Ægeus, Robortelli understood the character of that name, in the Medea of Euripides. To this Victorius very reasonably objected, that the mode of expression, ἐν τῷ Αἰγεί, seems plainly to indicate a Tragedy so named; not a character only in a Tragedy of a different name. But this is no objection to Robortelli's reading, though it is to his explanation of it. See the fragments at the end of the Oxford Euripides, where several passages of the Ægeus are quoted from Stobæus, &c.

NOTE 259.

P. 202. THUS THE SOURCES OF OBJECTIONS ARE FIVE, &c.

This enumeration may seem, at the first view, to be deficient; for one of the objections was—Οὐκ ἀληθής:—"the representation is not conformable to truth." But this, perhaps, may be considered as falling under the charge of ἀλογον. For he, who accuses a Poet of departing from nature, experience, and the οἷα ἦν, ἡ ἴσιν, says, in other words, it is improbable, incredible, absurd, &c. Or, when this objection was relative to truth of another sort—to theological truth, as violated by the poetic representations of the Gods, it then came, properly, under the βλαβερον; it was of immoral and pernicious tendency. And thus we find Plato objecting continually to the theology of Homer; sometimes, as not true—ΟΥΚ ΑΛΗΘΗ;

ΑΑΗΘΗ^a; sometimes, as hurtful—τοις ἀκατοῖς ΒΑΑΒΕΡΑ^b.

The objections answered by considerations drawn from the diction, (Sect. 5.) appear to be all reducible to one or other of these five sources.

NOTE 260.

P. 202. OR, OF IMMORAL TENDENCY.

Βλαβερὰ: i.e. hurtful on account of their immoral tendency. So the word is used by Plato; to whose objections, and to the very language in which he expresses them, Aristotle so frequently alludes. Censuring the immoral tendency of some of Homer's representations of his hero Achilles, Plato says—Οὐδ' ὅσια ταῦτα, εἴτ' ἀληθῆ·
- - - καὶ μὴ τοῖς γε ἀκατοῖς ΒΑΑΒΕΡΑ^c.—The reason follows: πᾶς γὰρ ἑαυτῇ συγγνωμὴν ἔχει, κακῇ ὅτι, πεισθεὶς, ὡς ἄρα τοιαῦτα πράττεισι τε καὶ ἐπράττον “Οἱ θίωσι ἀγχισποροὶ - - -.” Ὡς ἴσμεν, παύσιον τῆς τοιοῦτης μύθης, μὴ ἡμῖν πολλὴν εὐχέρειαν ἐντίκτωσι τοῖς νοῖς, πονηρίας. De Rep. III. p. 176, ed. Mass.

Compare the precept, cap. xv.^a about making the character as morally good as possible: and see NOTE 108. It is obvious however to observe, that when the μοχθηρία, the villainy of a character,

is

^a See NOTE 235.

^b See the passage from Plato in the next NOTE, where both these expressions occur.

^c Transl. vol. i. p. 143.

is overcharged, it brings with it its own antidote. Such characters as Iago^b, or Glenalvon, can be passive to no reader or spectator. They excite only pure and unmitigated disgust. Not all the art of the Poet, or the charms of Poetry, can cheat us into any degree of sympathy with them, even for the moment in which they are speaking. We feel, there, no such struggle between immoral approbation and moral indignation, as Dr. Johnson has described, in his observations upon the different effects produced on the spectator, by the villainy of Rowe's Lothario, and that of Richardson's Lovelace. The passage is so much to the purpose of this note, so justly thought, and so well expressed, that I am persuaded I shall gratify the reader by transcribing it.

“ The character of Lothario seems to have “ been expanded by Richardson into Lovelace; “ but he has excelled his original in the moral “ effect of the fiction. Lothario, with gaiety “ which cannot be hated, and bravery which “ cannot be despised, retains too much of the “ spectator's kindness. ' It was in the power of “ Richardson alone to teach us at once esteem
 “ and

^b “ There is always danger, lest wickedness, conjoined “ with abilities, should steal upon esteem, though it “ misses of approbation; but the character of Iago is so “ conducted, that he is, from the first scene to the last, “ hated and despised.” [Dr. Johnson. Note at the end of Othello.]—Not so, Shakspeare's Richard.

“ and detestation, to make virtuous resentment “ overpower all the benevolence which wit, and “ elegance, and courage, naturally excite, and to “ lose at last the hero in the villain ‘.”

NOTE 261.

P. 202. OR AS CONTRARY TO TECHNICAL ACCURACY.

—Παρα την ὀρθότητα, την κατα τέχνην. Most of the commentators understand the art of Poetry itself. But, if I am right in the explanation I have given, NOTE 233, of the expression, προς αὐτὴν τὴν τέχνην, the sense of the expression here must be the same. I understand Aristotle to mean, the rightness, not of Poetry itself, but of other arts, which may be incidentally the subject of the Poetry; and the words, I think, express the source, or source, as he terms it, of objections relative to all faults κατα συμβεβηκε, as opposed to those, which he distinguishes by the various expressions of, ἀμαρτίαι καθ' ἑαυτὴν, &c*.

The other interpretation of the words is fairly liable, I think, to the following objections. 1. If we understand the poetic art itself to be meant, then the objection to faults κατα συμβεβηκε—to impossibilities and inaccuracies with respect to other arts and sciences—will be entirely omitted
 in

* Lives of the Poets, vol. ii. 326.

^ See NOTE 233.

in this enumeration. This is very improbable, considering how common a source of critical censure this was. For while, on the one hand, the extravagant admirers of Homer made no scruple to assert, that his Poems contained the principles of all arts and sciences; on the other, we know how eagerly the Zoilists caught at every apparent inaccuracy of this kind; and, particularly, with respect to his geography. One instance, at least, of this sort of cavil, we have in this chapter: the censure of the passage, 'Ὅτι δ' ἀμύμονας, Il. Σ. 489. fell on Homer's ignorance of astronomy^b.—

2. By the manner in which Aristotle here mentions, first, the five sources of critical censures, and then, immediately, the twelve sources of λυσεις or answers, it is plain, I think, that he means—answers to those censures, and to all of them. But this cannot be the case, if we understand essential faults in the Poetry itself, or bad imitation: for this admits of no answer, but a direct denial of the fact. Whereas, if we understand incidental errors in other arts, all will be consistent; and every fault enumerated will find its answer in some of the λυσεις, which had been pointed out in the preceding part of the chapter, and are referred to in this enumeration.—3. If the art here mentioned be the art of Poetry itself,
and

^b For instances of such objections, both to the geography, and the astronomy, of Homer, the reader may consult Strabo, passim.

and the faults against that art be, as I understand them to be, essential faults, faults which constitute bad Poetry, i.e. in Aristotle's view, bad imitation, this plainly implies, that the four other faults enumerated are not essential, but accidental faults; κατα συμβεβηκε. But, that such faults as improbability, and immorality, (ἀλογα, βλαβερα,) which had just before been singled out from the rest, as ὄρθαι ἐπιτιμησης—as the most solid objections, and such as admitted of no excuse—that these should be considered by Aristotle as faults merely incidental, not to be objected to the Poetry itself, not affecting the merit of the imitation, καθ' ἑαυτὴν ἁμαρτια, is what, as I have before said, I cannot easily conceive^c.

The expression itself—παρα τὴν ὀρθότητα τὴν κατὰ τέχνην, is indeed ambiguous; and they, who prefer the sense which I have rejected, will perhaps think it favoured by the similar expression, clearly applied to faults against the art of Poetry itself, in the passage,—ποτέρων ἐστὶ τὸ ἁμαρτημα, τῶν κατὰ τὴν τέχνην, ἢ κατ' ἄλλο συμβεβηκε. The expressions, however, are not exactly the same. There, it is, κατὰ τὴν τέχνην—"against the art:" here,—κατὰ τέχνην: "contrary to the rectitude of art."—But Aristotle had before used an expression, that seemed still more strongly to point at the art of Poetry: τὰ πρὸς Αἴττην τὴν τέχνην ἀδυνατα: which, however, it seems necessary, necessary, for the reasons given in NOTE 233, to understand in the same sense, which I have here given to κατα τεχνην. But that passage, and indeed this whole chapter, is, in its present state, so full of obscurity and ambiguity, that every interpretation which can be given must necessarily be, in a great measure, conjectural and disputable. All I can venture to be confident of is, that my explanation of this passage is consistent with my explanation of the other; and that either both are right, or both are wrong.

^c NOTE 233.

NOTE 262.

P. 202. THE ANSWERS, WHICH ARE TWELVE, &c.

How the different Αυσαις, or solutions proposed throughout the chapter are reducible to 12, and which are the 12 that Aristotle meant, are questions, which the defective state of the original renders it very difficult, if not impossible, to answer, with any certainty. And indeed the matter is of so little importance, that it is by no means worth while to enter into any examination of the various modes of reckoning, by which different expositors have endeavoured to solve the problem. Victorius, indeed, is so wise, as to give up the attempt. It will be very easy however, and therefore, I hope, not very foolish, just to enumerate all the Αυσαις, which actually have been mentioned in the chapter, in the order in which they occur, and

VOL. II.

E E

then

then to examine, by way of experiment, whether they are any way reducible to twelve.

- 1.—τυγχάνει τε τέλος, τε αὐτῆς.—i.e. The end of Poetry is better answered, &c.
- 2.—κατὰ συμβεβηκ - - - - The fault is incidental.
- 3.—ὅα δε, (οἱ, βελτίον) - - - It is what is best, or what should be.
- 4.—ὅα φασί, (οἱ, ὅα δοκεῖ) - - - It is according to general opinion.
- 5.—ὅα ἦν, ἢ ἔστιν (οἱ, ἔτι, εἶχεν, οἱ, ἀλήθ) - - - - to truth.
- [6.—σκέπτεον—εἰς τὸν πραττοντα, πρὸς ὃν, ὅτε, &c.] - [Consider circumstances.]
- 7.—Γλωττῇ - - - - - Defend, by the foreign sense of the word.
- 8.—Μεταφορᾷ - - - - - by Metaphor.
- 9.—κατὰ Προσῳδίαν - - - - - by Accent.
- 10.—Διαίρεσιν - - - - - by Punctuation.
- 11.—Ἀμφιβολίᾳ - - - - - by Ambiguity.
- 12.—κατὰ τὸ ἔθ της λέξεως - - - - - by Customary speech.
- 13.—Ποσαχῶς ἂν σημαίνει—οἱ, καθ' ὁμωνυμίαν by the different senses of a word.
- [14.—Γλαυκῶν λυσις] - - - - - [Glauco's answer.]
- [15.—εἰκ, και παρα τὸ εἰκ γινεσθαι] [Probable, that many things should happen improbably.]
- [16.—Οὐ το αὐτο, ἢ ἔ πρὸς τὸ αὐτο, &c.] [The same thing is not spoken of, or, not in the same respect, &c.]

Here are, then, 16 different answers. Of these, it seems, upon the whole, most probable, that the 12 not enclosed in brackets, are the 12 which Aristotle means. My reason is, that in the beginning of the chapter, after laying down the three distinct considerations, of the different objects of imitation, the privileges of poetical language, and the the distinction of essential and incidental faults, he immediately, and explicitly, refers to those three principles, as sources of all the answers.

 Ως δὲ τὰ ἐπιτιμήματα - - - ΕΚ ΤΟΥΤΩΝ ἐπισκο-πῶντα ΛΕΙΝ. Now it will be found, I believe, that the 12 answers above mentioned are drawn from those sources, and that the four remaining answers are not.

But why these four, which evidently are proposed as answers, and seem to be distinct answers, were not admitted in the concluding enumeration, it may not be easy to shew. Perhaps, Aristotle reckoned only as one solution, the two which he assigns to the same objection, with an ἢ, or ἔτιως τε καὶ, &c. This would throw out N^o 14, and 15, which seem, indeed, to be mentioned only as a sort of secondary or subsidiary answers. As to N^o 6, and 16, he might consider them as one; both of them, in fact, saying the same thing, and nearly in the same words—i. e. “circumstances “must be considered.” Still however, taking these together as one answer, that answer will be supernumerary; and how it is fairly to be got rid of, it is difficult to see: the more difficult, because it is the only λύσις furnished by the whole chapter to the objection of immoral tendency, (βλαβερά,) upon which so great stress is laid.

All that seems tolerably clear is, that the 12 answers intended in the recapitulation are those 12, which are deducible from the three principles laid down at the opening of the chapter. In this idea, which I had formed before I consulted any commentator, I was glad to find myself supported by Goulston, in his accurate analysis; where he makes the 12 answers to be those here assigned, and draws them from the three sources at the beginning of the chapter: viz. three from the first source, (N^o 3, 4, 5,)—seven from the second—the diction, (N^o 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13,)—and two from the third source, (N^o 1, and 2.)

NOTE 263.

P. 203. IF THAT WHICH IS THE LEAST VULGAR OR POPULAR BE THE BEST—.

—ΗΤΤΟΝ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΗ.—The word φορτικόν is used in a number of different, and sometimes nicely discriminated, senses, which cannot, all of them, be expressed by any single word in our language. Sometimes, for example, it is to be rendered by extravagant, violent, charged, *outré, &c. as in the

* The Latin writers use molestus in this sense; for whatever is violent, overdone, laboured, affected, &c. Thus Cicero, in the following elegant passage of his Brutus: “Volo enim, ut in scenâ, sic etiam in foro, non “ eos modò laudari, qui celeri motu & difficili utantur, “ sed eos etiam quos statarios appellant, quorum sit illa “ simplex, in agendo, veritas, non MOLESTA.” i.e. μὴ φορτικῇ. cap. xxx. Again—“Latinè loquendi accu“ rata, et sine MOLESTIA diligens, elegantia: i.e. without “ labour

the following passage of Diog. Laertius about Bion:—ἦν δὲ καὶ θιατρικῶς, καὶ πολὺς ἐν τῇ γαλοίῃ διαφορῆσαι, ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΙΣ ὀνόμασι κατὰ τῶν πραγμάτων χρωμένῳ^b.—i. e. extravagant, exaggerated, outrés, as Bayle has well explained it, art. BION, note [B], where he gives an instance of this extravagance of expression in that philosopher, from Plutarch, who calls it ΦΟΡΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΟΝ^c.

Sometimes, applied to persons, it means troublesome, tiresome, &c. as in Ælian—πολύς ἦν λαλῶν, καὶ ἰδοκεῖ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΣ. Var. Hist. XII. 13.—Sometimes, insolent, overbearing, &c. as, in the same writer, it is said of a famous courtesan,—Ἡ δὲ ἦν ΤΙΠΕΡΗΦΑΝΟΣ καὶ δεινῶς ΦΟΡΤΙΚΗ. XII. 63^d.—Sometimes, again, and that very frequently, it is used as synonymous with ἀνελευθερῶς, βαναυσῶς, popular, low, vulgar, &c. as opposed to what is liberal, refined, delicate, genteel, &c. Thus Plutarch—ἀνελευθερῶς κομιδὴ καὶ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΑΣ—φαντασίας. p. 216, ed. H. S. And Plato—ὁ φιλοτιμῶς—

την

“labour or affectation.” cap. xxxviii.—Catullus, too, of an affected grin;

— — — — — illa, quam videtis
Turpe incedere, mimicè ac MOLESTE Ridentem, catuli ore Gallicani.

^b IV. 52.

^c Ερωτικ. p. 1371. ed. H. St. See also the Timon of Lucian, ed. Ben. p. 59.—ἵνα σοὶ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΩΣ διαλεγύμαι—i. e. (as the context shews,) with the extravagance of Tragic rant.

^d Τυπεροπτικῶς, ὑπερφῶν, βαρύς, ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΣ, ἐπαχὺς. Jul. Poll. VI. 5.

την μὲν ἀπὸ τῶν χρημάτων ἴδοντες ΦΟΡΤΙΚΗΝ τιμᾶν ἰσχυταί—“The ambitious man looks upon gain “as a vulgar sort of pleasure,” De Rep. IX,
 p. 254, ed. Mass.—Jul. Pollux describes a species of dance called Μοθῶν, as, ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΝ ὄρχημα καὶ ναυτικόν—“a vulgar and sailor-like dance;” the hornpipe, I suppose, of the Greeks*. And thus Athenæus, where he mentions, from Herodotus, the curious story of Agarista, (the daughter of Clisthenes, king of Sicyon,) and her suitors, says, that Clisthenes rejected Hippoclides, ἰδὼν - - - ΦΟΡ-ΤΙΚΩΣ ὀρχησαμένον: because he did not dance like a gentleman^f: a charge, which, according to Herodotus, seems indeed to have been pretty well founded; for he tells us, that Hippoclides got upon a table and danced upon his head^g.—But let us return to Aristotle. This last sense of the word φορτικόν appears to me clearly to be that, in which it is here used by him. I cannot think, that by φορτικῇ, he intended to express, as Dacier, and the commentators before him, explain it, the trouble and expence of theatrical exhibition—the number of things wanted—actors, scenes, dresses, music, &c.^h. Of all the commentators I have seen,
 M. Batteux

* And see Suidas, v. Μοθῶν.

^f P. 628.

^g — Τῶν κερძῶν ἵρσις, ἐπὶ τὴν τραπέζαν, τοῖς ΣΧΕΛΕΣΙ ΕΧΕΙΡΟΝΟΜΗΣΕ. Herod. VI. p. 238. ed. H. St.

^h “ἥττον φορτικῇ—i. e. quæ paucioribus eget adjunctis “extrinsecus sumptis,” &c. Robortelli.—“Men gravesa,” in the same sense, Castelvetro.—“Manco carca e manco “bisognosa

M. Batteux alone gives, in a short note, what I think the true meaning of the word in this place:—

“ Φορτικῶς, grossier, digne des mercenaires. Aristote, Politic. VIII. c. 6. oppose le spectateur mercenaire & ignorant, φορτικῶς, au spectateur honnête; & le plaisir grossier, ἡδονὴ φορτικὴ, les danses grossières, κινήσεις φορτικωτέρας, au plaisir délicat, aux danses honnêtes.”

Aristotle himself will here be his best commentator, in the passages to which M. Batteux refers.

Some sorts of rhythm, he says, ΦΟΡΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΑΣ ἔχουσι τὰς κινήσεις, (violent and vulgar,) οἱ δὲ, ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΙΩΤΕΡΑΣ¹. Again, in the next chapter, relative to the musical education of youth, he speaks of the pleasure of a popular musical audience, as a vulgar, illiberal sort of pleasure. “The performer there,” he says, “aims only at the pleasure of the hearers,” καὶ ταύτης ΦΟΡΤΙΚΗΣ· διότι τῶν ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΩΝ κρινόμεν εἶναι τὴν ἔργασίαν, (“such performance does not become a gentleman,”) ἀλλὰ ΘΗΤΙΚΩΤΕΡΑΝ· (the playing “bisognosa d’aiuto.” Piccol.—Bemì follows Robortelli. Victorius renders —“importuna et molesta,” but enters into no particular explanation. Dacier —“la moins chargée, & celle qui demande le moins d’aide & de secours.”

¹ De Rep. VIII. 5. p. 455, E.

* In discussing, however, the question, whether boys should learn Music practically, and play or sing them-

ing of a man who is paid for playing :) καὶ ΒΑΝΑΤΣΟΥΣ δὴ (mechanics) συμβαίνει γίνεσθαι· πονηρῶς γὰρ ὁ σκοπῶς πρὸς ὃν ποινῶνται το τελεῶς· ὁ γὰρ ΘΕΑΤΗΣ, ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΣ ὢν, μεταβαλλεῖν εἰώθε τὴν μουσικὴν.—Ibid. p. 457, 8.—In the next chapter is the following passage, still more directly to our present purpose, in which he expressly distinguishes, as here, the two sorts of spectators, or hearers:—ΘΕΑΤΗΣ ΔΙΤΤῶς, ὁ μὲν ΕΛΕΥΘΕΡΟΣ καὶ ΠΕΠΑΙΔΕΥΜΕΝΟΣ, ὁ δὲ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΣ, ἐκ βαναυσῶν, καὶ θητῶν, καὶ ἄλλων τοιῶτων, συγγκεῖμενῶς. p. 459, A¹.

The word occurs frequently in other parts of Aristotle's writings, and seems generally, if not always, to be used in the same sense^m.

By φορτικῇ, then, applied to Tragedy, I think it clear, that he means only—calculated for φορτικοὶ spectators ;

selves, Aristotle determines, that they should, and gives this reason, that "it is a thing impossible, or, at least, "very difficult, for those, who do not actually practise an "art, to be good judges of it." p. 456.—It might be so in those days. Modern connoisseurs, both in Music and Painting, find no such difficulty.

¹ So Plutarch, in the beginning of his Comparison of Aristophanes and Menander, p. 1567, ed. H. S.—Τὸ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΟΝ, φησιν, ἐν λόγοις, καὶ θυμηλικόν, καὶ ΒΑΝΑΤΣΟΝ, ὡς ἔστιν Ἀριστοφάνει, Μενάνδρῳ δὲ ἑδάμῳς. Καὶ γὰρ, ὁ μὲν ΑΠΑΙΔΕΥΤΟΣ καὶ ΙΔΙΩΤΗΣ οἷς ἐμεινῶς λέγει ἀλίσκεται, ὁ δὲ πεπαιδευμένῶς δυσχεραίνει.

^m Ethic. Nicom. IV. 8.—βαμολοχοὶ—καὶ φορτικοί. And I. 5, where he says, that, 'ΟΙ ΠΟΛΛΟΙ καὶ ΦΟΡΤΙΚΩΤΑΤΟΙ, held the summum bonum to be pleasure. See also Rhet. III, 1, p. 584, A.

spectators; adapted to the entertainment of popular audiences"—to the taste, as we commonly express it, of the upper gallery, as opposed to the refined and cultivated taste of men of reading and reflection.

As far as I can judge, from a comparison of the different senses of the word with its etymology^a, the common idea, which runs through and connects them all, is that of excess, or, perhaps, more exactly, of offensive, disgusting, or burdensome, by excess, of some kind or other.

NOTE 264.

P. 203. AS IF THE AUDIENCE, WITHOUT THE AID OF ACTION, &c.

Ὡς γὰρ ἐκ αἰσθανομένων, ἂν μὴ ΑΥΤΟΣ ΠΡΟΣΘΗ, πολλὴν κινήσιν κινῶνται.—This wound has been sufficiently probed. When I found, that the "medica manus" of Mr. Toup had been tried upon it, I looked, at least, for the "salubres Ambrosiæ succos, et odoriferam panaceam"^a, if not for the precious Dictamnus, that would entirely heal it. He proposed to read—ἂν μὴ ΑΥΤΟΣ ΠΡΟΣΘΗ.^b I should be very sorry to do any

^a Mr. Pope, probably without thinking of Aristotle, has almost translated him, where, in his preface to Shakspeare, he says—"It must be allowed, that stage-poetry, of all others, is more particularly levelled to please the populace."

^b From ΦΟΡΤΟΣ—onus. ^c Æn. XII. 411.

^d See Mr. Winstanley's note, p. 309 of his edition.

any injustice to the emendation of so masterly a Greek scholar; but I am obliged to confess, that I do not understand it. "The imitators have recourse to every kind of motion, just as if the audience were not able to understand, (or, to hear) them, without the addition or accompaniment of a flute." How any sense can be made of this, or of any other fair version of the passage, so corrected, I cannot discover. The emendation, surely, requires to be explained, at least; and if Mr. Toup gave any explanation in his letter to Mr. Winstanley, it is to be wished, that the learned editor had communicated it to the public in his note.

It is some comfort, however, that the general meaning of the passage seems liable to little or no difficulty; and, accordingly, in that, all the commentators, I think, are agreed, however widely they may differ as to the reading.

NOTE 265.

P. 203. LIKE BAD FLUTE-PLAYERS, WHO WHIRL THEMSELVES ROUND, WHEN THEY WOULD IMITATE THE MOTION OF THE DISCUS—.

This is one of those antique curiosities, which we stare at, without knowing very well what to make of it.—'Αν ΔΙΣΚΟΝ δὲ μιμεῖσθαι. We should think it very strange, if we were told of a flute-player having occasion to imitate a quoit. But we are not to understand this of a mere instrumental solo, but of a performer accompanying words sung by a Chorus, (as appears from the mention of the Coryphæus,) and endeavouring, in an absurd manner, to express them. The antient Αυλητής, or Tibicen, was not, it seems, a mere sedentary performer, like those of a modern orchestra. He accompanied the Chorus with his person, as well as with his instrument, and seems to have paraded about the stage, in a pompous dress; to have made a part of the Ὀψις, or shew, and to have joined in all the turns, and returns, and various evolutions, of the choral dance. Hence the description of Horace:

Sic priscae motumque et luxuriam addidit arti
Tibicen, traxitque VAGUS per pulpita vestem.

A. P. 214.

Lucian, in his Harmonides, describing the requisites of a good Αυλητής, mentions, among the rest,—καὶ BAINEIN ἐν ῥυθμῳ.*—The great masters, no doubt, respected themselves, and confined their motion to the dignity of a sort of rhythmic strut. But Aristotle, here, is describing the tricks of the φαναῖς or φερτικοί performers. Such a performer might have occasion, or rather take occasion, to imitate the whirling or rolling of a disc, if the subject, for example, of the choral song chanced to be the story of Apollo and Hyacinthus; which is mentioned by Lucian in a long list of fabulous subjects,

* P, 638, ed. Ben.

subjects, enumerated as a part of the knowledge requisite to an accomplished pantomimic dancer^b. Or, the subject might be taken from Homer, Od. θ. 186, &c.

κυλιόμενοι. Dacier, in his note, translates this, "rolling themselves upon the ground." This would be φορτικόν indeed. Yet in this idea he follows Victorius; who enters into a discussion, of some length, to prove that κυλιόμενοι can mean nothing but rolling on the ground. Nor will he allow the difficulty of doing this while they were playing to be a sufficient objection. Certainly, the usual and proper sense of the word is on his side. But it was natural enough, surely, to apply to the motion imitating, the term proper to the motion imitated.

^b De Salt. p. 933. ed. Ben.—A modern dancer—perhaps even M. Vestris himself—would stare at the account which Lucian gives in that treatise, of the accomplishments necessary to make a perfect dancer. "He must not only understand music, but poetry, geometry, and above all, philosophy, natural and moral; rhetoric, painting, sculpture; especially, he must have an excellent memory, and have all history at his fingers ends, from the creation of the world down to Cleopatra," &c. Logic, indeed, Lucian confesses, is not absolutely necessary. But so great, he says, must be his knowledge, that, "like Homer's Chalcas, he must know—

" - - - τα τ' ὄντα, τα τ' ἔσσομενα, προ τ' ἔοντα !"

All this Lucian professes to prove; but, as might well be expected, some of his assertions are very lamely made out, others slurred over, or entirely neglected. The treatise,

NOTE 266.

P. 203. AND PULL THE CORYPHEUS WHEN SCYLLA IS THE SUBJECT.

ἑλκοντες τον Κορυφαιον.—To imitate Scylla,—"naves in saxa trahentem," as Virgil has expressed it*. But it is not easy to see, how the performer, at least while he was playing, could well spare a hand for this operation.—This was even worse than what we call humouring a catch; when, for instance, a singer who is performing Purcell's "Fie, nay prithee, John"—thinks it necessary to collar his neighbour.

NOTE 267.

P. 204. THE TRAGIC IMITATION, WHEN ENTIRE.

Ἡ ὍΛΗ ΤΕΧΝΗ. Heinsius proposed, ἡ ἈΛΛΗ ΤΕΧΝΗ. But I believe the established reading to be right. The whole art—i. e. Tragedy, as represented; with all its constituent parts, and, as it was said before, ἅπαντα μιμνησκη. For it might, as Aristotle presently observes, be read, or recited, like an Epic Poem; and, in that view, the comparison here made would not hold.

ΤΕΧΝΗ—

treasure, however, is, upon the whole, a curious piece; and, though far from sufficient to give a clear and complete idea of the pantomimic dance of the antients, yet it affords more information about it, than is to be found, I believe, any where else.

* Æn. III. 425.

Τεχνη—i. e. the Tragic art : for so he uses the word, cap. i. not for the whole Poetic art, but for a single branch of it:—ἐν ταῖς εἰρημαῖναις ΤΕΧΝΑΙΣ—i. e. Epic Poetry, Tragedy, Comedy, &c. So too at the end of that chapter: τὰς διαφορὰς ΤΩΝ ΤΕΧΝΩΝ. And, again, at the end of this chapter, (as I understand the passage,) τῆς ΤΕΧΝΗΣ ἰργῶ. See NOTE 277.

NOTE 268.

P. 204. TO HEARERS OF THE BETTER SORT—

—Θεατὰς ἐπιεικείς : to which he opposes φάυλας. The word ἐπιεικείς seems rightly explained here by Dacier—"les honnêtes gens ; c'est à dire, les gens qui ont eu une meilleure education." The passage, which he quotes from Plato, is much to the purpose of this chapter. Συγχώρω δὲ τογὲ τοῦτο καὶ ἔγω τοῖς πολλοῖς, δεῖν τὴν μουσικὴν ἡδονὴν κρίνεσθαι· μὴ μὲντοι τῶν ἐπιτυχουστων· ἀλλὰ σχεδὸν ἐκείνην εἶναι μᾶλλον καλλίστην, ἥτις τοῖς βελτιστοῖς, καὶ ἰκανῶς πεπαιδευμένοις τέρπει.—De Leg. II. p. 658.

Aristotle uses ἐπιεικής in the same sense, Eth. Nicom. IV. 8, p. 186, ed. Wilk.—τοιαῦτα λέγειν καὶ ἀκροῖν, οἷα τῷ ΕΠΙΕΙΚΕΙ ΚΑΙ ΕΛΕΤΘΕΡΩι ἀρμόττει.

NOTE 269.

P. 204. AND IN SINGING—.

Και διαδοντα. There seems great reason to suspect this word. For, what is the force of the preposition here? Some commentators, without disputing the reading, neglect the preposition entirely, and render the word as if it were the simple participle, ᾄδοντα. Others understand, singing throughout: “qui continenter canit.” Goulst. But the proper sense of διαδεν, would, I think, be—to sing dissonantly—to sing out of tune,—as, ΔΙΑΦΩΝΕΙΝ. And so the word is actually used in the treatise Περὶ Κόσμου, in Aristotle’s works, and opposed to ΣΥΝᾶδον, as ΔΙΑΦΩΝΕΙΝ is to ΣΥΜΦΩΝΕΙΝ:—συμφορομενον, και διαφορομενον· συνᾶδον, και ΔΙΑΙΔΟΝ^a. “The agreeing, and the disagreeing, “the consonant, and the dissonant”^b. But as the word cannot here be admitted, in that which appears to be its only proper and warrantable sense, I suspect, it might, originally, have been only ᾄδοντα. Considering how frequently Δ and Α were confounded by transcribers, ΚΑΙ ΑΙΔΟΝΤΑ might easily be blundered into ΚΑΙ ΔΙΑΙΔΟΝΤΑ. One MS. reading is διαΔιδοντα; where the ΔΙ, plainly enough, arose from the ΑΙ.

The commentators understand from this passage, that there were two sorts of rhapsodists;
one,

^a Tom. I. p. 609.

^b Harris. Philos. Arrang. p. 47.

one, of those who recited Epic Poetry, and another, of those who sung it. Whether this can be proved from other passages of antient authors, I know not. From this, it certainly cannot. Aristotle says, ΚΑΙ ῥαψῳδῶντα—ΚΑΙ διαδόντα^c. Whatever the διαδων was, he is here clearly distinguished from the ῥαψῳδων—the rhapsodist.

That the rhapsodists did not, in the strict and musical sense, at least, of the word, sing the verses of Homer, but recited or declaimed them only, we may pretty safely infer, from what is expressly said of Epic Poetry at the beginning of this work—that “it imitates by words only,” without mèlody and rhythm—i.e. without music. This, indeed, will not prove that Epic Poetry was never sung; any more than what was said of Tragedy—that it imitates by words and music—will prove that it was never recited, or read. Yet the least, I think, that can be inferred from it, is, that Epic Poetry was, in general, and for the most part, recited or declaimed only; and, consequently, that the rhapsodists, properly so called, being the established performers performers of Epic Poetry, as the actors^d were of Tragic, performed it always in that manner; without singing, any farther, than as the tones of loud and sustained declamation approach more nearly to singing than those of common reading. The earliest Lyric Poet-Musicians, indeed, as we learn from Plutarch and Athenæus, used to sing even the hexameters of Homer and Hesiod, as well as their own, to the lyre. But they, plain^y, speak of this, as of an antient practice:—τον Τερπανδρον, ΚΙΘΑΡΩΔΙΚΩΝ ποιητην ὄντα νομῶν, [hymns,] κατὰ νομον ἱκάσων, ΤΟΙΣ ΕΠΕΣΙ, τοῖς ἱάντε, καὶ ΤΟΙΣ ὍΜΗΡΟΥ, ΜΕΛΗ περιτιθέντα, Αἰδεῖν ἐν τοῖς ᾠγῶσιν. Plut. Dial. de Mus. p. 2074, ed. H. St. And afterwards—ὅτι δὲ οἱ κιθαρωδικοὶ νομοὶ, οἱ ΠΑΛΑΙ, ἔξ ΕΠΩΝ συνίσταντο, Τιμοθεῶς ἰδὼν, &c. p. 2075. So, too, Athenæus:—“Chamæleon, in his book about Stesichorus, καὶ μελωδῆθηναι φησι, ἔμνονον τὰ Ὅμηρου, ἀλλὰ καὶ Ἑσίοδου, καὶ Ἀρχιλόχου, &c. ΚΑΙ μελωδῆθηναι—“ were even sung.” p. 620.

^c This passage is much mistaken by M. Batteux, who renders it, “Qu'on peut faire des gestes en recitant l'Épopée, --- qu'on peut même chanter,” &c. Faire des gestes, comes far short of ΠΕΡΙΕΓΡΑΖΕΣΘΑΙ σημεῖοις. The ναί which precedes the participle, ῥαψῳδῶντα, is omitted: and to produce his sense of διαδόντα—qu'on peut même chanter, the Greek should be—ἐν περιεγραζέσθαι --- ναί διαΔΕΙΝ.

It is not, however, at all improbable, that Homer might be sometimes sung, in Aristotle’s time, and that this Mnasitheus, (of whom nothing is known,) might be a performer in this way. But, that this was a distinct thing from ῥαψῳδία seems pretty clear.

^d Ῥαψῳδοὶ, and ὑποκριταί, are continually joined together. See Plato, in that entertaining dialogue, the Io, tom. I. p. 532, D. 535, E. and in a great many other places.

NOTE 270.

P. 205. WHOSE GESTURES RESEMBLE THOSE OF IMMODEST WOMEN.

The passage of Aulus Gellius, to which I referred in my note on the translation, as a story, both curious in itself, and confirming what was there advanced, is this. "Histrio in terrâ Græciâ
 " fuit famâ celebri : qui, gestûs et vocis claritudine
 " & venustate, cæteris antestabat. Nomen fuisse
 " aiunt POLUM. Tragœdias poetarum nobilium
 " scitè atque asseveratè actitavit. Is Polus
 " unicè amatum filium morte amisit. Eùm luctum
 " quàm satis visus est eluxisse, rediit ad quæstum " artis. In eo tempore Athenis Electram So" phoclis acturus, gestare urnam quasi cum " Orestis ossibus debebat. Ita compositum fa-
 " bulæ argumentum est, ut, veluti fratris reliquias
 " ferens Electra, compleret commisereturque in" teritum ejus, qui per vim extinctus existimatur.
 " Igitur Polus, lugubri habitu Electræ indutus,
 " ossa atque urnam à sepulchro tulit filii ; &, quasi
 " Orestis amplexus, opplevit omnia, non simula-
 " chris neque imitamentis, sed luctu atque lamentis
 " veris & spirantibus. Itaque, quum agi fabula
 " videretur, dolor actitatus est." A. Gell. VII. 5.

NOTE 271.

P. 205. THE MUSIC AND THE DECORATION, BY THE LATTER OF WHICH THE ILLUSION IS HEIGHTENED, &c.

The Greek, here, in either of the two readings warranted by manuscript authority, is unsatisfactory and suspicious, and the sense, consequently, uncertain. The reading of the old editions is—δι' ἧς τὰς ἡδονὰς ἐπισανταὶ ἐναργεστάται: which Victorius renders—"per quam voluptates percipiunt evidentissimè:"—"through, or by means of, which, they perceive the pleasures most evidently." Nothing can well be more harsh, or strange.—ἐπισανταὶ—they perceive:—Who?—The spectators. To this mode of speaking, however, I should not object; because this ellipsis, of οἱ ἄνθρωποι, is frequent in both the Greek and Latin writers *. Thus, in the beginning of this chapter, κινεῖνται. This answers to that very convenient idiom, of which the French make so much use, and which we so often find the want of—on s'agite—on apperçoit, &c. ^b.

But,

* See Sanct. Minerv. IV. 4. and Periz. note 39.

^b According to Menage, the Fr. on, is only a corruption of homme; and on dit, for example, was antiently written, "huom dit." And thus the Italian writers use uom. Thus—"quando uom se n'accorge." Tasso's Aminta.—"Uom dice." Petrarch, Son. 190, &c. And thus the Germans use the word man: man saght—men say—they say, &c.—See Menage's Osservaz. sopra l'Aminta.

But, the verb, ἐπισανται, will, I apprehend, by no means bear the sense here forced upon it, of perceiving pleasure^c; or any sense, but that of understanding, or knowing. Were I, therefore, obliged to make some sense of this reading, it would be this:—"per quam [quæ efficiuntur] voluptates, "nōrunt homines apertissimè:"—"the pleasures, "which are produced through which, are clearly "understood—well known to all." But this, I confess, is violent interpretation; and, in particular, I doubt whether the word ἐναργες is ever used, by Aristotle at least, as merely synonymous to φανερὸν; as evident to reason or understanding, and opposed to doubtful. It always means, I believe, evident, clear, visible, to the eye of imagination. Thus, cap. xvii.—Δεῖ δὲ τὰς μυθεῖς συνίσταναι - - - ὅτι μάλιστα ΠΡΟ ΟΜΜΑΤΩΝ τιθεμενον· ἔτω γὰρ ἂν ΕΝΑΡΓΕΣΤΑΤΑ ὈΡΩΝ, ὥσπερ ΠΑΡ' ΑΤΤΟΙΣ ΓΙΓΝΟΜΕΝΟΣ ΤΟΙΣ ΠΡΑΤΤΟΜΕΝΟΙΣ, &c. These words seem to furnish the best comment upon the passage in question, and will perhaps lead us to the most reasonable and least exceptionable interpretation of it; for perfect satisfaction is not, I think, to be expected, in the present condition of the text. We ought, surely, at all events, to adhere to the proper and clear meaning of the adverb ἐναργεστατα, as used in the passage just cited; where the word itself, and the explanatory explanatory expressions which accompany it, afford a pretty strong presumption, that Aristotle, here, meant to express the particular advantage which Tragedy receives from the ὄψις, or, from actual *representation, as giving to the imitation the greatest possible reality of effect, and producing the most perfect illusion in the spectator. Yet this, it must be owned, is very obscurely expressed, if it be expressed, by the Greek; which, according to the best reading, that of Victorius, and of many MSS^d. will stand thus: καὶ ἴτι, ὃ μικρὸν μερὶ τῆν μουσικὴν καὶ τὴν ὄψιν ἔχει, δι' ἧς αἱ ἡδοναὶ στυγερὰνταὶ ἐναργεστάται: that is, according to the only sense which I can find for it—"and the decoration, " or spectacle; by means of which, the pleasures " we receive from Tragedy, are rendered more " sensible,

^c Vici. himself admits this objection: "Verbum hoc (ἐπισανται) insolens videtur in hoc significatu."

* So the passage was understood by the editor of the Ox. ed. without accents, 1760, who refers δι' ἧς to the ὄψις, and proposes this emendation: δι' ἧς, (scil. ὁψέως) ΤΗΣ ἡδονῆς συνιστάται ΤΑ ἐναργεστάται—"per quam, " voluptatis pars evidentissima efficitur; quippe quæ oculis " subjecta est fidelibus." But I cannot think that Aristotle would have written, δι' ἧς, ΤΗΣ ἡδονῆς - - -

^d See Mr. Winstanley's edition.

• It is, certainly, most natural to understand the pleasures of the music and decoration to be here spoken of. And so it is generally understood. But I cannot see how the words will admit that sense: for the Greek does not say—"by which the most sensible and striking pleasures are produced," but, "by which the pleasures (i.e. some other " pleasures,) are produced in the most sensible and “sensible, striking, illusive,” &c. But many objections may, undoubtedly, be made. For the fair and literal version would be this: “by means of which, the pleasures are formed, composed, constructed, or constituted”, in the clearest and “most visible manner.” I give, here, what I apprehend to be the only fair sense of the verb, συνισσασθαι; but it seems to be, by no means, the proper word in this place, and probably is not the word which Aristotle wrote. If any one MS. would offer me ΠΑΡΙΣΤΑΝΤΑΙ, I would readily accept it. Ælian, describing the effect of a trumpet, sounding suddenly, at the instant when a famous painting was exhibited, of a warrior in the act of rushing to the battle, says—ἄμα τε ἐν το μέλῳ ἤκουετο τραχὺ καὶ φοβερόν — — καὶ ἰδεῖκνυτο ἡ γραφή, καὶ ὁ στρατιώτης ἰβλεπετο, τε μέλῳς ΕΝΑΡΓΕΣΤΕΡΑΝ τὴν φαντασίαν τε ἐκβοηθοντῶς ἔτι καὶ μᾶλλον ΠΑΡΑΣΤΗΑΝΤΟΣ: i. e. “presenting to the imagination “a still more lively and striking image.” But again—αἱ ἡδοναί, is not what one would expect here. To speak, indeed, of terror and pity, as the pleasures of Tragedy, is perfectly agreeable, both to the doctrine, and to the language, of the author, “striking way”—ἐναργεστάτα. To express the other sense, Aristotle would probably have written, ἐπαργεστάται:—δι’ ἧς αἱ ἐνεργεστάται συνιστάνται ἡδοναί.

¹ Vict.—conflantur—coagmentantur. And, indeed, in this sense, and no other, is the verb συνισσασθαι used throughout the treatise.

² Var. Hist. II. 44.

author, throughout^b. But, it is not, properly, the pleasure—it is not the terror, or the pity—that is rendered more ἐναργής; but that pleasure is heightened by the action being rendered so.

Upon the whole, however, I see no other meaning that can be obtained from the words, without still greater violence and improbability of interpretation. Dacier, Batteux, and Goulston, make the assertion—αἱ ἡδοναί, &c. relate to both music and decoration. But it is, surely, quite unwarrantable to give to—δὲ 'HΣ, the sense of, δὲ 'ΩΝ, or δὲ 'ΑΙΝ. Besides that the music, however great the pleasure it may afford, cannot, I think, properly be considered as contributing to the ἐναργεια, or as heightening the illusion, of Tragedy. Victorius, who read—την μουσικην και ΤΑΣ ὈΥΕΙΣ, very consistently made ἡς refer to μουσικη only: and Castelvetro very properly observes, that, “if we read—την ὁψιν—le predette parole [i. e. δὲ ἡς αἱ ἡδοναί, κ. τ. αλ.] avranno rispetto alla vista; e conteneranno la commendatione della detta vista, per la quale si costituisca il diletto più manifestamente—che non si fa per le parole dell' epopea.” p. 690. He appears, I think; to have understood the passage in the way I have proposed. But he mentions another reading, which I have not seen noticed anywhere else—ἐν ἐργασια^c. This had occurred to me, formerly, as a conjecture,

^b See NOTE 277.

^c “Alcuni testi leggono ἐν ἐργασια.” — conjecture, before I had seen Castelvetro's commentary. But it gives much the same sense, and would remove no difficulty with respect to the passage itself; though, as I shall presently have occasion to observe, it might suit better with what follows.

NOTE 272.

P. 205. IT HAS THE ADVANTAGE OF GREATER CLEARNESS - - - AS WELL IN READING, AS IN REPRESENTATION.

Εἶτα, καὶ τὸ ἰσχυρὸς ἔχει, καὶ ἐν τῇ ἀναγνώσει, καὶ ἐπὶ τῶν ἔργων.—It seems rather strange, that, immediately after mentioning the ἰσχυρὸς of the Ὀψις, Aristotle should say — “Then, it has also the “ἰσχυρὸς,” &c. It was this which induced me to suspect, that for ἰσχυρῶτα, in the preceding passage, we should read—ἐνΕργῶτα: “By means of “which, [i. e. of the Ὀψις,] the pleasures we receive “from Tragedy (those, of terror and pity excited “by imitation, as he says cap. xiv. *) are rendered “more forcible and efficacious.” But the objection is, perhaps, not of sufficient force to warrant a departure from the established reading of all the manuscripts, ἰσχυρῶτα: and we may, well enough, understand the author, as if he had said—“Then, “farther, another advantage is, that Tragedy has “this ἰσχυρὸς, not only on the stage, and on account of the Ὀψις, but even in reading also.”

That

* —τὴν ἀπὸ ἐλευθέρου καὶ φόβου διὰ μίμησιν, ἩΔΟΝΗΝ.

That ἀναγνώσει is right, (not ἀναγνωρισει,) I cannot entertain a doubt. Nothing can be more evidently nonsensical than this distinction—"both in the discoveries, and in the incidents;" as if a discovery were not an incident.

The expression, ἐπὶ τῶν ἔργων, for, in representation, acting, performance, &c. seems liable to no difficulty. Thus, De Rep. VIII. p. 455, δὴλον ἐκ τῶν ΕΡΓΩΝ—from what happens in the performance of such music^b. And see ibid. cap. vi. throughout which, ἔργα is repeatedly used for musical performance; particularly, p. 457, —τα θαυμαστικά καὶ περιττά ΤΩΝ ΕΡΓΩΝ, "surprising and elaborate performance."

NOTE 273.

P. 206. ATTAINING THE END OF ITS IMITATION IN A SHORTER COMPASS.

Dryden says of this passage—"It is one reason of Aristotle's, to prove that Tragedy is the more noble, because it turns in a shorter compass; the whole action being circumscribed within the space of four and twenty hours. He might prove as well, that a mushroom is to be preferred before a peach, because it shoots up in the compass of a night." &c.

If Aristotle had said, that Tragedy was the more noble, because a Poet could compose a Tragedy in much less time than an Epic Poem,
the

^b See Diss. II. vol. i. p. 80.

the simile would have been justly applied. Dryden had, but just before, said, that "the effects of Tragedy are too violent to be lasting." But he did not give himself time to see, that Tragedy owes this greater violence of effect to the shortness of its plan; that is, to its stricter unity, its more concentrated and unbroken interest, its "close accelerated plot^a;" to that ἀθροον, as Aristotle calls it, so essential to the purpose of Tragedy, which is, to give the pleasure of strong emotion. The Epic Poem is of too tedious a length, too various and episodic, to produce that effect in the same degree as Tragedy, which is read, or seen, at once, and without interruption.

But the case was, that Dryden, (who, as I have before had occasion to remark^b, appears to have taken his idea of Aristotle from French translation,) wrote this in the preface to his translation of an Epic Poem^c; on the contrary, when he was writing on Tragedy, he gave Tragedy the preference^d.

NOTE 274.

P. 206. HIS POEM, IF PROPORTIONABLY CONTRACTED, WILL APPEAR CURTAILED.

—Μυαρον.—Nothing is more diverting than the explanation which some commentators give of this word,

^a Dr. Hurd's Disc. on Poet. Imit. p. 140.

^b Vol. i. p. 281, note ^d. ^c Preface to the Æneid.

^d "Though Tragedy be justly preferred above the other"—i.e. the Epic Poem. Essay on Dram. Poesy.

word, and its application here. The Poem, it seems, is compared to the tail of a mouse, or a rat, which grows less and less towards the end:—" versus extremum attenuata ²." I never heard, that any naturalists have observed this property to be peculiar to the tails of rats and mice. The fact seems to be, that the words μυρον, and μειρον, however their etymologies may appear to differ, have both the same meaning—that of cropped, curtailed, tronqué, as M. Batteux translates it. Μειρον ³ σιχρον, i. e. ὁ κατὰ τὸ τέλος ἑλλειπὼν χρόνος. [Hephæst. p. 92, ed. De Pathe.]—To which is opposed, δολιχον ⁴—a long-tailed verse: ὁ κατὰ τὸ τέλος πλεονάζων συλλαβή.

In the Rhetoric, Aristotle applies μειρον ⁵ to a period that is too short, and disappoints the ear by ending abruptly. The passage is curious for its expression, and illustrates both the word itself, and its application, here, to a Poem, which disappoints the expectation of a reader in the same manner, by ending before its time. Δει δὲ, καὶ τὰ κῆλα, καὶ τὰς περιόδους, μὴτε ΜΕΙΟΥΤΡΟΤΕ εἶναι, μὴτε ΜΑΚΡΑΣ· τὸ μὲν γὰρ ΜΙΚΡΟΝ [i. e. μειρον] προσπταίνει πολλὰκις ποιεῖ τὸν ἀκροατὴν· ἀνάγκη γὰρ, ὅταν, ἐπὶ ὁμίῳ ἐπὶ τὸ πορρω, καὶ τὸ μετρον ἔῃ ἔχει ἐν ἑαυτῷ ὅρε, ΑΝΤΙΣΠΑΣΘΗ· παύσαμεν, ὅσον, ΠΡΟΣΠΤΑΙΕΙΝ γιγνεσθαι, διὰ τὴν ΑΝΤΙΚΡΟΤΗΣΙΝ. Rhet. III. 9, p. 592, ed. Duxal.

² So Robertelli, Victorius, Goulston.—" Appaia una coda di topo." Castelvetro.—" Venga ella à far' appa-³ rentia di coda di sorcio, col suo fine angusto." Piccol.

NOTE 275.

P. 206. IF EXTENDED TO THE USUAL LENGTH.

Ακολουθῶντα τῷ τε μέτρῳ μήκει—. Almost all the commentators and translators understand — answerable to the length of the metre. And this is, certainly, the most obvious and unforced sense of the words: for, had Aristotle meant, by μέτρον, the standard measure, or length, of the Poem, as other commentators understand it, he, probably, would have rather said—τῷ τε ΜΗΚΟΤΕ ΜΕΤΡΩ.² Μέτρον is so used in the passage given in the last note: το ΜΕΤΡΩΝ ἡ ἰχθὺς ἐν ἑαυτῷ ὄρε. If, however, metre be the sense, (for, after all, the passage is ambiguous,) the expression must, I think, be understood as a short way of saying—“conformable to the usual length of Poems in that metre”—of Poems in heroic verse. See what is said, cap. xxiv. about the adaptation of the hexameter to Epic Poetry: εἰδὲς ΜΑΚΡΑΝ συρᾶσιν ἐν ἄλλῳ πεποίηκεν ἢ τῷ ἥρωϊ. — I cannot conceive that Aristotle meant to say, that the length of the Epic Poem was proportioned, or ought to be proportioned, to the length of the metre. Yet so the commentators. “Si — Poeta secutus fuerit longitudinem, quæ instar videtur ejus carminis.” Vict.—“Si cum metri longitudine provehatur.” Goulst. &c. It was not the length of the hexameter

² As, μήκεις ὄρε, cap. xxiv. and cap. vii.

hexameter which made it the fittest measure for heroic Poetry, but the nature of the feet of which it is composed ; and on that account it was preferred, as εασιμωτατον και ογκωδεστατον των μετρων. cap. xxiv. The length of a verse is to be measured by the times (χρονοι) which compose it. Now the hexameter is but one third longer than the Iambic trimeter ; their respective times being 24, and 18 : so that the length of an Epic Poem would be strictly proportioned to the length of its verse—τω τε μετρε μῆκει—were it longer by one third only than a Tragedy.

NOTE 276.

P. 206. DILUTED.

ῥαρη—watery. Aristotle uses the same metaphor in the following passage of his second book De Republicâ, where, opposing, the community of wives and children proposed by *Plato, he very justly objects, that it would weaken the bond of social union, by diluting the social affections, and destroying—

Relations dear, and all the charities

Of father, son, and brother - - -

Par. Lost, iv. 756.

—Εν δε τη πολει, την ΦΙΛΙΑΝ ἀναγκαιον ῬΑΡΗ γινεσθαι, δια την κοινωνιαν την τοιαυτην,
και

* Rep. V.

και η̄κιστα λεγειν τον ε̄μον^b, η̄ ῡιον, πατερα, η̄ πατερα, ῡιον. Ωσπερ γαρ μικρον γλυκυ, εις πολυ ῡδωρ μιχθεν, αναισθητον ποιει την κρασιν, ε̄τω συμβαινει και την οικειοτητα, την προς αλληλας, την απο των ονοματων τετων—κ.τ.λ. I stop there, because the passage is evidently defective, though the sense is plain.

NOTE 277.

P. 207. AND, ALSO, IN THE PECULIAR END AT WHICH IT AIMS—.

Και, ῑτι, τη της τεχνης ῑργω—. The expression is ambiguous. It may mean, either the end, or business, of the Poetic art in general, or, that of Tragedy—of the Tragic art^a. The latter, however, seems, pretty clearly, to be the meaning: for his expression—τατοις τε διαφερον πασι, ΚΑΙ ΕΤΙ τη της τεχνης ῑργω—shews the author to be speaking, here, of a distinct advantage. But, if we understand it to mean, that Tragedy answers the end of Poetry better than the Epic, this cannot be considered as an advantage distinct from those enumerated before, which are, plainly, such as contribute to the general end of Poetry—that of giving

^a He alludes here to Plato's expressions, who contended, on the contrary, that the bond of social unity must be the closer, where all the citizens—ἀμα φθεγγονται—τα τοιαυτα ρηματα, το τε ΕΜΟΝ, και το ΟΥΚ ΕΜΟΝ. p. 356, ed. Mass.

^b See NOTE 267.

giving pleasure—of interesting, delighting, striking, &c. Whereas, if the peculiar end of Tragedy be superior to that of Epic Poetry, this, indeed, is an additional and separate advantage. Besides, the parenthetical insertion which immediately follows—δε ΓΑΡ, ἐ τὴν τυχεσαν ἡδονὴν ποιοῦν αὐτὰς (i.e. the Epic and Tragic Poems,) ἀλλὰ τὴν εἰσ-μεινὴν—plainly implies, that the τεχνικὸν ἔργον, of which he had been speaking, was that of affording the particular pleasure proper to the species. And thus, too, the word ἔργον is used in other passages: τραγῳδίας ἔργον, cap. vi. and cap. xiii.

The words, μαλλον τε τελευτα τυγχανουσα, present a similar, but more embarrassing, ambiguity. Is τελευτα, here, the end of Poetry, or the end of Tragedy? If we take it in the latter sense, Aristotle will say, that Tragedy is superior, both because its end—the peculiar effect which it purposes to produce—is superior to that of the Epic Poem, and, because it attains that end more perfectly than the Epic attains its end. But this Aristotle has not proved, nor does it appear to be true. On the other hand, if we understand τελευτα to mean the end of the poetic art^b, it is obviously true, that, if Tragedy be superior in all those respects which he had mentioned—in its closer unity, its brevity, its εισαγγελία, its music, and its decorations—
and,

^b As it does in a similar expression, cap. xxv. which favours the same sense here: “εἰ τυγχάνω τε τελευτα τε αὐτῆς”—i.e. of Poetry in general.

and, besides, (καὶ ἔτι) in the specific end at which it aims—it must, on the whole, be preferable to the Epic Poem; as answering more effectually the end of Poetry, by giving greater pleasure.

For, that this, in Aristotle's view, was the great end of the art, and of all its branches, appears, if I mistake not, evidently, from many other passages of this treatise, as well as from that now before us. Nor does he, any where, appear to me to give any countenance to an idea, which rational criticism has, now, pretty well exploded—that utility and instruction are the end of Poetry. That it may indeed be rendered, in some degree, useful and improving, few will deny; none, that it ought to be made so, if it can. But, that the chief end and purpose of Poetry is to instruct—that Homer wrote his Iliad on purpose to teach mankind the mischiefs of discord among chiefs, and his Odyssey, to prove to them the advantages of staying at home and taking care of their families^c—this is so manifestly absurd, that one is really astonished to see so many writers, one after the other, discoursing gravely in defence of it^d. It

* “La vérité qui sert de fond à cette fiction, et qui avec elle compose la Fable, est, Que l'absence d'une personne hors de chez soi, ou qui n'a point l'œil à ce qui s'y fait, y cause de grands desordres.”—And again—“Ces grands noms de Rois, de Heros, d'Achille, d'Agamemnon, & d'Ulysse, ne designent pas moins les derniers Bourgeois,” &c.—Du Poeme Ep. I. 10.

^d Piccolomini, in particular, p. 369, &c. of his Annot. nella Poet. d'Arist. And the reader may see, if he has

It is true indeed, that Aristotle, in his account of Tragedy, mentions the correction and refinement of the passions, pity, terror, &c. as a useful effect of Tragic representations. But he no where, either in his definition, where we might surely have expected him to be explicit, or in any other part of his book, calls that effect the end of Tragedy. All his expressions prove, that his end, both of Tragic and of Epic Poetry, was pleasure; though, with respect to Tragedy, he asserts, (by way, as I have before suggested, of obviating Plato's objections to it*,) that the pleasure arising from it was so far from being pernicious, that it was even useful; so far from inflaming the passions of men, that it tended, on the contrary, to purify and moderate them in common life. When the reader sees the expressions, to which I allude, laid together, he will hardly, I think, entertain any doubt upon this head.—τα μάλιστα, οἷς ΨΥΧΑΓΩΓΕΙ[†]

ἢ Τρα-

any stomach to see, the disgusting nonsense of Le Bossu upon this subject, ch. ii. iii. iv. &c. of his first book. By way of perfect contrast, he may then turn to the Dissertation on the Idea of Universal Poetry, [Dr. Hurd's Hor. vol. ii.] See also Dr. Beattie's Essay on Poetry and Music, ch. i.—This absurd notion was also long ago combated in a masterly manner by that fine and philosophical writer, La Motte, in the discourse prefixed to his Odes, p. 23—31.

* NOTE 45, p. 3. of this volume.

† This looks much, as if he would have assented to the rational assertion of Eratosthenes, which Strabo com-

VOL. II.

G G bats,

ἡ Τραγωδία, μυθε μερῇ ἴσιν, &c. cap. vi.—ἴσιν δὲ ἐχ αὐτῇ ἀπο Τραγωδίας ἮΔΟΝΗ. cap. xiii.—ἐ γὰρ πασαν δει ζῆτειν ἮΔΟΝΗΝ ἀπο Τραγωδίας, ἀλλὰ ΤΗΝ ΟΙΚΕΙΑΝ. Ἐπει δὲ τὴν ἀπο ἔλεος καὶ φόβου, δια μιμησεως, δει ἮΔΟΝΗΝ παρασκευάζειν τὸν ποιητὴν—
cap. xiv.—ἴν', ὥσπερ ζῶον ἐν ὅλῳ, ποιῇ τὴν ΟΙΚΕΙΑΝ ἮΔΟΝΗΝ. cap. xxiii.—τὴν ὅψιν, δι' ἧς Αἱ ἮΔΟΝΑΙ, &c. cap. ult.—δει γὰρ ἐ τὴν τυχεύσαν ἮΔΟΝΗΝ ποιεῖν ΑΥΤΑΣ, ἀλλὰ τὴν εἰρημένην. ibid.

From all this it appears, I think, indubitably, that the great end of Poetry in general, was, in Aristotle's opinion, to give pleasure; as Castel- vetro, long ago, rightly contended. "Coloro, che "vogliono, che la poesia sia trovata principal-
"mente per giovare, o per giovare e per dilet-
"tate insieme, veggano che non s'oppongano all'
"autorità d'Aristotele, il quale, qui ed altrove,
"non par che le assegni altro, che diletto; e se
"pure le concede alcuno giovamento, glielo concede
"per accidente; come è la purgatione dello spa-
"vento e della compassione per mezzo della Tra-
"gedia." p. 505.

The peculiar end of Tragedy, he has expressly told us, 'is to afford that pleasure, which results from fictitious terror and pity: τὴν ἀπο ἔλεος καὶ φόβου δια μιμησεως ἴδουσαν.—What he regarded as the peculiar end of Epic Poetry, I observe that he has

bats,—ποιητὴν πάντα στοχαζέσθαι ΨΥΧΑΓΩΓΙΑΣ, ὍΤ ΔΙΔΑΣΚΑΛΙΑΣ. Strabo, p. 15. And see the Diss. on the Idea of Univ. Poetry, above referred to, has no where distinctly said. But from what he has said, of the advantages which its plan affords, with respect to grandeur, and variety, and the admission of the wonderful and surprising^a, and also of the superior richness of its language^b, we may collect, that his ideas on this subject accorded with those of the best modern critics; and that he held the end of the Epic Poem to be, according to the exact description of an eminent writer, “admiration, produced by a grandeur of design, “and variety of important incidents, and sustained by all the energy and minute particularity of description”^c.

This end, however, and these peculiar advantages, of the Epic plan, Aristotle has not, as I have before remarked^d, brought forward, to complete the comparison in this chapter: but he plainly, and, I think, justly, considered them as more than compensated by the closer interest, more perfect illusion, stronger emotion, deeper impression, and, in his view, more useful tendency, of Tragedy. The Epic Poem loses in force of effect, what it gains in variety; in nature and passion, what it gains in grandeur and sublimity. The very necessity, and the merit, of its variety,
and

^a Cap. xxiv.—Transl. Part III. Sect. 2.

^b Cap. xxii. ad fin. and cap. xxiv.—Διο και γλωττας, &c.
Transl. vol. i. p. 174, 175. and 180, 181.

^c Dr. Hurd's Disc. on Poet. Imit. p. 141.

^d Vol. i. p. 58, 59.

and of the *ἐπεισοδίων ἀνομοιοις ἐπεισοδίοις*¹, are a confession of its defects, as implying a too great extent of plan, a feebleness of interest, a want of relief. It seems, indeed, to be the great art of the Epic Poet, to make us amends, by the striking beauty of particular parts, for the fatigue and ennui which unavoidably results, more or less, from the whole. A strong proof of the superiority of Tragedy, and of the justness of Aristotle's decision, is, that every reader is most delighted with the Episodes of Epic Poetry; with those subordinate and more compressed actions, which give us the very pleasure of Tragedy—which interest and affect us by exciting pity and terror: with the meeting of Hector and Andromache, and the supplication of Priam to Achilles for the body of his son, in the Iliad; with the love, despair, and death, of Dido, the episode of Nisus and Euryalus, and the parting scene between old Evander and his son, in the *Æneid*².

But though, of all the pleasures which Poetry, or Music, or Painting, can afford, the pleasure of emotion deserves to be esteemed the greatest, yet all all those arts certainly afford considerable pleasures of other kinds; and, perhaps, to do full justice to the Epic Poem, we ought not to characterize it by any one particular and principal pleasure, but by that variety, which is peculiar to it, and which comprehends, in some degree or other, every sort of pleasure, that serious Poetry can give". Whatever, therefore, may be decided with respect to the comparative excellence of the Poems themselves, we may safely perhaps assent to the general decision of criticism, respecting the comparative merits of the Poets, and allow, that "the first praise of genius is due to the writer of an Epic Poem; as it requires an assemblage of all the powers which are singly sufficient for other compositions".

¹ Cap. xxiv.

² Æn. VIII, 557, &c.—particularly, from v. 572 to 584. I do not know any where a finer example of natural pathos, heightened by the nicest selection of expression, and by such harmony of versification, as would almost make nonsense pass upon the understanding for sense, through the recommendation, if I may be allowed such an expression, of the ear.

* Some writers give still greater latitude to the variety of Epic Poetry. And indeed, if what should, or may, be done, is to be determined by what has been done by the best Epic Poets—by Homer, Virgil, and Tasso, (for Ariosto is a comic Poet,) it even admits, occasionally, of some departure from rigid dignity, and of some approach, at least, to the smile of Comedy, though not to the broad laugh of Farce. See Lord Kaimes, Elem. of Criticism, vol. i. p. 289, and the treatise Περὶ Ὅλης ποίσεως, p. 257, vol. v. of Ed. Hom. Ernest.

† Dr. Johnson's Life of Milton.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

VOL. I.

Page 21, Note 7. It ought to have been mentioned, that this book of the Odyssey was not translated by Pope himself, but by Fenton.

P. 147. BY AGATHO.] Perhaps I ought rather to have adhered to the old and best authenticated reading, ἀγᾶθον. Victorius found Αγαθον only in one MS. and was induced to prefer it, principally because the other reading could not well be reconciled with his interpretation of the passage. He also objects, that the conjunction, nam, in that reading, would have no meaning, "cum esset, illo pacto, nihil quod copularet." But nam must then be rendered etiam, and, indeed, can be understood no otherwise, if we read ἀγᾶθον; and the sense will be—"as Achilles is made a good character even by Homer;" as if he had added—who has so well observed the ἥθος, the historical likeness, and has painted in so strong colours the angry violence of his temper. This sense would be sufficiently expressed in my translation, by reading—"as Achilles is drawn, even by HOMER."

P. 187, Note 9. "But that part," &c.] I found reason to alter my opinion, and the NOTE referred to, after this note on the translation was printed. Dele, therefore, "But that part," &c. to "Sect. 22," inclusively. And read—See the NOTE.

P. 259. It escaped me; till that note was printed, that Ælian also says, "Dionysius the Colophonian:" it must therefore be allowed to be probable, that if Aristotle and Plutarch speak of the same painter, so do also Aristotle and Ælian. The difficulty, however, pointed out, of reconciling Ælian's account with that of Aristotle, will still remain.

P. 294. Though I think it clear, that Stanley misunderstood the passage of Aristotle, I confess it is by no means clear, that he misunderstood that of Philostratus. This, therefore, was too hastily advanced: for though the general use of the adverb ἀποταδῶν certainly favours the sense in which I understood the passage, yet I fear there is no good authority for the word χορῶν, used as we use chorus, to signify the choral ode or song. It always, I believe, means the choral performers. The verb, οὐνεύει, also contributed to mislead me, if I was misled; as it is more applicable to the contraction of prolixity, than to the diminution of number. Yet it is used in the same sense, and on the same subject, by Jul. Pollux, IV. 15, ad finem.

VOL. II.

Page 83. See also the description, in the Trachiniae of Sophocles, of Hercules dashing out the brains of Lichas against a rock, v. 779—782.

P. 98. "Purple dresses," &c.]

----- χορῶν ἀνδρῶν,

ἱματῖα χρύσεια παρὰ σκῶν τῶν χορῶν, παρὰ φερῶν.

Translated by Grotius,

----- "Aut lectus scenæ præbitor,

"Aureas gregi cum vestes dederit, fert centunculum."

Antiphanes, apud Athen. p. 103.

Grotii Excerpta, &c. p. 627.

P. 197, NOTE 135. The alteration, however, from ΘΕΑΤΩΝ, to ΠΟΙΗΤΩΝ, is rather violent; and it is suggested to me by Castelvetro's conjecture, that Aristotle might, might, perhaps, express the sense given by Dacier, without using the word παιστην, and that what he said might be this: "which escaped him [i. e. Carcinus] for want of "seeing the action, as a spectator."—ὁ μὴ ὁρῶντα ΩΣ [or ΩΣΠΕΡ] θεῶν [sc. ὄντα] ἐλὰσθαι. This is favoured by the preceding expression,—ὍΡΩΝ, ΩΣΠΕΡ παρ' αὐτοῦ γινώσκοντες τοὺς πραττομένους.

P. 224. "παιδιον — never used but to signify a child."—Unless ἐπιμορφικὸν, as a term of endearment; as we often apply child to a grown person: a sense in which it can hardly be used here.

P. 333. "One Tragedy at each different festival." And thus, I find, Menage understood. "On ne representoit, chacun de ces jours-là, qu'un poëme de chaque poets." Pratique de Theatre, par D'Aubignac, ii. p. 48.

[457]

R E M A R K S
UPON THE FIRST EDITION, BY THE TRANSLATOR, ADDED TO THIS EDITION.

DISSERTATION I.

REMARK I.

Vol. I. page 54.—THE ACKNOWLEDGED SUPERIORITY OF VIRGIL IN TOUCHES OF THIS KIND.

I should have noticed Lucretius, v. 1369—1377:—

Inque dies magis in montem succedere sylvas
Cogebant, infraque locum concedere cultis :
Prata, lacus, rivos, segetes, vinetaque læta
Collibus, et campis ut haberent, atque olearum
Cærule distinguens inter plaga currere posset
Per tumulos, et convalles, camposque profusa :
Ut nunc esse vides vario distincta lepôre
Omnia, quæ pomis intersita dulcibus ornant, Arbustisque tenent felicibus obsita circum.

—which is much more landscape-painting than any other passage in the Latin poets, that I recollect.

DISSERTATION

DISSERTATION II.

REMARK 2.

Vol. I. page 87.—EXCEPT THE ACTION (IF THE EXPRESSION IS ALLOWABLE) OF SPEAKING.

“ Speaking is acting, both in philosophical strictness, and as to all moral purposes.” Paley’s Prin. of Mor. Phil.
II. 286. 7th Ed.

REMARK 3.

Vol. I. p. 89, 90. note ¹.

See Serre — Essai sur les Principes de l’Harmonie,
p. 46—47. “ On peut en conséquence concevoir que cet ancien genre pouvoit fournir à la mélodie, surtout à une mélodie recitante, des intervalles que leur extrême petitesse rendoit très-propres aux expressions de mollesse et de langueur, aux expressions de sentimens qui suppo-sent dans l’ame, et en consequence dans l’organe vocale, une sorte d’inertie, un penchant à ne former que les plus petits intervalles mélodiques, que l’harmonie! qu’une succession fondamentale très-naturelle puisse suggerer.”

His “ inertie” touches upon my solution of Dr. Beattie’s question, which I gave in a letter to my friend the Rev. Mr. Elmsall: i. e. — a low-spirited man speaks in small intervals, and minor thirds, and semitones, &c. for the same reason as he takes short steps, and moves languidly, &c.

TRANSLATION AND NOTES.

REMARK 4.

NOTE 14. Vol. I. p. 264.—MANDRABULUS.

"Nomen - - - Comœdiam potius quam Tragœdiam indicat." Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 121. From Μανδρα, stabulum. This argument from the derivation of the name escaped me.

REMARK 5.

NOTE 15. ibid.—HEGEMON—INVENTOR OF PARODIES.

My Translation—inventor of parodies, wants either alteration, or explanation, from Athenæus. See Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 121. "Quod Hegemo primus parodias fecisse dicitur, nihil plus significat, quam eum hanc ludicræ poeseos speciem primum seorsim excoluisse, et pro acroamate in scenâ exhibuisse, &c."

REMARK 6.

NOTE 16. Vol. I. p. 266.—THE DELIAD.

See the excellent note of Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 122.

REMARK 7.

NOTE 18. note c. Vol. I. p. 275.

The observation of the Monthly Review, July 1793, p. 243, about the inconsistency of my remark and my version, is fair, and must be noticed.

REMARK

REMARK 8.

NOTE 22. Vol. I. p. 281.—Marbaveiv—to discover.

See Eurip. Phœniss. v. 48. and 50.—to find out.

REMARK 9.

Ibid. note *. Vol. I. p. 280.—Μιμουμενον—and so Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 126.

REMARK 10.

TRANSLATION, Vol. I. p. 110.—HOMER ALONE—.

My version, here, does not say all that Aristotle says. He says, Homer was not only, the only good Epic poet, but the only Epic Poet whose poetry was dramatic.

REMARK 11.

TRANSLATION, ibid.—ONCE MADE THEIR APPEARANCE.

See Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 129. v. παροφαισις.—This agrees with my idea of the word.—Entrevoir.

REMARK 12.

TRANSLATION, Vol. I. p. 111.—ÆSCHYLUS FIRST ADDED A SECOND ACTOR.

See Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 131. v. ὑποκριτῶν—.

Hesychius says the same, v. ὑποκριτῆς,—ὁ ἐν τῇ σκηνῇ ἀποκρινομεν—where Salmatius corrects, ὑποκρινομεν : but, I believe, ἀποκρινομεν is right. He that answers upon the stage.

REMARK 13.

NOTE 30. Vol. I. p. 294.—ÆSCHYLUS—ABRIDGED THE CHORAL PART.

Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 133, quotes Philostratus, and takes χοῶς for the odes themselves. Perhaps my pentimento, in the Addenda, was needless.

REMARK 14.

NOTE 30. Vol. I. p. 294.—I believe the passage may be rectified by transposition.

I was not aware, that Dr. Bentley had so corrected this passage in his Dissertation upon Phalaris, p. 263, 264.

REMARK 15.

NOTE 38. Vol. I. p. 320.—THE RIDICULOUS, &c.

I should have mentioned Plato De Rep. L. V. p. 330. (Ed. Massey.)—where he says, nothing is ridiculous but what is κακον.

See the excellent note of Mr. Tyrwhitt, 'H δὲ κωμωδία ἐστίν, p. 137.

REMARK 16.

NOTE 42. Vol. I. p. 337.—On the whole, it seems not improbable, &c.

I need not have altered μυμνσις to μυμνσι. The phrase, μηχρι τε συνδηλον ειναι, escaped me. Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 141.

REMARK 17.

NOTE 44. Vol. II. p. 2.—Perfectly to exclude the inaccuracies, &c.

“Loquendi eadem quidem ratio veteri ævo frequentata, ut sententia aliqua simul cum negatione contrarii efferatur; quod vulgo, ut multa alia prisca sermonis simplicitati et infantie omnino communia, Orientis linguis proprium esse putant.” Heyne’s Opusc. Acad. Vol. 2. p. 106, note 1.

REMARK 18.

NOTE 45. Vol. II. p. 3.—EFFECTING, THROUGH PITY AND TERROR, &c.

I should have observed, that in the expression—και ταις πρακτικαις, και ταις ενθουσιαστικαις,—the former alludes to the Tragic music, and the purgation of Terror and Pity, &c.; and the latter—ενθουσιαστικαις—to sacred music.

REMARK

REMARK 19.

NOTE 46. Vol. II. p. 26, 27.—Not improperly compared to our recitative.

That the Music to which its Iambics were set, was a kind of Recitative, is supported by a passage in the treatise of Philodemus Περὶ Μουσικῆς, discovered in the Ruins of Herculaneum, (printed at Naples 1793) where he speaks of that melody as—μαλλον τῇ λαλῆα συνεγγιζοντιⓈ. Columna 29. p. 117.

REMARK 20.

NOTE 57. Vol. II. p. 39.—Τα ἐνόντα.

So Æschin. Περὶ Παραπρεσβ. p. 257. Taylor. 8vo. ἂν δὲν τῶν ἐνόντων εἰπεῖν, ὥς γε οἶμαι, παρελκόν,—quæ quasi inhærent ipsi rei. Vict.

Mr. Tyrwhitt's remark, that Aristotle is speaking of the Sentiments, not of the Diction or Language, is important. p. 145. Οἱ μὲν ἀρχαῖοι.

REMARK 21.

NOTE 127. Vol. II. p. 181.—THE DISCOVERY BY THE SOUND OF THE SHUTTLE.

Mr. Tyrwhitt understands by κερως, the web, telam. But the many passages about the musicality of the κερως—(shuttle) seem to be strong against Mr. T. and in favour of my conjecture.

See Epigram of Antip. Sidon. Brunck's Aristoph. Vol. 3. p. 141.

REMARK 22.

NOTE 138. Vol. II. p. 207.—Plato says of a dog, &c.

And Theocritus, Εἰδ. κς. v. 80—82.

Εἰ οἱ καὶ φρενὲς ὡδὲ νοημονες ἐνδοθεν ἦσαν

Ἥιδει δ' ὥτε χρὴ χαλεπαίνεμεν, ὥτε καὶ ἔτι,

Οὐκ ἂν τοι θῆρην τις ἐδῆρισεν περὶ τιμῆς.

REMARK 23.

TRANSLATION, Vol. I. p. 154.—TOSSED BY MANY TEMPESTS.

Χειμασθεῖς, long-tossed, weather-beaten—

--- multum ille et terris jactatus et alto. Æn. I. 3.

—and, perhaps,

Πολλὰ δ' ὅγ' ἐν ποτῶι παθεῖν ἀλγέα—Od. A. 4.

REMARK 24.

NOTE 149. Vol. II. p. 223.—THE LYNCEUS OF THEODECTES.

Well observed by Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 151, about Abas (the παῖδιον)—and Hyginus, fab. 170 and 273.

REMARK 25.

NOTE 153. note ^b. Vol. II. p. 237.—A few ideas, even roughly thrown out, from an artist of genius.

“ The knowledge which an artist has of his subject will more than compensate for any want of elegance in the manner of treating it, or even of perspicuity, which is more essential; and I am convinced, that one short essay, written by a Painter, will contribute more to advance the Theory of our Art, than a thousand volumes such as we sometimes see; the purpose of which appears to be rather to display the refinement of the author's own conceptions of impossible practice, than to convey useful knowledge or instruction of any kind whatever.” Sir Jos. Reynolds's Disc. 15. Vol. II. p. 186.

REMARK 26.

NOTE 183. note ^b Vol. II. p. 283.

See Malone's Dryden, Vol. III. p. 411. He uses this metaphor, probably without thinking of Homer. “ His succeeding years afford him little more than the stubble of his own harvest.”

VOL. II.

H H

REMARK

REMARK 27.

NOTE 214. Vol. II. p. 330.—HOMER GAVE BOTH THE FIRST, &c.

Sir Jos. Reynolds says of Titian—"He was the first and the greatest master of this art." Vol. II. p. 50.

See Parkhurst's Gr. Lex. αργυρια ικανα—large money. Matt. xxviii. 12.—οχλος ικανη—a great number of people. Mark x. 46.

REMARK 28.

NOTE 216. Vol. II. p. 341.—FOR, IN THIS RESPECT ALSO, THE NARRATIVE IMITATION IS ABUNDANT, AND VARIOUS, BEYOND THE REST.

Mr. Tyrwhitt has given a good explanation of περιττω, p. 194. "Hæc vox non semper in malam partem accipitur; sæpe autem eam ornatus abundantiam denotat, quæ citra vitium summa est." But he does not account for the KAI in his mode of explaining. His note does not satisfy me that all is right.—I think this one of my best conjectural corrections.

REMARK 29.

NOTE 220. Vol. II. p. 344.—BUT EPIC POETRY --- ADMITS EVEN THE IMPROBABLE AND INCREDIBLE, &c.

This passage now seems plain enough. "In Tragedy the wonderful should be produced; but Epic admits better of the improbable (by which the wonderful is chiefly effected,) because there, we do not see the action."

Mr. Tyrwhitt's version seems right. "Ac in tragœdiis quidem, id quod admirabile est, effingere oportet: sed in epopœia magis licet id, quod præter rationem est, per quod maxime contingit ipsum admirabile, quia non intuemur agentem." p. 92.

REMARK 30.

TRANSLATION, Vol. I. p. 185.—IN THE MYSIANS, THE MAN WHO TRAVELS FROM TEGÆA TO MYSIA WITHOUT SPEAKING.

For the discovery of the subject of this Tragedy, and of the cause of the silence here censured, we are indebted to the very curious and masterly note of Mr. Tyrwhitt.—“Telephum igitur avunculos suos apud Tegeam occidisse fortasse finxerat poeta, et illinc mutum in Mysiam rediisse. Mos scilicet erat cædis alicujus reum mutum restare, donec sacris quibusdam expiatoriis lustraretur.” See the whole note, p. 195, 197.

REMARK 31.

NOTE 224. Vol. II. p. 355.—THE ABSURDITY IS CONCEALED UNDER THE VARIOUS BEAUTIES, &c.

Ἐγὼ δὲ πλεον ἔλπομαι
Λογον Ὀδυσσεος, ἣ παῖεν, Δια τὸν ἄδυπτη γενεσθ' Ὀμηρον.

Ἐπεὶ ΨΕΥΔΕΕΣΣΙΝ οἱ ποταναὶ γε μαχάται
Σέμνον ἔπει τι σοφία δὲ
ΚΛΕΠΤΕΙ παρωγοῖσα μύθους.

Pind. Nem. Z.
v. 29—34.

REMARK 32.

NOTE 238. Vol. II. p. 382.—BUT, AS XENOPHANES SAYS, &c.

— ἀλλ' οὐν φασὶ ταῦτε. I am now clear that this emendation, proposed by Mr. Tyrwhitt, is solid. I had made it myself in MS.

REMARK 33.

NOTE 241. Vol. II. p. 386.—WHEN ON THE TROJAN PLAIN, &c.

Mr. Tyrwhitt seems quite right in his conjecture that all the passages were from Il. K.—I think the objection, clearly, clearly, was to the contradiction of saying, that all Gods and men were asleep, and at the same time, that Agamemnon heard the noise of fifes, &c.—and saw the fires, &c.

H H 2

This explanation gets rid of the solution of ἀφηνευσί, as mental vision, and also removes all difficulty about ἑμαδον, and the supposed objection to that line, considered as a separate difficulty.

I must take the words—ἀμα δὲ φησιν—into my version. His other conjecture, πάντες οὐκ, is less probable.

REMARK 34.

NOTE 242. Vol. II. p. 392.—Ομαδος seems to be constantly used by Homer in the secondary sense.

But see Il. H. 307. and O. 689.

REMARK 35.

NOTE 245. Vol. II. p. 394.—Τὸ μὲν Οἷ κατακυβεται ἐμβρο.

Alex. Aphrod. quoted by Mr. Tyrwhitt, p. 207, (and, in Latin, by Beni,) makes the absurdity of ἔ (where rotted) to be,—that part of the same post should be rotted, and part sound.

The difficulty about accents (ibid.), and the passage of Sophocles Elench, are curious.

REMARK 36.

NOTE 269. Vol. II. p. 431.—AND IN SINGING—.

I was wrong in saying that singing out of tune, was the only warranted sense of διαδιδν. See Mr. Tyrwhitt on this passage. Also Theoc. Eid. 5. 22; and Valckenaer's note on Eid. 6. 15. But my conjecture is still good, I think.

INDEX I.

OF POETS, CRITICS, PHILOSOPHERS, &c.

MENTIONED BY ARISTOTLE.

A.

ÆSCHYLUS - - Vol. i. page 111. 157. 172.

AGATHO - - - - i. 128. 147. 158, 159.—A Tragic Poet, the contemporary of Socrates, Euripides, &c. A few fragments only of his works remain, which confirm the account given by antient writers of his style; that it abounded with ornamental refinements, and particularly with antitheses. [See Ælian, V. H. XIV. 13. and Aristoph. Thesmoph. v. 58, &c. and Kuster's note.] The following lines may afford a pretty good specimen of his turn, both of writing and thinking:

ΤΙΧΗ ΤΥΧΗΝ ΙΣΤΕΞΙ, ΚΑΙ ΤΥΧΗ ΤΙΧΗΝ.

Arist. Ethic. Nic. vi. 5.

ΤΟ ΜΕΝ ΠΑΡΕΓΟΝ, ΙΓΓΟΝ ΩΣ, ΠΟΙΩΜΕΘΑ, ΤΟ Δ' ΙΓΓΟΝ, ΩΣ ΠΑΡΕΓΟΝ, ΕΚΠΟΝΟΥΜΕΘΑ.

Athen. v. init.

See also NOTE 156. (vol. ii. p. 242).—Grotii Excerpta ex Trag. &c. p. 437. Bayle, Art. AGATHON. And Sydenham's translation of the Συμπόσιος of Plato, (The Banquet,) p. 9, 10. 122, note 96.

ARIPHRADES - - - i. 173. He is known only by the wretched piece of prosaic criticism there mentioned.

ARISTOPHANES - - - - - i. 106

ASTYDAMAS - - - i. 141. There were two Tragic Poets of this name, father and son. The former is said to have written not fewer than 240 Tragedies. Suidas:—who has also recorded his vanity, art. ΣΑΥΤΗΝ ΙΣΤΑΝΤΙΣ.

C.

CALLIPPIDES - - - i. 204. A famous Tragic actor. See Plutarch, Apophthegm. Lacon. p. 376, ed. H. St. From the story there told, it seems probable enough, though, I think, by no means certain, that the proverbial expression, Τεργιχθε σιδερε, (ἵνα τὸν παρ' ἀξίας ΣΕΜΝΤΝΟΜΕΝΟΝ, ΩΩΝ, Suid. and Hesych.) might, as it has been supposed, have originally alluded to the vanity of this actor. In the Symposium of Xenophon, when the buffoon, Philip, is asked — Ἐπὶ τῇ γέλωτος ποίῳι μετὰ φρονίῃς; — he answers, Δικαιοτέρῳ γ', οἰομαι, ἢ ΚΑΛΑΠΗΠΙΔΗΣ ὁ ὑποκριτής, ὃς ΤΙΕΡ-ΣΕΜΝΥΝΕΤΑΙ ὅτι δύναται πολλὰς κλαίοντας καθίζειν. p. 880, ed. Leunclavii.—It seems much more doubtful, whether the passages referred to by Dacier, in Suetonius, Tiber. cap. 38. and Cic. ad Attic. lib. xiii. ep. 12, have the same allusion.

H H 3

CARCINUS, - - Vol. i. page 148. 151. Of this Tragic Poet only a few trifling lines are preserved. What Suidas says of him gives us no very high idea of his genius; viz. that, of 160 Tragedies which he composed, one only obtained the prize in the dramatic contests.

CHÆREMONE - - - i. 104. 181. — See NOTE 11. (vol. i. p. 254.) For the passage there mentioned, and other fragments, the reader may also see Grotii Excerpta, p. 845, and Sir William Jones's Poes. Asiat. Comment. p. 408.

CHIONIDES - - - i. 107. One of the earliest and most eminent Athenian Poets of the old Comedy. Suidas.

CLEOPHON - - - i. 105. 170. See NOTE 14. (vol. i. p. 263.)

CRATES - - - i. 114. He is said to have flourished about 12 or 15 years before Aristophanes; of course, in the time of the old Comedy.

D.

DICÆOGENES - - - i. 149. Tragic and Dithyrambic Poet. Suid.

DIONYSIUS - - - i. 105. See NOTE 12. (vol. i. p. 257.) and the additions and corrections (vol. ii. p. 454.)

E.

EMPEDOCLES - - - i. 103. 167. 196. The Sicilian Poet-philosopher, contemporary with Sophocles. See NOTES 8 and 9 (vol. i. p. 248, and 249) and p. 196, note 4. He is often quoted by Aristotle, and many fragments of his Poetry are preserved in various antient authors. See Diog. Laert. in vitâ: the Poesis Philosophica of H. Stephens, &c.

EPICHRMUS - - - i. 107. 114.—of Syracuse, a philosophical and a comic Poet. The names of 40 of his Comedies are recorded, and a considerable number of fragments from them, and some from his philosophical poetry, are extant. See Grotii Excerpta, and the Poes. Philos. of H. Stephens.

EUCLID - - - - Vol. i. page 171. Of what Euclid Aristotle speaks, it seems impossible to ascertain. Victorius says, he is here called the old Euclid, to distinguish him from Euclid the philosopher, the disciple of Socrates, and founder of the Megaric sect. [Diog. Laert in vitd.] But as that Euclid flourished, according to the common account, about 60 years before Aristotle, he might well enough be called ὁ ἀρχαῖος, and there is certainly no improbability in supposing a cavilling logician to have been also a cavilling critic. See Diog. Laert. and Bayle, art. EUCLIDE.

EURIPIDES - - - i. 137. 140. 150. 153. 172. 191. 201.

G.

GLAUCO - - - - - i. 199. Whether this was Glaucō the Teian mentioned by Aristotle, Rhet. III. 1, as Dacier asserts after Robortelli, is very uncertain.—I know not why Goulston, in his version, calls him "Glaucō Sophista."

H.

HEGEMON - - - - - i. 105. See note 15. (vol. i. p. 264.)

HERODOTUS - - - - - i. 127

HIPPIAS, of Thasos - i. 196.—known, I believe, only from this mention of him.

HOMER - - - - - i. 103. 105. 106. 109. 125. 147. 171. 177. 179. 182. 183. 186.

M.

MAGNES - - - - - i. 107. An Athenian Poet of the old Comedy. Suidas.

MNASITHEUS - - - i. 204.—of whom nothing more is known.

MYNISCUS - - - - - i. 204. I do not know that he is any where else mentioned, except by Athenæus, who calls him "the Tragic actor, Myniscus," and gives him an honourable place in his Memoirs of Gluttony, lib. viii. p. 344.

N.

NICOCHARIS (or NICOCHARES) i. 106. In NOTE 16. (vol. i. p. 266), I have, with Dacier and others, supposed him to be the Athenian Comic Poet, contemporary with Aristophanes. [Suidas.] But this seems doubtful. Victorius thinks, with some reason, that Aristotle added, ἢ τῷ Ἀντιάδῃ, in order to distinguish him from that Poet. And, farther, he is here instancing in narrative or Epic Poetry, and the Deliad was certainly a poem of that kind. But no such Poem is attributed to Nicochares the Comic Poet.

P

PAUSON - - - - Vol. i. page 105. See NOTE 12. (vol. i. p. 255. 257. 260).

PHILOXENUS - - - - i. 106.—of Cythera, contemporary with Plato; a Tragic and Dithyrambic Poet, famous for his musical innovations, his jokes, and his gluttony. See Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 418, &c.—Mém. de l'Acad. des Inscript. tome xix. p. 315, octavo.—But there were several persons of the same name, and, unfortunately, of similar character, who appear to have been confounded with each other, even by antient writers themselves. See Perizonius, Ælian. V. Hist. X. 9.

PHORMIS [PHORMOS, Athen. and Suid.] i. 114. A Sicilian Comic Poet contemporary with Epicharmus.

POLYGNOTUS - - - - i. 105. 119.—See NOTE 12. (vol. i. p. 255.)—Pliny, N. Hist. lib. xxxv. cap. 9.—Ælian, V. Hist. IV. 3. where Perizonius points out, as some illustration of the passage of Aristotle, cited NOTE 12. vol. i. p. 255, a picture of this painter, mentioned by Pausanias, (in Phocidis,) which represented the punishment of an undutiful son in the infernal regions.

POLYIDES, the Sophist, i. 150. 153.—does not occur, that I know of, any where else. The title of Sophist seems sufficiently to distinguish him, if the name does not, (for in some MSS. it is Πολυιδος,) from Polyidus the Dithyrambic Poet, Musician, and Painter, mentioned by Diodor. Siculus, [lib. xiv.] and Etymol. Mag. voce Ατλας.

PROTAGORAS - - - - i. 161. See NOTE 165. (vol. ii. p. 256.)

S.

SOPHOCLES - - - - i. 106. 112. 141. 146. 149. 151. 158. 191. 206.

SOPHRON - - - - i. 103. This famous Sicilian Poet was contemporary with Euripides. He wrote Mimes, some for male, and others for female characters, in the Doric dialect. Some very obscure fragments are preserved by Demetrius, Athenæus, &c. See NOTE 6. (vol. i. p. 244 to 247).

SOSISTRATUS - - - - i. 204. A rhapsodist.

STHENELUS - - - - i. 170. See NOTE 194. (vol. ii. p. 302.) He is mentioned, I believe, only by Aristotle, and by Harpocration, who records him as a Tragic Poet of the age of Pericles, and says, that he was accused of plagiarism.

THEODECTES,

T.

THEODECTES - - Vol. i. page 150, 154. A Rhetorician, of Phaselis in Lycia; the scholar of Plato and Isocrates. He is said to have composed 50 Tragedies, and an Art of Rhetoric in verse. He is frequently mentioned by Aristotle, Dion. Halicarn. Quintilian, &c. His fellow citizens erected a statue to his memory. See Plut. in vitâ Alexandri, p. 1236, ed. H. S. Only a few trifling fragments of his works remain.

TIMOTHEUS - - - i. 106. See NOTE 17. (vol. i. p. 267.) The famous Poet-musician of Miletus, contemporary with Euripides. He was banished by the Spartans for improving a musical instrument by the addition of a few strings, which they called "dishonouring the antient Music," and "corrupting the ears of youth:" — λυμάντας τὰς ἀκοὰς τῶν νέων. The words of this curious decree are preserved by Boethius. See Casaub. in Athen. p. 613, or page 66, 67, of the Ox. ed. of Aratus. The reader will find a full and entertaining account of Timotheus in Dr. Burney's Hist. of Music, vol. i. p. 405.

TYNDARUS [al. PINDARUS] i. 204.—An Actor, clearly; but we know nothing farther.

X.

XENARCHUS - - - i. 103. A Comic Poet, of whom the reader may see a pleasant fragment in Athen. p. 225, describing a curious trick practised by the Athenian fish-mongers to evade the law by which they were forbid to pour water upon their stale fish in order to make them appear fresh. See Grotii Excerpta ex Trag. &c. p. 697.

XENOPHANES - - - i. 191. The Colophonian, eminent in the class of philosophical Poets, or, rather, poetical philosophers, about the time of Pythagoras. See NOTE 238. (vol. ii. p. 382.)—Diog. Laert. IX. 18.—Bayle, art. XENOPHANES.

Z.

ZEUXIS - - - - i. 119. 200. The famous painter. See the note p. 200, and NOTE 254. (vol. ii. p. 405).

I N D E X II.

TO THE DISSERTATIONS AND NOTES.

A.

- ACCENTS, no term applied to them by Aristotle but acute, and grave - - - - - vol. ii. page 261
- ACHILLES, how characterized by Euripides, ii. 167.—by Homer, 168.—by Plato, 169.—by Dr. Jortin - - ibid.
- ACTS, five - - - no such division applicable to the Greek drama - - - - - ii. 93
- ACTORS, Greek, played female parts, i. 205, n. ii. 434.—contended for the prize in the dramatic contests, ii. 68, 69.—their influence over the Poets, 69.—their dress and figure - - - - - 340, and n.
- ACTRESSES, not admitted on the Greek stage, i. 63, n. 205, n.
- Αδυναμία - - - - - ii. 366, n.
- Αἰκίης, Αἰκισιῶ - - - - - ii. 318, 319
- ÆLIAN, of descriptive imitation, i. 14, n. 54.—his account of the paintings of Dionysius mistaken by Dacier, 257.—of the infant state of painting, 285, n.—quoted - ii. 438
- ÆSCHYLUS, not said by Aristotle to have diminished the number of choral performers, i. 294.—curious account of his stage-improvements, 298.—his chorus of 50 furies, ii. 119.—his Ocean riding on a Griffin, 120.—his Prometheus, 211.—an expression of his illustrated, 290.—his diction - - - - - 324
- AGATHO, a fragment of - - - - - ii. 242
- Αἰσχρον, its wide signification - - - - - i. 321
- Ἀλκιον ἀπὸ λόγου, to what books of the Odyssey that title extended - - - - - ii. 184—186
- Ἀμαρτία, Ἀμαρτήματα - - - - - ii. 108, 109
- Ἀμφιβολία, Aristotle's sense of - - - - - ii. 397
- Ἀναβύλαι, Dithyrambic—what - - - - - i. 272
- Ἀναλογία,

- Αναλογία, Aristotle's definition of - - - ii. 283, n.
- ANTIETNS, not to be read with modern ideas - - i. 224
- Αντικρυ, whether used by Aristotle to denote opposition of meaning - - - ii. 403
- Αποχρησις - - - i. 288
- Αποπλως - - - ii. 161
- Απο σκηνης, δι, or τα - - - ii. 100
- ARCHITECTURE, absurdity of classing it with the imitative arts - - - i. 92, n.
- Αρχιτεκτονικη - - - ii. 255
- Αρτα μιση - - - i. 186, n. ii. 356
- ARIOSTO, unity of his Poem, of what kind, i. 126, n. 178, n.
—ψευδη λεγει ως δι - - - ii. 351
- ARISTIDES QUINTILIANUS, his account of the Greek Ἀρμονια, i. 80, n.—confirms a reading of Aristotle, ii. 260.
—quoted, i. 228, n.—illustrates Aristotle - ii. 253, 254
- ARISTOPHANES, i. 301, n.—(or Antiphanes) a fragment of, ii. 42.—ridicules the prolixity of the Tragic chorus, i. 295.
—a fragment of, explained by a passage of Aristotle, ii. 302, 303
- ARISTOTLE, has no where said that ALL POETRY is imitation, i. 35, n.—in what senses he considered Poetry as imitation, 36, 37. 58.—takes no notice either of sonorous or descriptive imitation, and why, 39, 40. 54, 55.—inferiority of that part of his work, which treats of diction, 55. ii. 257, 258.—how far he would have allowed an Epic imitation in prose to be a Poem, i. 232. ii. 61.—by no means excluded verse from his idea of Poetry, i. 236. 289.
—his preference of Dramatic Poetry, i. 58, 59. ii. 449. 451.—has not fully stated the comparative merits of Dramatic and Epic Poetry, i. 59, and n.—held pleasure to be the chief end of Poetry, ii. 448, 449.—his doctrine of the purgation of the passions by Tragedy, an answer to the objections of Plato, ii. 14. 16.—his advice to the Tragic Poet, to assist his imagination by action, in composing, considered, ii. 198.—scope of his chapter on Critical Objections, &c. i. 188, n.—free from an error common to philosophical critics, ii. 56.—his style often elliptic, parenthetical, and embarrassed, i. 218. 279. ii. 58, 59. 157. 227, and n. 237. 272.—does not assert, in general, that Music is an imitative art, i. 91.—his account of musical imitation, i. 69, 70.—what he understood by the resemblance of melody and rhythm to manners, or tempers, i. 79—87.—a musical problem of his corrected, translated,

- lated, and examined, i. 82—87.—his RHETORIC quoted, i. 239. 329, and n. ii. 33. 69. 82. 106. 124. 125. 164. n. 166. 184. 198. 201. 210, n.—(of the Ethic and Pathetic Tragedy) 231, 232, n. 281. 284. 286.—(of the language of passion) 358, 359. 314. 316. 321. 410.—(of the disappointment of the ear by the abrupt conclusion of a period) 443.—explained, i. 272. ii. 263.—translated, i. 280. 286, 287. ii. 297. 326, 327. 352.—his ETHICS quoted, i. 278. ii. 48. 61. 68. 80. 97. 107, 108. 283, n. 430.—his POLIT. i. 70. 79. 81. 225, n. 255. ii. 5—9. 62. 422. 441. 445.—METAPHYS. i. 289. ii. 55. 81.—DE SOPH. ELENCH. i. 264. ii. 262. 393.—TOPIC. ii. 59. 268. 291. 372. 402.—DE INTERPRET. ii. 272—275. 408.—DE MUNDO, 431.—DE HIST. ANIMAL. ii. 137.—PROBLEMS, i. 82. 269. 271. 283. 294. ii. 108. 244. 343
- ARISTOXENUS, of the melody of speech, i. 77, n.—of the effect of passion upon it, 78, n.—of the essential difference between singing and speaking - - ibid. ii. 92, n.
- Agonia*, melody, not harmony, i. 314, n.—ἁγίαν - 314
- Agonai*, or Melodies, of the Greeks, not the same with their Tones, or Modes - - - i. 80, n.
- ATHENIANS, their immoderate fondness for dramatic exhibitions - - - ii. 53, 54. 339
- AUDIENCE, Athenian—eat and drank during the performance - - - ii. 339, 340
- AULUS GELLIUS, his story of Polus the Tragic actor, ii. 434

B.

- BACH, C. P. Eman. his choral recitative - - ii. 89, n.
- BACON, Lord - - - ii. 34
- BATTEUX, his explanation of Dithyrambic imitation, i. 212, 213.—of Aristotle's dramatic καθάρσις - - ii. 11—16
- BEATTIE, Dr. his mistake with respect to a passage of Rousseau, i. 7, n.—his Minstrel, 18.—of the relation between musical sounds and mental affections, 71, n.—his objections to the principle of resemblance to pathetic speech in pathetic music, considered, 88, n.—on the power of association in music, 90, n. 225, n.—of the difference between moral and poetical perfection, 105, n.—his account of a passage of Plato, 240, n.—his explanation of Aristotle's account of the ridiculous, 323.—his just analysis of the character of Homer's Achilles, ii. 170.—on the language of Tragedy - - - 324
- BEAUTY,

- BEAUTY, size and strength essential to it, according to the ideas of the antients, ii. 47—51.—male and female, Aristotle's idea of it - - - - - 48, 49
- BEGINNING, middle, and end—Aristotle's definition of them applied and illustrated - - - - - ii. 41—47
- BELL, the sound of it affected by its swinging - i. 20, n.
- BENI, his commentary on Aristotle quoted, ii. 51. 234. 562, n.
- Βλαβερὸν - - - - - ii. 411, 412
- BLACKWELL - - - - - i. 65, n.
- BOILEAU, a famous imitative line of his examined, i. 11, n.—quoted - - - - - ii. 84. 302, n.
- BOSSU, Le, called, with little reason, Aristotle's best interpreter, ii. 75. 131.—misquotes Aristotle's text, i. 35, n.—his idea of Episodes, examined, i. 315, 316, 317, 318, n.—his mistaken notion of Aristotle's simple fable, ii. 74.—his absurd interpretation of χεννα ἴδη, 131.—his defence of Homer's mean words, 302, n.—his idea of Homer's purpose in composing his Poems - - - 448, 449, n.
- BRUMBY, his indiscreet way of vindicating the antients from the charge of Tragi-comedy, i. 306.—his apology for the bloody exhibition of Oedipus in Sophocles - ii. 84
- BURGESS, Mr. - - - his rational account of Homer's language - - - - - ii. 309, n.
- BURKE, Mr. - - - - - ii. 198, 199
- BURNEY, Dr. of the power of instrumental Music, i. 75, n.—of the old German Comedy, ii. 121, n.—his translation of the hymn of Dionysius to the Sun, 293, n.—of the melody of the antient declamation - - - 26, n.

C.

- CALLIMACHUS, his hymns - - - - - i. 211
- CAMPBELL, Dr. his explanation of Aristotle's account of the ridiculous, i. 323—325.—of metaphors converted by familiar use into proper terms - - - - - ii. 278
- CASAUBON, Isaac - - - - - i. 41, n. 309, n.
- CASES - - - - - i. 164, n.
- CASTELVETRO, a transposition of his adopted, ii. 32, 33, n.—conjectural emendations of, 198. 249.—a curious illustration of his, 281.—his explanation of ἀναλογον in cap. xxiv. 345, n.—of ἀργα μιση, 356.—his commentary quoted, i. 38, n. 341, n. ii. 69. 311. 330. 439. 450.
- CATULLUS - - - - - ii. 421, n.
- CECILIA,

- CECILIA - - - - - ii. 242
- CHÆREMÓN, his poetical character, i. 254, 255.—his Centaur - - - - - ibid.
- Χαλκικισμός, not used transitively, nor synonymous with ἀργεῖσθαι - - - - - ii. 203—208
- CHAUCER - - - - - ii. 116, 117
- Χιμαιῖν - - - - - ii. 203, 205, and n.
- CHOËPHORÆ - - - the Tragedy of that name mentioned by Aristotle, (vol. i. p. 150.) probably not that of Æschylus - - - - - ii. 188, 189
- CHORAGI - - - - - i. 138, n.
- Χορὸς δαδαιτικὸς - - - - - ii. 89
- CHORUS, antient dramatic, its gradual extinction, i. 159, n.— its prolixity, 295.—persons of, speak of themselves in the singular number, even in the Odes, where they sing together, ii. 95, n.—its visible number sometimes filled up by the admission of mutes, 98.—its entrance, a shewy and expensive part of the Greek drama, 97.—in what sense required by Aristotle to be a sharer in the action - 244
- Χεντα ἴδν - - - - - ii. 131
- Χεντὸς - - - - - ii. 134
- CHROMATIC, and Enharmonic, melody of the Greeks, imitative of speech - - - - - i. 76
- CICERO, i. 233, n. 272. ii. 70, n. 420, n.—his account of the ridiculous, agreeing with Aristotle's, i. 327.—his orations, compared with those of Demosthenes, illustrate Aristotle's distinction of the rhetorical and political styles, ii. 38, n.—of poetic enthusiasm, or genius, ii. 210.
—illustrates a passage of Aristotle - - - ii. 264
- CIRCUMFLEX accent, called grave by Aristotle, ii. 262, and n.
—whether distinguished, in his time, by any appropriated term - - - - - 263, and n.
- CLARISSA - - - - - ii. 103, 242
- CLEOPHON, his poetical character - - - i. 263. ii. 301
- COMEDY, Old and Middle, what we call Farce, i. 292.—
their object was the laughable in general - 326, 327
- COMEDY, usual intricacy of its first scenes, ii. 41, 42.—a disadvantage of it, compared with Tragedy - 42
- CONDILLAC - - - - - ii. 20, n.
- CONTESTS, Dramatic, of the Greeks, their variety, ii. 339, 340
- CRESPHONTES,

- CRESPHONTES, of Euripides, the discovery in it, in what view admired by Aristotle - - - - ii. 129, 130
 CRITICISM, philosophical, a common mistake of, i. 8, n. ii. 56
 CYCLOPS of Euripides, a singular circumstance relative to it, i. 311, 312

D.

- DACIER, his mistake relative to the Old and Middle Comedy, i. 335.—his strange assertion relative to the constant observation of the unities of time and place in the Greek Tragedies, 342.—his idea of Aristotle's simple fable, ii. 74.—his absurd explanation and false translation of a passage in Aristotle, 131, 132, and n.—his absurd account of the number of Greek Tragedies performed in a day, 334—336.—says the Iliad may be read in a day, 337, 338
 D'ALEMBERT - i. 68, n.—makes Architecture an imitative art - - - - - 92, n.
 DANCE, Pantomimic - - - - - i. 226
 DANCER, Pantomimic, his necessary accomplishments, according to Lucian - - - - ii. 428, n.
 DANTE, his description of the mingled sounds of his Inferno - - - - - i. 18
 D'AUBIGNAC, of perfect dramatic conclusions, ii. 46, and n.
 DEMETRIUS, (Παρί. Ἐξμ.) i. 307, and n. ii. 31, n. 89, n.—of the analogical metaphor - - - - 289
 DESCRIPTION, when imitative, i. 13.—not to be confounded with expression - - - - 26
 DESCRIPTION, imitative—of visible objects, i. 13.—of sounds 15—21.—of mental objects, immediate, or by their sensible effects, 22—27.—not all exact and minute description, imitative - - - - 41, 42, n.
 DESCRIPTION, local and picturesque—the remarkable inferiority of the antients to the moderns in such description stated, and its cause conjectured - - i. 44—54
 Διόσις, ναυδ, complication - - - - ii. 221, 222
 Διαδύσις - - - - - ii. 431
 DIALOGUE of the Greek Tragedy, to what sort of melody it was probably set - - - - ii. 26
 Διαφύσις - - - - - ii. 312
 DICTION, Tragic, ii. 321, 322, and n.—Aristotle's idea of its perfection, 326.—sketch of its history in his Rhetoric, 327
 Διδασκαλία,

- Διδασκαλία - - - - - ii. 248
Διδασκνν τραγῳδίας, origin of that expression - - ii. 255
DIDEROT, ii. 243.—of the Andria of Terence, 44, n.—illustrates a precept of Aristotle, i. 152, n.—of the difficulty of planning a drama - - - - - n. 34
DIGNITY, modern Tragic, not to be found in the Greek Tragedy - - - i. 299—311. ii. 31. 82. 148
DIODEGENES LAERTIUS, of the Tetralogix - - ii. 333
DIONYSIUS, of Halicarnassus, his account of the regularity and simplicity of the old Dithyrambic, i. 270.—of the melody of the Parode in the Orestes of Euripides, ii. 89, 90
DIONYSIUS, the painter - - - - - i. 257
DIONYSIUS, a fine passage of his Hymn to the Sun, - ii. 293
DISASTER - - - - - ii. 81
DISCOVERY, of Joseph by his brethren, i. 132, n.—of Telemachus by Menelaus, in the Odyssey, ii. 183.—in the Choëphoræ of Æschylus, examined, 186. 188.—between Merope and her son in the Cresphontes of Euripides—Aristotle's view of it, 129, 130.—its effect upon the audience described by Plutarch - - - 130 DISCOVERIES, various, in the Odyssey - - i. 180, n.
DITHYRAMBIC Poetry, how imitative, i. 209—214.—not originally so, but of a simple form, in regular stanzas, and set to the simplest melody, 269.—how it became imitative, refined, and complicated - - - 270
DOCERE fabulam - - - - - ii. 255
DOG, a philosophical animal, according to Plato - i. 283
DOMENICHINO - - - in painting, practised a precept of Aristotle - - - ii. 199
DRAMATIC, or personative, Poetry, imitation, in the strict sense of the word - - - i. 31, 32
DRAMATIC SYSTEM of the antients, upon a large scale, ii. 340
DRUNKEN men, exhibition of them on the stage, an improvement of Æschylus - - - i. 298
DRYDEN, misrepresents Aristotle, i. 281. ii. 441, 442.—read him only in translations - - - i. 281, and n.
DU BOS, his absurd idea of the declamation of the antient Tragedy, ii. 19, 20.—his strange explanation of a passage of Aristotle - - - 27, n.

ECHO,

E.

- ECHO, of sound to sense - - - - i. 31, n.
- ἠδῆ - - - - i. 253. ii. 329
- ἠδῆχιστος - - - - ii. 354
- ἠπληξίς, Aristotle's definition of it, - - - ii. 372
- EMENDATIONS conjectural, suggested, of ARISTOTLE, i. 83.
 226. 231. 280, n. 294. 327. 328. 336. ii. 9. 59. 67. 161.
 166. 174. 203. 241. 249. 280. 288. 314. 319. 329. 342.
 360. 366. 367. 398. 406. 408. 431. - - - 438
- of ÆSCHYLUS - - - - ii. 290, n.
- of ARISTIDES QUINTILIANUS - - - ii. 254
- of PLATO - - - - i. 234, n.
- of PLUTARCH - - - - ii. 105
- EMPEDOCLES, his two physical principles of friendship and strife, i. 196, n.—a quotation from him explained, ibid.— his philosophical Poetry, 248.—his diction allowed by Aristotle to be Homeric - - - - 250
- ἠραγνία - - - - i. 44, n.
- ἠραγνίς - - - - ii. 436
- ENHARMONIC intervals of the Greeks - - - imitations of speech, - - - - i. 76
- EPIC Poem, Aristotle's rule for the length of it, considered,
 ii. 331—339.—what was his idea of its proper end, 451.—
 its merits and defects, compared with Tragedy, 451—453.
 —now and then approaches to the ludicrous - 453, n.
- EPICHARMUS, philosophized in Trochaics, i. 249.—his ludicrous description of the voracity of Hercules - 304, n.
- ἠπίκτα, - - - - ii. 162 and 164, n.
- ἠπίκτος, δὲ, - - - - ii. 430
- EPISODE, in what senses used by Aristotle, i. 315—318.
 ii. 216, 217.—how it came to signify an incidental and digressive story, i. 318, 319.—Epic and Tragic, their difference - - - - i. 318
- EPITHETS, negative, frequent in the Greek Poets - ii. 295
- ΕΠΟΡΟΕΙΑ - - - difficulty of admitting Aristotle to have proposed the application of that term to Mimes and Dialogues, - - - - i. 241—244
- ERATOSTHENES, his just idea of the end of Poetry, ii. 449, n.
- ERNESTUS, his interpretation of two words in Homer,
 i. 21, n. ii. 50

- Εἶδος - - - - - ii. 398
Ἡθῶν, dispositions, tempers - - - - - i. 70, n.
Ἡθῶν, Ἡθῶν - - - - - in what sense applied by Aristotle to Tragedy, i. 155, n. ii. 231.—opposed to καθῶν and καθῶν - - - - - ii. 31, n. 226, and n.
EUBULUS, fragment of a Comedy of his - - - - - ii. 138
EUCLID, illustrates Aristotle - - - - - ii. 265, 266
Εὐφρονης, - - - - - ii. 209
EURIPIDES, Aristotle's censure of his Choral Odes, i. 158, n. —a passage of, proving the licentiousness of antient painting, 256.—sometimes familiar, and Tragi-comic, 301. 303. 305. 307.—his Prologues, 329.—ἴδιον of his Tragedies, ii. 31.—did not observe the French rule, "de ne pas ensanglanter le Theatre," 85.—a passage in his Iphig. in Taur. considered, 101, n.—his powers not confined to emotions of tenderness and pity, 110.—two fine passages in his Medea and Electra, 110, 111.—his character of Achilles, 167.—his Tragic cavern, 202.—his diction, and Aristotle's character of it, 326.—in what sense said to have drawn men as they are, 374—380.—imitated common nature more closely than Sophocles - - - - - 380
Εὐνομοίης - - - - - ii. 52
EXPRESSION, redundant, an instance of it frequent in the Greek writers - - - - - ii. 2 EXPRESSION, Musical, considered as imitation by the antients, and why, i. 69—76.—how assisted by words, though by no means dependent on them - - - - - 72

F.

- FABLE, double, of Aristotle, not to be confounded with our double plot - - - - - ii. 113
FELIBIEN - - - - - ii. 199
FICTION, imitation - - - - - i. 27
FISTULA PANIS.—See SYRINX.
FLUTE, antient, (Αὐλῶν) - - - - - i. 225, n.
FLUTE-PLAYERS, antient - - - - - ii. 426—428
FONTENELLE, his Platonic idea of instrumental Music, i. 74, n. —his Pastorals, 246.—of Hercules in the Alcestis of Eurip. 305.—his Reflexions sur la Poetique, ii. 60.—his idea of Æschylus, 211.—of sublimity, 212, n.—his strange notion of Homer's dialects - - - - - 306—309 FOOTE - - - - - ii. 209, and n.

G.

- ΓΑΡΤΑΙ - - - - - ii. 315, 316
 GODS, Heathens, well characterized in three lines of Xenophanes - - - - - ii. 383
 GOLDSMITH, his description of village sounds in a summer's evening - - - - - i. 18
 GRAVINA - - - i. 32, n.—his vindication of the Iphigenia of Euripides against Aristotle's censure of inconsistency - - - - - ii. 155, 156
 GRAY, Mr. - - - his fondness for Racine, ii. 213.—his Agrippina, - - - - - ibid.
 GREEK language, its comprehensive brevity of expression, - - - - - ii. 52, 53

H.

- HANDEL - - - - - i. 89
 HARMONY, said by Aristotle to have no expression, i. 84.—that assertion not true of the harmony of modern counterpoint, 86, n.—what to be concluded from it with respect to the Music of the antients - - - - - ibid.
 HARRIS, of sonorous imitation in a line of Virgil, i. 6, n.—of the imperfection of such imitation, 10, n.—imitation of speech overlooked by him in his account of imitative Music, 69, n. 90.—of the difference between rhythm and metre, 108, n.—a translation of his considered, ii. 39, 40, and n.—an explanation of his questioned, 75, 76.—his version of the words in which Aristotle defines μεμνησιν, 79.—his just remark concerning a difficulty in translation, 210.—of naturalized metaphors - - - - - 278
 HEINSIUS, his excellent comment on Aristotle's rule relative to the goodness of Tragic manners - - - - - ii. 132—134
 HELEN, her talent of vocal mimicry - - - - - i. 63, n.
 HERCULES, - - - his comic jollity in the Alcestis of Euripides, ii. 304—306.—extravagant description of his voracity - - - - - 304, n.
 HERODOTUS - - - - - ii. 422
 HEYNE, ii. 219. 330. 389, n.—his just idea of imitative versification, i. 9, n.—his explanation of διδασκαλῶ, applied to the Tragic Poet - - - - - ii. 255, n.
 HIPPIAS, his Jesuitical theology - - - - - ii. 393

HOBBS, of Lucan, i. 182, n.—of probable fiction, ii. 350, n.

HOGARTH, i. 261.—his Analysis of Beauty - ii. 237, n.

HOMER, called the best of Painters, i. 14, n.—his description of the singing of the nightingale, 21.—his touches of local description how improved and finished by Pope, 46—50, and n.—absurdly embellished by his translators, 64, n.—his description of the vocal mimicry of Helen, 63, n.—hymns attributed to him, narrative, 211.—parodied by the ancients, 264, 265.—called by Plato the first of Tragic Poets, 313.—his descriptions of female beauty, ii. 48.—a fine passage in his Odyssey, 183.—remarks on the original division of his Poems, 184. 186.—his use of the verb χαλιπταίνω, 204—206.—his διεισφοβέω, &c. how defended by Boileau, 302.—how best defended, ibid.—absurd notion of his dialects, 307.—his Poems regarded by Aristotle as too long, 337, 338.—his fictions, in what sense compared to the logical sophism à consequenti, 347—352.—his perfect knowledge of all arts and sciences, ridiculed by Plato, 364.—a passage of, considered, and vindicated from metaphorical interpretation, 386—389.—passages of, considered, 317—320. 400, and n.—his inaccuracies in geography, astronomy, &c. censured by the Zoilists, 415.—his hexameters, and those of Hesiod, sung to the lyre by Terpander, Timotheus, &c. - - - - 433

HORACE - - - ii. 146, n.—his Odes sometimes dramatic, i. 211, and n.—his expression sometimes taken from Aristotle - - - - - ii. 367

HOWES, Mr. his explanation of the διπλή συστολή - ii. 113

HUME, his objection to Aristotle's doctrine of the unity of fable - - - - - ii. 54, 55

HURD, Bishop, his masterly vindication of the Italian Poets, and the genuine privileges of Poetry, i. 183, n.—quoted, 290.—his explanation of Aristotle's precept relative to uniformity of manners, examined, ii. 141—148.—his vindication of the Iphigenia (in Aulis) of Euripides, considered, 151—157.—his explanation of the difference between the imitations of Sophocles, and those of Euripides, considered, 375—381.—of the language of passion, 358.—of the end of Poetry, 449, n.—of the proper end of Epic Poetry - - - - - 451

HUTCHESON, Professor, accounts for the power of Music over the passions from resemblance to passionate speech, i. 77

HYMNS, narrative - - - - - i. 211

I.

- IAGO - - - - - ii. 413, and n.
- IAMBI, the Poems so called, acted - - - ii. 62
- IMAGERY - - - - - ii. 330, 331.
- IMITATION, strictly so called, what essential to it, i. 4.—not applicable to Poetry in any sense, that is not independent on metre, 36, n.—Aristotle's solution of the pleasure arising from it, 280, 281.—a singular application of Aristotle's doctrine on that subject - - - ii. 84, 85
- IMITATION, Poetic (or by words.) various and confused accounts of it, i. 56, n. 58.—extended by some to that general sense, which comprehends all speech, 33. 41, n.—among the antients closely connected with personal - - - 62
- by sound - - - - - 5²—12
- by description - - - - - 12—27
- by fiction - - - - - 27—31
- by personation, 31, 32.—mixture and various combination of these different species - - - 33, 34
- by resemblance of verbal sound and motion, its imperfection, 6, and n. 10, n.—how produced by the best Poets, 8, and n. 40.—not imitation in a strict and proper sense - - - 9. 11.
- fictive, distinct from descriptive, 27, 28.—neither of them, strictly and properly, imitation, 30.—descriptive, not noticed by Aristotle, and why - - - 54, 55
- IMITATION, Musical, synonymous to expression, with the antients, but opposed to it by modern writers, i. 69, and n.
- IMITATIVE ARTS, confusion arising from that general denomination applied to Poetry, Music, and Painting, in classing the arts, i. 91, 92.—absurdity of extending it to Architecture - - - 92, n.
- INCIDENTS, how considered by Aristotle as arising, or not arising, from the action itself - - - ii. 194, 195
- JOHNSON, Dr. of Shakspeare's hasty conclusions, i. 156, n.—of Thomson's diction, 187, n.—of the unities of time and place, 344.—of the Tragic language of Addison and Shakspeare, ii. 31, n.—his censure of Mr. Gray's Agrippina, 213.—of the characters of Lothario and Lovelace, 413.—of the effect of the character of Iago on the spectator, ibid. n.—of the merit of the Epic Poet - - - 453
- JOHNSON, Ben. prologue to the puppet-shew of Hero and Leander in his Bartholomew-Fair - - - i. 334

- JORTIN, Dr. his character of Achilles - - - ii. 169
 JOSEPH, and his brethren, story of - - - i. 132, n.
 IPHIGENIA (at Aulis) of Euripides—inconsistence attributed to her character by Aristotle, considered - ii. 151—157
 ISOCRATES - - - ii. 209, n.—of the privileges of Poetry, and the importance of veræ to its effect - - - 360

K.

- KAIMS, Lord, his assertion, that harmony has “no relation to sentiment,” examined, i. 84, n.—of the risible, 324, 325.—his just character of Racine - - - ii. 212
 Καταψήφισσθαι - - - - - ii. 403
 Καθαρσις, (καθαρμάτων) - - considered, ii. 3—19.—a passage relative to it in Aristotle’s Polit. examined and translated - - - - - 5—14
 Κεῖμενος (ἵημα) - - - - - ii. 291
 Κεῖν, Κεῖσθαι, to pour out - - - - - ii. 397
 Κινητικόν - - - - - ii. 343
 Κοινισμὸς - - - - - ii. 308, and n.
 Κομμὸς, what, ii. 85.—example of it - - - 99—102
 Κῶδαξ, the dance so called - - - - - i. 249, n.
 Κοσμή, the ornamental word - - - what probably meant by it - - - - - ii. 295—298
 Κυρίον (ἵημα), its sense - - - - - ii. 278, 279

L.

- LA FONTAINE - - - - - ii. 355, n.
 LA MOTTE, i. 58, n.—combats the notion, that instruction is the end of Poetry, ii. 449, n.—his account of Homer’s diction - - - - - 301
 LANDSCAPE, no technical term equivalent to it in Greek or Roman writers - - - - - i. 52
 LANDSCAPE-PAINTING, not practised, or not cultivated, by the Greeks, i. 51.—its effect on the general taste for prospects and rural scenery - - - - - 53, 54
 LANGUAGE, natural - - - not always simple and familiar language - - - - - ii. 322, n.
 Λεῖψις, in what sense applied by Aristotle to the Parode of the Greek Tragedy, ii. 88—92.—and λυγισθαι, sometimes applied to recitative, or such singing as most resembles speech - - - - - 21. 88
 Λεχίτωνις - - - - - i. 47, n.

LITTLE

- LITTLE ILIAD - - - - i. 178, n. ii. 161
Λογὸς ψιλός, not always prose - - - - i. 234
Λογός, how used by Aristotle, i. 236.—and by Plato, ibid. n.—
the speaking or dialogue part of Tragedy, 295. ii. 35.—its sense in Aristotle's analysis of diction in general, 258, 259 LONGINUS, of the inequalities of Sophocles, i. 303.—of the Odyssey, ii. 31, n. — illustrates an expression of Aristotle - - - - 359
LUCAN, αὐτὸς δὲ ἑλὼ ἀγωνίζεται - - - i. 182, n.
LUCIAN, of descriptive imitation, i. 14, n. 16, n.—of the pan-tomimic musical accompaniment, 221.—of the comic masks, 327, n.—of the dress of the ancient Tragic actors, ii. 340, n.—of the requisites of an accomplished panto-mimic dancer - - - - 428, n.
LUDIUS, of the Augustan age, the first landscape-painter upon record - - - - i. 53
Λύσις, dénouement, development - - - ii. 221, 223

M.

- MADNESS, enthusiasm, of every kind, frequently so denominated by the antients - - - ii. 210, and n.
MAFFEI, mistakes Aristotle - - - ii. 129, 130
MANDRABULUS, a Poem of Cleophon - - - i. 264
Μανία - - - - ii. 210
MANNERS, (or character,)—little of them in the Tragedy of a polished age - - - ii. 30, 31
——— Tragic, in what sense required by Aristotle to be good, and why; the rule intended as a compromise with Plato, ii. 131—136.—Aristotle's precept relative to their uniformity, how to be understood - - 141—149 Μανθάνω, i. 280—288.—a particular use of that verb, ii. 396
MARGITES - - - - i. 291
MARKLAND, his manner of defending Euripides against Aristotle's censure of his Iphigenia - - ii. 157 MARMONTEL, M. mistakes Aristotle, ii. 108, n. 134, n.— quoted - - - 201. 223
MARSYAS - - - - ii. 12, n.
MARVELLOUS, the dramatic - - - ii. 118, 119
MASKS, of the Old Comedy, caricaturas - - i. 327

- MASON, Mr. his excellence in imitative description of sounds, and particularly of musical sounds, i. 16—21.—example from his Caractacus, 17.—his idea of Tragic language, ii. 322, n.—a fine example from his Caractacus of the simpler language of Tragedy - - - - - 323
- MATRON, a famous Parodist - - - - - i. 265
- Μηχανή, ii. 158.—of the French opera, described by Rousseau - - - - - ibid.
- MEGALIOTE - - - - - ii. 276
- Μεγας - - - - - ii. 443
- Μεγας - - - - - ii. 102, n.
- MELODY, pathetic—its imitation of the tones and inflections of impassioned speech, i. 88—90.—such imitation particularly remarkable in Pergolesi, Purcell, and Handel, 89.—denied by Dr. Beattie - - - - - 88, n.
- MELOPOEIA, what - - - - - i. 117, n.
- Μίλον, used in three different musical senses - - - - - ii. 25, n.
- MENAGE - - - - - ii. 435, n.
- MENALIPPE, curious story of - - - - - i. 145, n.
- MENANDER, anecdote relative to the antient Chorus in a fragment of his - - - - - ii. 98
- MEROPE.—See DISCOVERY.
- Μισος, whether used by Aristotle to denote the circumflex accent - - - - - ii. 261—267
- Μεταβολή (of Tragedy,) what - - - - - ii. 74
- METAMORPHOSES, of Ovid—unity of that Poem, of what kind - - - - - i. 126, n.
- METAPHOR, Aristotle's principle of the pleasure we receive from it, i. 282.—various ways of guarding it, according to Aristotle - - - - - ii. 294, 295
- the analogical, or proportional, what; and how it differs from the metaphor à specie ad speciem, ii. 282—288.
- instances of it from Aristotle and Homer, 285, 286, and n.
- METASTASIO, his Estratto della Poetica d'Aristotile - i. 343
- MICHAEL ANGELO, how characterized by Sir Jos. Reynolds, ii. 381
- MILTON, a circumstance in his description of the sound of a bell, i. 20.—his excellence in imitative description of sounds, and particularly of musical sounds, 16—20.—his account of Aristotle's purgation of the passions by Tragedy, ii. 18.—prologue of his Comus, not more exceptionable than those of Euripides - - - - - 97
- MIMES,

- MIMES, of Sophron, i. 244—246.—not, probably, of the licentious cast of the Roman Mimes - - - 245
- MIMICRY, vocal, its antiquity, i. 61, n. 218.—two remarkable instances of it recorded by Homer - - - 63, n.
- MOLESTUS, φορτικός - - - - - ii. 420, n.
- MONRODDO, Lord, of the style of Cicero's orations compared with that of his rhetorical and philosophical works, ii. 38, n. [where add to the references, vol. iii. p. 256.]—of Homer's language - - - - - 309
- MONOLOGUES, of the Greek Tragedy, whether set to recitative, or air - - - - - ii. 27, 28
- MOOR, Professor, his erroneous explanation of Aristotle's καθαρσις - - - - - ii. 8, n.
- Μοῦσα*, species - - - - - i. 289
- Μουσῶν* - - - - - ii. 442
- MUSIC, its whole power reducible to three distinct effects, i. 66.—how far it can raise ideas, 67, 68. 73, n.—in what senses regarded as imitative by the moderns, 68.—and by the antients, 69.—ideas and language of the antients, on this subject, accounted for, 69—76.—its power over the passions, what, 72.—that power accurately expressed by Aristotle, 72, n.—does not depend on Poetry for its expression, 73, and n.—its separation from Poetry, by whom complained of, 74, n.—allowed by Aristotle to have expression without words, 74, n. 83.—its power of affecting resolved by some writers into a resemblance, more or less, to the tones of speech, 77. 88.—the analogy of its melody and rhythm to those of speech, 76, 77, 78, and n. 88.—impropriety of calling it an imitative art, according to the modern ideas of musical imitation, 91.—an antient division of it into three kinds - - - - - ii. 6
- MUSIC, Antient, its improvements, like those of the modern, treated as corruptions - - - - - i. 270, 271
- MUSIC, Dramatic, of the Greeks, strictly imitative - i. 76
- MUSIC, Instrumental, its power, i. 73, n.—a peculiar pleasure arising from the very indeterminateness of its expression, 74, n.—of the antients, 76.—in what sense considered by Aristotle as imitating manners and characters - 262, 263
- MUSIC, Pastoral, affecting by association, i. 224, and n. 225
- MUSIC, Vocal, almost solely cultivated by the Greeks, i. 73-76

N.

- NICOMACHUS, Painter - - - - i. 259
 NIGHTINGALE, her singing characterized by Homer - i. 21
 NOMES, not essentially distinguished from Dithyrambs by the objects of their imitation - - i. 267. 271, 272
 NOVELS, a good apologetical motto for them, ii. 242.—improbability often unreasonably objected to them, 242, 243—

O.

- OBJECTS, rural, in what manner usually described by the antients, i. 45, n.—examples from Theocritus, Virgil, and Plato - - - - ibid.
 OLYMPUS, his sacred Music - - - ii. 11, and n.
 Ὀμηδὸς - - - - ii. 391
 Ὀμηλὺς - - - - ii. 145, 146
 OPPIAN - - - - ii. 371
 ΟΨΙς - - - - i. 117, n.
 ORCHESTRA - - - - i. 159; n.
 Ὀργανοὺς, eodem sensu - - - ii. 408, 409

P.

- PAINTING, the three styles of it mentioned by Aristotle applicable to modern artists - - - i. 259, 260
 PAINTINGS, indecent, allowed in the temples of some heathen deities - - - - i. 256
 PANTOMIME, modern, Aristotelic analysis of it, ii. 120, 121
 ——— Roman - - - - ii. 122, n.
 PARABASIS, of the Greek Comedy - - - i. 330
 Παρασκευαζέειν - - - - i. 297
 Παραφυλαττεσθαι - - - - ii. 219
 Παρ' ἱπομνήν, (a consequenti,) the logical sophism so called, what, ii. 347.—how applied by Aristotle to Homer's management of fiction - - - ii. 347—352
 PARODE, of the Greek Chorus, to what kind of melody it was set, ii. 88—91.—a specimen of that melody from Dionysius Halicarn. 89—91.—of the Orestes of Euripides, ibid.—always sung by the Chorus either at, or soon after,

- after*, their first entrance upon the stage, 92. 95. 97.—was sometimes in the regular Lyric form, of Strophe and Antistrophe - - - - - 95, n.
- PARODIES, a favourite species of humour with the Athenians —specimens of them - - - - - ii. 264—266
- PASSION, the natural Poetry of - - - - - ii. 358
- PASSIONS, purgation of, by Tragedy, considered, ii. 3—19.—how far the frequent exercise of them, by works of imagination, may tend to moderate and refine them in real life - - - - - 15—18
- Παθῶν - - - - - ii. 81
- Παθημάτων, used by Aristotle as synonymous with Παθῶν, ii. 8, n.
- PATHETIC, - - - - - not attainable, either in Poetry or Painting, without close imitation of nature and real life - - - - - ii. 381, and n.
- PAUSON, a licentious Painter - - - - - i. 255
- PERGOLESI - - - - - i. 89
- Περικλῆς ἡλίου - - - - - i. 339
- Περικλῆς, Revolution, what - - - - - ii. 77.—confounded with the μεταβάσεις, or change of fortune, common to all Tragedy - - - - - 74—79
- Περικλῆς - - - - - ii. 841
- PETRARCH - - - - - ii. 291
- Φαυλός, Σπουδαίος - - - - - i. 276—278
- Φιλαλή - - - - - ii. 289
- Φιλανθρωπία - - - - - ii. 104—106. 240
- Φιλία ἰδίας - - - - - ii. 445
- PHILOXENUS, the Poem of his, alluded to by Aristotle, not a drama - - - - - i. 268
- PHORCIDES, The - - - - - i. 155, n.
- Φορτίς - - - - - ii. 420—425
- PICCOLOMINI, his version and commentary quoted, ii. 78. 139. 175. 190. 284. 289. 304. 312. 355.—an objection of his removed - - - - - 298
- PINDAR, instances of the dramatic in his Odes, i. 211, and n. —an Aristotelic passage of - - - - - ii. 355, 356
- PLATO, his description of the banks of the Ilissus, i. 45, n. —his idea of Poetic imitation, and in what it differed from that of Aristotle, 60.—his objections to it, 57, n. 63, n.—coincides with Fontenelle as to the want of meaning in instrumental Music, 74, n.—resolves musical expression into

- into resemblance of speech, 79.—his division of Poetry into three kinds, 210. 275.—uses λογος φιλος, in the sense of Aristotle, for words without music, 234, 235, n.—his idea of Poetry stripped of metre, 239, 240, and n.—his dialogues dramatic—sometimes acted, 247, and n.—attributes to Music the imitation of manners and characters, 261.—his idea of Comedy agrees with Aristotle's, 326, and n.—his objection to Tragedy, ii. 14, 15, and n.—calls Homer τραγῳδοποιος, and Epic Poetry, Tragic, 117, n.—his idea of the danger of exhibiting bad characters in Poetic imitation, 132. 135, 136, and n.—his character of Achilles, 167. 169.—familiar to him to speak of all enthusiasm as a species of madness, 210.—his account of Protagoras, 257.—his address to the Tragic Poets, 363.—in what manner he exposes the notion of Homer's accurate knowledge of arts and sciences, 364.—his whimsical argument to discredit Poetic imitation, 365, n.—continually reproaching the Poets with violation of truth, 373, 374. 411, 412.—his idea of the use of wine, 384.—a fine passage in him, vindicating the truth and immutability of God, 394.—of the immoral tendency of Homer's fictions, 412:—quoted, i. 216, n. 283. ii. 47. 64. 430. 445, 446, n.
- PLAUTUS, and TERENCE, their way of supplying the imperfect conclusions of their plays - - - ii. 45
- PLAUTUS, of Poetic fiction - - - ii. 356
- PLAYS, Chinese, their length - - - ii. 334, n.
- PLINY, the Elder, no landscape, or landscape-painter, mentioned in his account of Grecian artists and their works, i. 51, 52.—his account of Protogenes - - - 260
- PLINY, the Younger - - - i. 52, n. 53, n.
- PLUTARCH, of vocal mimicry, i. 62, n.—of the paintings of Dionysius the Colophonian, 259.—rails at musical corruption, 271. ii. 105.—of two different ways in which the Tragic Iambics were sung, ii. 21. 27.—of a musical revolution, 69.—his account of the theatrical effect of the discovery in the Cresphontes of Euripides, 130.—quoted, 26, n. 73. 433 - i. 248
- POET-PHILOSOPHERS - - - i. 248
- POETRY, imitation, in a strict sense, only when dramatic or personative, i. 31, 32.—to be considered as imitative only in four senses, 32.—whence, originally, denominated an imitative art, 57—65.—not read, in general, by the Greeks, but heard, 63, 64.—absurdity of supposing instruction to be its chief end, ii. 448.—its end, according to Aristotle, to give pleasure - - - 448, 449
- POETRY,

POETRY, Theological, of the Greeks, did not exclude fiction and invention - - - - i. 210, 211

POETS, Greek Tragic, obliged to conform to the taste of the people, i. 309, and n.—compared with Shakspeare, 311. ii. 30, 31.—originally actors also, 201. 255.—the great number of their productions - - - - 340, 341

Ποιῖσθαι τὴν μίμησιν, never used by Aristotle for μιμηθῆναι simply - - - - i. 251, 252

Πολιτικὴ, (H)—Πολιτικῶς, (O)—Πολιτικῶς - - ii. 36, 37

POLLUX, Jul. - - - a passage about the Syrinx, or Fistula Panis - - - - i. 220, 221, 222, and n.

POLUS, the Tragic actor - - - - ii. 434

POLYGNOTUS - - - - i. 255

POPE, his improvement of Homer's local and picturesque descriptions, i. 46—49, and n. ii. 387.—his Pastorals, i. 246

POTTER, Mr. his explanation of Aristotle's censure of the choral odes of Euripides, i. 158, n.—his opinion of a passage of Aristotle considered, ii. 149, 150.—of the discovery in the Choëphoræ of Æschylus - - - 189, n.

Προαίρεσις - - - - ii. 40, n.

Προβλημάτων, critical - - - - i. 188, n.

PROLOGUE, Greek, Aristotle's own account of it, i. 329, 330, and n.—the two different kinds of it expressed, and exemplified, by Terence, 332.—the narrative, 332.—its history and revolutions - - - - 333, 334

PROLOGUE, of the Greek Comedy, not different from that of Tragedy - - - - i. 329—331

— of the French Opera - - - - i. 334

PROSPECT, (or View,) no single Greek or Latin term equivalent to it - - - - i. 53, n.

Προσβολή - - - - i. 162, n.

Πρωταγωνιστής - - - - i. 295, 296

PROTAGORAS, singular history of him - - ii. 256, 257

PROTOGENES - - - - i. 260

Υἱὸς - - - - i. 234—236

PTOLEMY, of descriptive imitation - - - i. 13, n.

PURCELL - - - - i. 89

Q.

- QUINTILIAN, of ~~160~~ and ~~220~~, ii. 31, n.—his character of Euripides, 38.—of Zeuxis, 50.—illustrates a passage of Aristotle, 264, 265.—of the use of metaphors, 303.—of the diction of Euripides - - - - - 325, n.
- QUIXOTE, Don, his idea of translation - - - i. 281, n.

R.

- RACINE - - - - - ii. 212
- RAPHAEL - - - - - i. 259, 260
- Patrum* - - - - - ii. 162
- READING - - - not a general practice with the antients, as with us - - - i. 63—65, and n. ii. 18
- RECITATIVE, of the Greek Tragedy - - - ii. 26, 27
- RECITATIVE, Choral - - - - - ii. 89, n.
- REYNOLDS, Sir Joshua, quoted, i. 126, n. 258, n. 260; ii. 381.
—of individuality of imitation in painting - ii. 381, n.
- RHAPSODISTS, i. 65, n.—recited, or declaimed, only - ii. 432
- RHYTHM - - - - - i. 108, n.
- RICHARDSON, his Lovelace - - - i. 184, n. ii. 413
- RICHARDSON, the painter, i. 259, 260, and n.—describes the paintings of Mich. Angelo and Raphael in Aristotle's terms - - - - - 260
- RIDDLE, Greek - - - - - ii. 306
- RIDICULOUS, (The) - - - - - Aristotle's account of it defended - - - - - i. 320—327
- ROBOTELLI, his commentary quoted - - - ii. 129, n.
- RONDEAU - - - - - i. 283
- ROUSSEAU, misunderstood by Dr. Beattie, i. 7, n.—attributes all expression in Music to imitation, more or less perceptible, of speech, 77.—of the effect of passion in melodizing the voice, 78, n.—his inconsistency in asserting that harmony has no expression, 84, n.—his absurd idea of the theatrical declamation of the antients, ii. 19.—a Platonic writer, 135.—agrees with Plato in his objections to dramatic imitation - - - - - 136
- RUBENS - - - - - i. 260

S.

- SAMPSON AGONISTES - - - - - ii. 44
- SATAN of Milton, - - - his manners χρῆμα, according to Le Bossu - - - - - ii. 131
- SATYR, and SATIRE - - - - - i. 112, n.
- SATYRIC Drama, probably much shorter than the serious Tragedy - - - - - ii. 336, n.
- SCALIGER, J. C. of descriptive imitation, i. 12, n.—his notion of Poetic imitation - - - - - 41, n.
- SCALIGER, Joseph - - - - - ii. 182
- SCENERY, painted - - - - - i. 298
- SCENERY, dresses, music, &c. how Aristotle meant to extend to them his precepts respecting the manners, and improved imitation, of Tragedy - - - - - ii. 170—172
- Σχηματα λόγου, figures of speech, what Aristotle meant by them, ii. 250—255. 271—whence denominated σχήματα, or figures - - - - - 253
- SCULPTURE, of the antients, sometimes coloured, i. 216, n.
Συμμιον - - - - - ii. 178—180
- SENTENCE - - - no Greek word exactly synonymous to it - - - - - ii. 259, 260
- SENTENCES, significant, and assertive, a distinction of Aristotle's logic - - - - - ii. 259. 273
- SHAFTSBURY, Lord, his extravagant encomium on the Greek Tragedy, i. 310.—his misrepresentation of Aristotle, ibid.— his explanatory translation of a passage of Aristotle, ii. 52
- SHAKESPEARE, ii. 31. 50. 389.—neglected the conclusions of his plays, i. 156, n. ii. 45, and n.—his Caliban, i. 184, n.
ii. 351.—compared with the Greek Tragedians - i. 311
- SHERIDAN, Mr. his Critic - - - - - ii. 71
- SHUTTLES, antient - - - - - ii. 181, 182
- SIDNEY BIDDULPH - - - - - ii. 103
- SIFFLET de chaudronnier - - - - - i. 220
- SINGERS, of the modern Italian, and antient Greek, Opera— their similar influence over Poets and Composers, ii. 69, 70
- SINGING - - - - in what essentially different from speech - - - - - i. 78, n. ii. 93, n.
- Συληγετης - - - - - ii. 163, 164
- SOCRATES, not fond of the country, and his reason, i. 45, n.
- SOPHISM, Poetic, of Homer's fictions, explained, ii. 347—352
- SOPHISTS,

- SOPHISTS, their critical cavils - - - ii. 67
- SOPHOCLES, sometimes familiar and Tragi-comic, i. 301, 302. 307.—his scenes of altercation, how characterized by a Comic Poet, 302, n.—his prologues, 329.—his description of Oedipus tearing out his own eyes, ii. 83.—did not observe the French rule, “de ne pas ensanglanter le Theatre,” ii. 83.—his diction, 325.—in what sense he “drew men as they ought to be” - - - 374—380
- SOPHRON, i. 244.—imitated in an Idyl of Theocritus, 246
- SOUNDS, imitative description of - - - i. 15—21
- SPENSER - - - defects of a famous stanza in his Faery Queen - - - i. 19, n.
- Σπουδαῖοι, Φαυλοῖ - - - i. 276—278
- Σπουδαιωτικόν - - - ii. 61, 62
- STASIMON - - - in what sense “without anapæsts and trochees” - - - ii. 98, 99
- STEELE, Mr. his Essay on the Melody, &c. of Speech, i. 88, n.
- STHENELOS, insipidity of his language, how represented by Aristophanes - - - ii. 302, 303
- STRABO, of Homer's mixture of truth with fiction, ii. 348.—of the end of Poetic fiction - - - 372
- STROPHE and Antistrophe, set to the same melody, i. 269, n.
- SURPRISE, heightens passion - - - ii. 73, and n.
- SYRINX, or Pipe of Pan, i. 219, 220.—a South Sea instrument, 220.—two different instruments of this name mentioned by Jul. Pollux, 221, 222.—its tone characterized in the Homeric hymn to Mercury, 223.—doubts and conjectures concerning the instrument of this name mentioned by Aristotle - - - 220—225

T.

- TALE OF ALCINOUS - - - ii. 183—186
- Τειμαριον - - - ii. 178, 179
- TERENCE - - - i. 332. ii. 45
- TERROR—Aristotle seems to have thought it sometimes pushed to excess by the Greek Tragedians - ii. 127, 128
- TETRALOGIA, Tragic, the dramas that composed it performed on different festivals - - - ii. 332—336
- THEOCRITUS, his 15th Idyl, an admirable example of the close and natural delineation of common life, i. 246.—his description, Idyl 7, not of the landscape kind - 45, n.
- THEODORUS, the Tragic actor, his voice - - - i. 62, n.
- THEOPHRASTUS, of the effect of passion upon the melody of speech, i. 78, n.—of the dance called κερδαξ - 249, n.
- THOMSON,

- THOMSON, fills up a sketch of Virgil - ii. 292, 293
- Θογυβύρ - - - - - i. 287, n.
- TOUP, an emendation of his considered - ii. 425, 426
- TRACHINÆ of Sophocles - - - - i. 343
- TRAGEDY, not distinguished, originally, from Comedy, i. 308, 309, and n.—its end, according to Aristotle, ii. 127, 128.—its effect does not depend upon our ignorance of its catastrophe, 223.—its different species, 224.—not perfectly separated from Comedy in Aristotle's time, 233.—how much its effect depends on the fable, 248, and n.—Aristotle's preference of it to the Epic Poem considered - 451, 452
- TRAGEDY, French - - - i. 310, n. ii. 31. 82. 212. 301.
- TRAGEDY, Greek, the Lyric, exceeded the Dialogue, part of it, before Æschylus, i. 297.—its short dialogue, or σὺν-λογία, [See Jul. Pollux, iv. 17.] 300.—whether sung throughout, ii. 19—28.—what parts of it most likely to have been spoken, 24.—absurd to attribute to it the delicacy of the French stage, 82—85.—vain attempts of Dacier, Brumoy, &c. to divide it into five acts, 94.—its diction, 299—301. 321.—observations on the progress and improvements of its diction - - - 324—326
- TRAGEDY, the infernal - - - - ii. 233—235
- TRAGEDIES, Greek, not to be represented as correct and perfect models, i. 310.—their inequalities, and intermixture of low and comic dialogue, 300—309. ii. 233.—their popular and Tragi-comic origin may be traced in them, i. 308, 309. 332.—on what occasions their length might be limited by the magistrate, ii. 54. 337.—said to have been sometimes played by the hour-glass, 54.—conjecture as to the number performed in one day, and to one audience, at the Tragic contests, 331—341.—of very different lengths - - - 336, n.
- TRAGI-COMEDY, Greek - - - - i. 303—309
- TRANSLATION, Don Quixote's notion of it, i. 281, n.—sometimes unavoidably paraphrastical - - ii. 210, 211
- TROCHAIC tetrameter, how characterized by Aristotle, i. 249. 313.—though a satyric measure, does not occur in the only satyric drama extant - - - 312
- TZETZES, John - - - - - ii. 181

U. V.

- VALCKENAER, of the Mimes of Sophron - - i. 244
- VALERIUS MAXIMUS, his account of theatrical riots at Rome - - - - - i. 227
- VATRY, Abbé, his presumptive proof that the Greek Tragedy was sung throughout - - - ii. 22, 23
- Υδαρις - - - - - ii. 445
- VELLEIUS PATERCULUS, of Homer - - - ii. 330
- VERSE, the difference between it, and well measured prose, less with the antients than with us, i. 233, and n.—essential to Poetry in the general opinion of the antients, 238, 239. ii. 360, 361.—included in Aristotle's general idea of Poetry - - - i. 239. 289
- VICTORIUS, his commentary quoted, i. 38, n. ii. 57, 58, n. 230, 231. 370. et passim.
- VILLANY, arrocious, its effect in Tragedy, ii. 412, 413, and n.—Plato's and Rousseau's idea of the exhibition of it - - - ii. 136
- VIRGIL, i. 6, n. 22. 25, 26. 45, n. ii. 291, 292. 452, n.—his ear, i. 9, n.—his description of a plough, how far imitative description - - - 44, n.
- VIRTUE, (ἀρετή,) - - - its extensive signification in ancient writers - - - i. 277, 278, and n.
- ULYSSES - - - ridiculous story of, his feigned madness, i. 125, n.—his comic cowardice in the Ajax of Sophocles, 307.—was the subject of many dramas, comic, as well as tragic - - - ii. 193
- UNITIES, strict Dramatic, of time and place, have no authority from Aristotle, i. 337—341.—nor from the constant practice of the Greek Poets - - - 341—344
- UNITY of time, a remarkable instance of its violation in Sophocles - - - i. 343
- UNITY of Fable, Aristotle's distinction between that, and the unity of Hero, defended - - - ii. 54, 55
- VOLTAIRE, his censure of the Oedipus Tyrannus, as prolonged beyond its proper end, ii. 46.—mistakes Aristotle, 130.—Τραγῶδιδιδασκαλῶ - - - 255
- Υποθεβαι - - - - - ii. 409, 410

W.

- WARTON, Dr. - - - - i. 211, n. ii. 84, 85.—of a stanza in Spenser - - - - - i. 19, n.
 WARTON, Mr. - - - - his censure of the prologue of Comus - - - - - ii. 97, and n.
 WINCKELMAN, Abbé - - - - i. 51, n.
 WOMEN, Aristotle's character of them - - - ii. 137 WOOD, Preface to his Essay on the Orig. Genius of Homer, quoted - - - - - i. 54, n.
 WORDS, obsolete, to what class of Aristotle's poetic words they are to be referred - - - - ii. 316

X.

- XENOPHANES, fragments of, ii. 382, 383.—his idea of moderate drinking - - - - - 383
 XENOPHON - - - - - ii. 48, n.

Z.

- ZEUXIS - - - - - i. 200, n. ii. 50. 405, 406, and n.
 Ζεύξις - - - - - ii. 395

THE END.

London: Printed by Luke Hansard & Sons,
 near Lincoln's-Inn Fields.

1066 A
14
2

3 2044 058 116 617

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.

MAY 25 1974

3327557

CANCELLED

CANCELLED

JUL 3 - 1986
JUN 4 - 1986

1856940

8

